By a local Turnpike Act the trustees were directed to keep down the interest of mortgages, provide a sinking fund for the gradual payment of the principal of the mortgage debts, and apply the balance in repair and improvement of the road; by the General Turnpike Act mortgages in possession were directed to apply the tolls, pari passu, for the benefit of the mortgages generally. Some new mortgages had been granted since the General Turnpike Act.—Held, upon demurrer to a bill filed by the trustees against mortgages in possession, whose securities were subsequent to the General Turnpike Act, that some of the prior mortgages under the local Act were necessary parties to the suit, because a question would be raised, at the hearing of the cause, whether a right to be first paid, which was given to them under the local Act, had not been abrogated by the General Turnpike Act.

Where a demurrer has been allowed on the ground of want of parties, it seems to be improper to obtain an order to amend generally.

The bill in this suit was filed by the plaintiff on behalf of himself and all other the trustees appointed under and by virtue of an Act made and passed in the 2nd year of Geo. 4, entitled "An Act for more effectually repairing and improving the Road leading from Hinwell vent, in the Parish of Tothurst, in the county of Sussex, to the Town and Port of Hastings," against the defendants, who, as mortgagees, had taken possession of the tolls and applied them, according to the directions of the General Turnpike Act, in disregard of the provisions of the local act, count, and refused to render to the trustees any authenticated account of their application of the tolls.

The local Act, 2 Geo. 4, after authorising the collection of certain tolls, and having vested all moneys which should arise therefrom in the trustees for the time being, directed the particular application of the tolls; and the local Act then provided, that if any mortgagee of the tolls should seek to obtain possession of the toll-gates and toll-houses, he might do so by action of ejectment, but such mortgagee in possession "should not apply the tolls which might be received by him to his or their own exclusive benefit, but to the use and benefit and in liquidation of the interest (but not the principal) due to all the mortgagees, pari passu, and in proportion to the amount of the interest which might be due to them."

By the General Turnpike Act (3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 47), it is enacted, "That every mortgagee in possession of any toll-gate or bar on any turnpike-road, or of any lands or tenements, the rents and profits whereof were appropriated to the repairs of any part of any turnpike road, should, within twenty-one days after he should have received notice in writing from the trustees or commissioners, render an exact account in writing to such trustees or commissioners, or to such person as they should appoint, of all moneys received by such mortgagee, or by any person for his use, or by his authority." By a mortgage dated the 23rd day of March, 1838, five of the trustees mortgaged the tolls to the defendants for 800*l.* with interest at 5*l.* per cent. The defendants soon afterwards procured the assignment to them of three other mortgages for 100*l.* previously granted; and in April, 1840, they recovered possession of the toll-gates and toll-houses, and have ever since received the tolls. The bill stated that the tolls had been more than sufficient to pay the interest on all subsisting mortgages, and that a considerable surplus had accumulated in the hands of the mortgagees which ought to have been paid to the trustees of the local Act. By the local Turnpike Act, sect. 45, the trustees were directed to create a sinking fund by the payment of a sum not exceeding 50*l.* a-year from the passing of the Act (Sept. 1821), for the gradual payment of the principal sums then already or thereafter to be borrowed, such payment to be made rateably or by lot amongst the creditors; and after payment of all the principal moneys to existing creditors, then in payment of an equal amount of the principal money which, from and after the commencement of the said Act, should be borrowed upon the security of the tolls; and it was also enacted (sect. 46), that all moneys raised by the local Acts should be applied, first, in payment of the expenses of renewing the Act; secondly, in paying all arrears of interest on any sum of money which had been then already borrowed on the credit of the local Acts, and also the interest which should become due in respect of money then already due, or which should thereafter be borrowed on security of the tolls; thirdly, in providing for the sinking fund; fourthly, in paying a local charge; and, lastly, in making, erecting, and keeping in repair the toll-gates, &c. and in widening, improving, repairing, and preserving the said road. The bill then set out a correspondence between the trustees and the defendants in consequence of a notice, of the 9th of February, 1844, by the former required the latter, to render an account to Wm. Weller, of Battle, saddler, which resulted in a refusal on the part of the defendants so to account. "The bill prayed that the defendants might be decreed to account to the plaintiff, and the other trustees acting in the execution of the local Act, for all moneys received and disbursed by them as mortgagees, and to produce the vouchers and other documents necessary for the verification of such account; and that the accounts might be taken under the direction of the Court, and the balance found due might be paid to the plaintiff, or to the treasurer of the road.

To this bill the defendants demurred for want of equity and want of parties, and the Vice-Chancellor allowed the demurrer for want of parties, and gave the plaintiff leave to amend.

The plaintiff appealed from that decision.

James Parker and Lewis, for the appeal, contended that although the effect of the General Turnpike Acts (3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 4; 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 88; and 9 Geo. 4, c. 77, s. 19) is to incorporate all the provisions of the local and particular Acts, and therefore that the provisions of the local Act, if inconsistent with the general Acts, must be construed to be superseded pro tanto, yet in this case the provisions of the local Act are not inconsistent with the general Act. They mentioned and referred to The King v. The Trustees of the Northleach and Witney Roads, 5 Barn. & Adol. 978; and Pearce v. Morrice, 2 Adol. & Ellis, 84; that the defendants, and all others who had lent their money subsequently, did so with full knowledge of the provisions of the local Act; that so long as the trustees kept down the interest on the mortgages, and appropriated the annual sum directed by the Act as a sinking fund, the mortgagees would have no right to enforce the payment of their principal by ejectment.

Wakefield and Wright, for the defendants, contended that the 4th and 47th sections of the General Turnpike Act (3 Geo. 4) enabled mortgagees in possession of tolls to retain possession until the whole of the principal and interest had been fully paid. The 49th section, after declaring that a mortgagee may maintain an ejectment upon his own demise without uniting the other mortgagees therein, declares that he should not apply the tolls to his own exclusive use, but for the use and benefit of all the mortgagees, pari passu, and in proportion to the several sums which may be due to them as such mortgagees. The trustees ought to have sued in the name of their clerk or treasurer, or of one of their trustees, but it was improper to make one trustee a plaintiff on behalf of himself and the others. The question, whether the general Act destroyed the priority the old creditors had under the local Act, will be raised at the hearing, and therefore both classes of creditors, or some of them to represent each class, ought to be parties. The defendants, as mortgagees in possession, are bound to account to all the mortgagees, and therefore they are entitled to have some of both classes present. None of them are represented by the plaintiff.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—How does it appear on this bill that there are other creditors?

Wakefield referred to various other clauses of the local Act set out in the bill.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The order allowing the demurrer is general, and the permission to amend is also general. The permission to amend should have been confined to the particular object intended.

Parker.—No objection is taken on that ground. Wright read various clauses of the General Turnpike Act.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Is there any part of the general Act which directs the application of tolls in the hands of the mortgagees?

Wright.—By the 44th section the tolls are directed to be applied, not in liquidation of interest, but to interest and principal.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Does the Act direct what the mortgagees are to do with the tolls, after all interest and principal has been paid?

Wright.—No. They are to account for the surplus to the trustees.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It appears to me that the other mortgagees have nothing to do with the account. They may file a bill, and the question turns upon the provisions of the Act, as to the objection of want of parties.

Parker, in reply, insisted that the directions for suits by the trustees in the local Act were in substance the same as those of the general Act. The liberty to amend is not confined to adding parties; the latter practice has been when leave has been given to amend, by adding parties, that the plaintiff should obtain another order of course to amend generally.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—That can't be so, because, by the allowance of the demurrer, the cause is out of court, unless leave is given to amend. There is only one demurrer, though for several causes.

Parker.—The other mortgagees have no interest in the account sought to be taken, because it is only the account of the balance after payment of the interest to the mortgagee, for which the bill prays.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I assume for the present purpose that the mortgagees in possession have nothing to do beyond the payment of the interest, as under the local Act. The local Act, then, is repealed, so far as it is inconsistent with the general Act; and it is unnecessary for me to come to any decision how the rights of the absent parties may be affected. The only question for me to decide on this demurrer is, whether the other mortgagees are necessary parties. I find the 47th, 48th, and 49th sections of the general Act directly attaches to the rights of mortgagees. The 47th applies to all mortgagees, whether under the local or the general Act. So in the 48th section the mortgagees there referred to are, beyond all doubt, mortgagees made before as well as since the passing of the general Act. The 49th also applies to all mortgages; there is no distinction made, but mortgages generally are mentioned. [The LORD CHANCELLOR read the section.] There can be no doubt that section applies to principal as well as interest. I am asked by the plaintiff to decide on the point in their absence. He assumes the point so clear, that he seeks to take an account in their absence. I cannot resolve the effect of these clauses to be that they have no interest is so clear, that I will decide in their absence. No objection has been taken on the point of form. I affirm the Vice-Chancellor's order with costs. The plaintiff may have three weeks time to amend.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

July 2 and 6.

GREEN v. PERTWEE.

Will.—Construction—Residue.

The general operation of the word "residue," as used in a will, may be restricted by the sense in which the testator uses it.

The word "residue" does not in all cases include that which is undisposed of by a will; a lapsed share of a residue does not accrue in augmentation of the residue, but goes to the next of kin.

Thomas Cooper, by his will dated in 1839, devised all his real estate to trustees therein named, to sell, and hold the produce thereof, together with the rents and profits, until the sale, upon trust for his executors therein named, to be held and applied by them as personal estate to the same uses as he afterwards directed in respect to his personal estate, and then bequeathed to his executors therein named all his moneys, securities for money, household goods, and farming stock, all other his personal estate whatsoever and wheresoever, upon trust, as soon as convenient after his decease to convert the same into money, and to stand possessed of the whole produce thereof, and the proceeds of the sale of his real estates, upon trust to pay all his just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies given therein, or in any after executed codicil to his said will, and after payment thereof, to divide the residue of the produce of his real and personal estate into ten equal shares or parts, and pay the same to the several persons in his said will named; provided always, and he declared that in case the residue should be found to exceed the sum of 10,000*l.* then, and in that case, he directed that only the sum of 10,000*l.* part of his residue, should be divided into ten parts or shares, and paid to the several persons therein-before named to take shares in the residue of his estate and effects; and the said testator directed the surplus of the said residue, after payment of the said sum of 10,000*l.* in ten shares, should be equally divided amongst his nephews and nieces who should attain the age of twenty-one years, share and share alike, and appointed the same parties trustees and executors of his will. The testator died in 1842, and left both real and personal estates, which were converted into money, and after all debts, funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies were paid, produced a residue exceeding the sum of 10,000*l.* One of the legatees, named in the will to be paid one of the ten shares, died in the lifetime of the testator, whereby 1,000*l.* lapsed, and a question arose after the death of the testator as to the disposal of that share between the heirs-at-law, the next of kin, and the nephews and nieces of the testator, in consequence of which the nephews and nieces filed the present bill against the trustees and executors, and other parties claiming an interest in the share.

The defendants filed a demurrer.

Wood and Bacon, for the heir-at-law, cited Schrymsher v. Northcote, 1 Swanst. 566; Lloyd v. Lloyd, 4 Beav. 231; Attorney-General v. Johnston, 2 Ambl. 577; Davers v. Davers, 3 P. Wms. 40.

Anderdon and Walpole, for the next of kin, cited Harris v. Davis, 1 Coll. Ch. C. 416; Edom v. Appleford, 10 Sim. 274.

Romilly and Hallett, for the plaintiffs, cited Bland v. Lamb, 1 Jac. & Walk. 402; Leake v. Robinson, 2 Meriv. 363.

Humphrey, for the trustees and executors.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The question here arises upon the effect to be given to the word "residue," as used in the latter part of this will, whether it is to be held to include the general residue of the testator's estate, or only the excess, if any, after deducting the sum of 10,000*l.*: the term in its general meaning comprehends everything left undisposed of by the will, but that general meaning may be restricted by the sense in which the testator uses the term, and when it is used in its restricted sense, the Court is bound to give it effect. In this case the testator appears to have used it in both senses: thus, in the beginning of his will he evidently means it to include the general residue of his estate, but in the event of his residue exceeding the sum of 10,000*l.* he restricts the operation of it to the excess of the residue above that amount, and in such a manner as to confine the operation of the term "residue" to the excess, and nothing else; for, under that bequest, had the general residuary bequest not have exceeded the sum of 10,000*l.* his nephews and nieces would have taken nothing, although all the legatees of the shares into which the 10,000*l.* was divided had died in the lifetime of the testator. The claim of the plaintiffs to this lapsed share must, therefore, be answered in the negative; and as it is clear from all the authorities that a part of the residue of which the disposition fails will not accrue in augmentation of the remaining parts, as a residue of a residue, but instead of resuming the nature of a residue, it devolves as undisposed of, this share which has lapsed must be held to have been undisposed of by the will, and the costs must be paid out of this share.

BURNEY v. ST. BARBE.

Will—Construction—Election.

A general devise of all the testator's lands upon trusts, amongst others, for the benefit of his son and heir-at-law, and it afterwards is accidentally discovered that some of the lands of which the testator supposed himself tenant in fee, he was only tenant in tail; and the same, on his death, descended, to his son and heir the latter is not bound to make his election, notwithstanding he gets more than the testator apparently intended him to have.

John Burney, by his will, dated the 18th of September, 1824, "devised all his manors, messuages, farms, lands, tenements, tithes, and hereditaments, whereof he had any power to dispose, and also all the rest, residue, and remainder of his goods, chattels, ready money, and all other his personal estate and effects wheresoever, unto Robert Smith and Charles St. Barbe, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust, to pay thereout, by sale or mortgage, all his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies, bequeathed by his will; and in case any surplus should remain unsold, he bequeathed such surplus to the use of his son, John Burney, and his assigns, for life, with remainder to the use of the first or other son of the said John Burney, in tail male, with remainders over, as in his will mentioned. The testator died on the 11th of September, 1832, without revoking his said will, which was duly proved by the said Charles St. Barbe and Francis Burney, named executors therein. The testator was at the time of his death seised of real estates in the county of Southampton, called respectively the Milton Estate, the Great Tithes of the Milton Estate, the Barton Estate, and a copyhold estate, held of the manor of Fern Hill, in the parish of Milton. The personal estate of the testator was insufficient for the payment of his debts and legacies; and the trustees, instead of selling the real estates, raised money by mortgaging the whole of the real estates for the payment of the debts and legacies. A deed was afterwards found, dated in 1691, by which the Barton estate had been entailed on an ancestor of the testator, and that the entail had never been barred; consequently, the testator being only tenant in tail of the Barton estate, it did not pass by his will—it descended to the present plaintiff under the entail; and he therefore filed the present suit to have testator's estate administered under the decree of the Court, and to have the Barton estate freed from the mortgages which had been charged upon it by the trustees of the executor's will. The cause came on for hearing, and was referred to the Master to make the usual inquiries and take the accounts. The Master by his report, amongst other facts, found those above stated, when the cause came on upon further directions.

Ansley, for some of the defendants, contended that the plaintiff should be put to his election, inasmuch as the testator, in making the provision he did in his will in his favour, acted under the supposition that the Barton estate was his own, in fee, and continued to entertain that mistake until his death; that it was by mere accident it was discovered that the estate was subject to the entail; that the plaintiff and all others had dealt with the estate according to the directions in the will until the deed had been discovered; and cited Abby v. Gordon, 3 Russ. 278; Judd v. Pratt, 13 Ves. 168; Druce v. Dennison, 6 Ves. 399; Stratton v. Best, 1 Ves. jun. 285.

Romilly appeared for the plaintiff, and contended that as no mention or reference was made in the will by the testator to the Barton estate, the plaintiff could not be put to his election.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This is no case of election. I know of no case which goes the length of deciding that a devise of "all my property" includes an estate tail; if it had stopped there, would the estate tail have passed? But then it is said there is a reservation of the life estate, and that shews the testator meant no other reservation. So it does, but out of what estate? The Milton estate. I do not think this is any case for election.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Saturday, June 6.

RAYNER v. JONES.

An action was commenced against M. J. (the defendant), who was then a widow, but who, pending proceedings in the action, married again; the plaintiff nevertheless proceeded with the action, signed judgment against the defendant by her former name of M. J. and on this judgment sued out a writ of ca. sa. against her alone. A judge at chambers having upon this state of facts ordered her discharge, the Court made absolute a rule for discharging this order, and directing the sheriff to re-take the defendant.

It has not been thought necessary to report at length the argument in this case, because the facts, as observed by the Lord Chief Baron at the commencement of the judgment, infra, are very simple, and these, as well as the grounds upon which the Court proceeded, are fully stated therein.

JUDGMENT.

POLLOCK, C.B. now (June 6) delivered the judgment of the Court as follows:—In this case my brother Rolfe having made an order for discharging the defendant, a married woman, out of custody, she having been taken in execution, a rule was obtained by Mr. Williams, for the plaintiff, calling on the defendant to shew cause why the order should not be discharged. The case was argued last Term, and there being no authority decisive of the point, we have considered our judgment. The facts are very simple. The plaintiff sued the defendant Margaret Jones in March 1845, when she was a widow. In April, 1845, she married a second husband named Davies. The plaintiff took no notice of this, but proceeded in the action, and on the 31st of May signed judgment against the defendant by her former name of Margaret Jones, and on this judgment sued out a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum against her alone. It is admitted that the defendant has no separate property, but the question is, whether Mr. Baron Rolfe, under these circumstances, did right in ordering her to be discharged. The whole practice of discharging married women who are in lawful custody upon execution against the person is of very recent date; and it certainly appears to us to rest on no principle whatever. The writ is the right of the plaintiff, as the result of his judgment. It is admitted that, under such a writ, the sheriff is bound to take the party against whom the writ is directed, whether she be under coverture or not. He is bound to do so not only where she is sued with her husband, but also where, as in this case, she is sued alone as a feme sole. (Dowley v. White, Cro. James, 323.) Since, then, the plaintiff has a right to take a feme covert and detain her in satisfaction of a debt, it would seem, on all principles of law, that the Court cannot interfere to discharge her out of custody, unless there be some special circumstances requiring the Court to interfere and exercise its jurisdiction to prevent the plaintiff from availing himself of his legal right; and certainly in modern times the Court, where judgment has been recovered against husband and wife, and both have been taken in execution, have assumed the right of discharging the wife out of custody if she has no separate property, and on no other ground; for it would be hard to detain in custody a defendant who cannot by law acquire property wherewith to satisfy the debt. This, it must be admitted, is rather moulding the law according to particular circumstances than administering it. At the same time, the practice has prevailed so long in a judgment against husband and wife, that in such a case we should not probably feel ourselves justified in overruling what must be treated as established law. But in the case of a rightful judgment against a married woman alone, there is no decided case authorizing the Court to discharge her when she has been taken upon a capias ad satisfaciendum; and there is certainly a distinction between that case and the case of a judgment against husband and wife. In the former case the discharge of the wife deprives the plaintiff of all possible chance of recovering the debt; whereas in the latter case he has still the husband to whom he may resort. The distinction is not indeed at all satisfactory. There seems to be no more principle to warrant the Court in depriving the plaintiff of part of his legal right than in depriving him of the whole; but still it may be said that in this case the practical injustice is less than in the other; and, therefore, although finding the practice established in the case of a judgment against both husband and wife, we might not feel justified in refusing to act according to that practice; yet, seeing no principle to warrant its being admitted, and that no case can be found in which a married woman has been discharged where she has been the sole defendant, and been taken under a capias ad satisfaciendum, we do not feel warranted in discharging her in this case, and so altogether depriving the plaintiff of the fruits of his judgment. The consequence is, that the rule for discharging my brother Rolfe's order, and directing the sheriff to re-take the defendant, must be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

DEES v. THE GREAT NORTH OF ENGLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

An award ordered, amongst other things, that the costs of the reference should be paid by the parties thereto in a certain proportion, viz. three-fourths by the defendant, and one-fourth by the plaintiff. In order to take up the award the plaintiff paid the whole of the costs, and the plaintiff's attorney advanced the money for the purpose of taking up the award.—Held, that the sum of money so advanced by the plaintiff's attorney was a sum awarded, for which the attorney had a lien upon the whole costs of the reference.

This case was argued last Easter Term (May 8) by Jos. Addison, for the defendants, and Borlill, for the plaintiff. The only point in the case worth reporting will be found clearly set forth in the judgment of the Court as delivered at the sittings after last Term, July 4.

JUDGMENT.

PARKE, B.—In this case the Court reserved for consideration one question, and on that question the rule will turn. It was an application to set off costs, and the attorney claimed a lien upon the costs for some sums of money that were awarded. The award made was, I think, in favour of the plaintiff (see Law T. May 2), and a sum was awarded, and the costs of the reference and of submitting it to the arbitrator were awarded to be paid, three-fourths by the defendants and one-fourth by the plaintiff. In order to take up the award, the plaintiff paid the whole of the costs, and the attorney advanced money for the purpose of taking up the award. Then he calls upon the defendant to pay the amount of the sum awarded, and also the amount of these costs; and upon an application to set off the costs of some other proceedings against these costs, the point on which the Court entertained a doubt, and took time to consider, was whether the sum of money which was advanced by the plaintiff's attorney was a sum awarded, and for which the attorney had a lien on the whole costs of the reference. The Court think it is to be considered as a sum of money awarded. There is no doubt that a sum of money which is by the award directed to be paid, is a sum upon which the attorney has a lien for costs; and the sum of money which is paid, whether it is paid by the attorney or by the party, makes no difference. It must be considered that the award was of a sum for which an attachment would be granted. It was decided by the Common Pleas, in the time of Chief Justice Eyre, that a plaintiff can enforce payment of a sum awarded by attachment, which must be only on the principle that the sum of money is impliedly an award. The award here directs three-fourths to be paid by one party and one-fourth by the other; and if the whole be paid by one party, the other shall reimburse him the sum he is directed to pay. Consequently, we think, whether the sum is paid by the plaintiff himself, or advanced by the attorney on account of the plaintiff, it makes no difference. The sum so directed to be paid is a sum awarded. The attorney has a lien, not only on the sum expressly awarded, but on that impliedly awarded for the costs of the reference; consequently, the set-off in this case cannot take place with regard to the sum of money paid to take up the award, except on the terms that the attorney's lien on the same for the costs of the reference shall be satisfied. I believe that will dispose of the rule. I rather think it will follow that the rule is to be made absolute; I am not sure.

Bovill.—I understood your lordship to say the award was in favour of the plaintiff.

PARKER, B.—Whatever sum was paid in order to take up the award it must be considered as money awarded, and upon that sum the attorney has a lien for his costs. We will model the rule accordingly. I have not got the rule before me. The result, I think, will be, that the rule will be made absolute in its terms. The sum of money which is paid to take up the award, is a sum of money awarded, for which the attorney has a lien, and is in the condition precisely of a sum of money expressly by the award directed to be paid. We disposed of the whole case, except the question that occurred to the Court at the time, that it was only money paid, and that the defendant was liable to reimburse any money paid. Mr. Bovill cited a case in the Court of Common Pleas, and upon the authority of that case we consider it is money awarded. That case is Hicks v. Richardson, 1 Bos. & P. 98.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

ERROR FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH.

(Before TINDAL, C.J., CRESSWELL, MAULE, and ELLIS, JJ., POLLOCK, C. B., PARKER and ROLFE, B..)

BYNNER v. THE QUEEN.

Argued Feb. 2 and 3, and May 9. Decided June 13. On scire facias to repeal letters patent, the Court of Queen's Bench gave judgment that the said letters patent should be "revoked, cancelled, vacated, disallowed, annulled, void, and invalid, and be altogether had and held for nothing; and also that the enrolment thereof be cancelled, quashed and annulled, and that the said letters patent be restored into her said Majesty's Court of Chancery, at Westminster aforesaid, there to be cancelled." Held, that the Court of Queen's Bench had power to pronounce this judgment, and that it was not necessary that the record sent into the Queen's Bench should be returned with the postea into the Court of Chancery, for the purpose of enabling such last-mentioned Court to give judgment: for that, although the letters patent, with the enrolment thereof, which were adjudged to be cancelled, still remained in Chancery, yet the act of cancellation is the mere ministerial act of the officer of the Court of Chancery, done in pursuance of the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench.

This was a writ of error from the Court of Queen's Bench, upon a judgment of that Court on a scire facias to repeal letters patent. The material part of the record was as follows:—"England, to wit,—Be it remembered that the Right Hon. John Singleton, Baron Lyndhurst, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, on, &c. before our sovereign lady the Queen, at Westminster, hath delivered here into court, with his own proper hand, a transcript of a record had before our said lady the Queen in her Chancery in these words." [The writ of scire facias was then set out, which recited certain letters patent, granted to Jeremiah Bynner, for certain improvements in the manufacture of lamps, containing the usual proviso for making them void in case the said grant was contrary to law, or prejudicial or inconvenient in general, or the said invention was not new.] This recital concluded thus:—"As by the said letters patent, enrolled in our said Court of Chancery, amongst other things, will more fully and at large appear." The scire facias then set out several counts or issues, "by means of which said several premises the said letters patent, so as aforesaid granted to the said J. B. are and ought to be void and of no effect in law." The writ then called upon the said J. B. "that he be before us in our Chancery, on, &c. wheresoever it shall then be, to shew cause, if he hath or knoweth of anything to say, for himself, why the said letters patent so granted to him as aforesaid, and the enrolment of the same, for the reasons aforesaid, ought not to be cancelled, vacated, and disallowed, and those letters patent restored into our said Chancery, there to be cancelled, and further to do and receive those things which our said Chancery shall consider in this behalf." The record then set forth the return of the sheriff to the writ of non est inventus: "And the said J. B. being solemnly demanded, by, &c. his attorney, comes, whereupon Sir Frederick Pollock, Knight, Attorney-General for our said lady the Queen, who prosecutes for our said lady the Queen in this behalf, being present here in court in his proper person, prays, that the said letters patent so granted to the said J. B. as aforesaid, and the enrolment of the same, may be cancelled, vacated, and disallowed, and the said letters patent restored into her said Majesty's Chancery, there to be cancelled; and the said J. B. says, &c. [setting out several pleas concluding to the country, whereupon issues are joined]. Therefore, to try the several issues above joined, the sheriff is commanded that he cause to come before our said lady the Queen, on, &c. wheresoever she shall then be in England, twelve, &c. [setting out the causæ], at which time, to wit, on, &c. before our said lady the Queen, at Westminster, come, &c. [setting out the distinguis juratores]; at which time, to wit, on, &c. [setting out the postea]. Whereupon, all and singular the premises being seen and fully understood by the Court of our said lady the Queen, before the Queen herself, now here, and mature deliberation being thereupon had, it is considered by the same Court here that the said letters patent of our said lady the Queen, so granted to the said J. B. as aforesaid, be revoked, cancelled, vacated, disallowed, annulled, void, and invalid, and be altogether had and held for nothing; and also that the enrolment thereof be cancelled, quashed, and annulled, and that the said letters patent be restored into her said Majesty's Court of Chancery, at Westminster aforesaid, there to be cancelled. And the tenor of the said record so delivered by the said Lord High Chancellor into the said court of our said lady the Queen, before the Queen herself, and of all things had thereupon in the same court of our said lady the Queen, before the Queen herself, is remanded into the said Chancery of our said lady the Queen." The errors assigned were in substance that, the Court of Queen's Bench ought not to have given judgment upon this record, that the letters patent and enrolment should be cancelled; but that the record ought to have been returned and remanded into the Court of Chancery, that judgment might there be given upon the record by that Court, which alone had authority to pronounce the judgment. Joinder in error.

Webster, for the plaintiff in error.—It is submitted on behalf of the plaintiff in error that the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench was erroneous, inasmuch as that Court had no power to pronounce final judgment, annulling the letters patent, and cancelling the enrolment thereof. The proper course would have been to have sent back the record after verdict into the Court of Chancery, in order that final judgment might there be given and the letters patent be cancelled. Jefferson v. Morton, 2 Wms. Saunders, 6th edit. 22, whil no doubt be relied upon by the defendant in error; the marginal note to that case is as follows:—"To a scire facias in Chancery on a recognizance acknowledged there against the tenants of the consour, some of the defendants plead to issue, and the others demur; the record is delivered by the Chancellor to the Court of King's Bench for the purpose of trying the issue, the whole record must come to the Court of King's Bench, which shall give judgment both on the verdict and demurrer, and the record shall not be sent back into Chancery." Now it may be conceded on behalf of the plaintiff in error, that this case is good law, but, then it is not applicable in the case of a scire facias to repeal letters patent, because the letters patent are enrolled in Chancery, and consequently, if the proceedings were to remain in the Court of Queen's Bench, the enrolment could not be cancelled. In order to cancel the enrolment the record must first be remanded into Chancery, and this shews that the case just cited cannot apply. The fact is, that only a transcript of the record is sent into the Court of Queen's Bench, the record itself remaining in Chancery, and the correct practice is to return this transcript together with the postea into the Court of Chancery, in order that the enrolment of the letters patent may be cancelled by the Chancellor, who alone has the power to cancel them. It is believed that there are only three cases to be found in which proceedings have been taken after verdict on a scire facias to repeal letter patent; the first is the case of Reg. v. Nickels, Hindmarsh, Pat. 419, 627 (b), in which judgment was given in the Court of Chancery, and a writ of error was brought upon that judgment, not to the Court of Exchequer Chamber, as in this instance, but to the House of Lords. Then there is the case of Reg. v. Bynner, now before the Court, and lastly, that of Reg. v. Newton, Hindmarsh, Pat. 427, in which likewise judgment was given in the Court of Chancery, and the Lord Chancellor, assisted by the Master of the Rolls, cancelled the letters patent. The first and last of these cases are clearly authorities in favour of the plaintiff in error, and shew that the record ought to be remanded into Chancery for final judgment. There are other arguments in favour of the position now contended for; for instance, in order to obtain the fiat of the Attorney-General, which is necessary to authorise the issuing of the writ of scire facias, the prosecutor must give security, by bond, to the chief clerk of the Petty Bag Office, the object of which is to prevent patentees from being vexatiously harassed by actions of scire facias, in which they could not recover costs against the prosecutor. The condition of the bond, therefore, is, that if the defendant obtains a verdict and judgment in the action, the prosecutor shall pay him the amount of his costs after taxation as between attorney and client. Now this bond remains in the Petty Bag Office even after the record has been removed into the Queen's Bench, and even if that Court could give a final judgment, it is clear that it could in no way deal with the bond so given by the prosecutor, or with any proceedings which might arise out of it. Then, if the Court of Queen's Bench can legally give the judgment which they have assumed to give in this case, the patentee would be prevented from entering a disclaimer under the statute 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 83, s. 1, after such judgment, because the Chancellor would act in conformity with that judgment; whereas, if it be true that the Chancellor alone has power to cancel letters patent, a disclaimer might be entered after the verdict in the Court of Queen's Bench as to that part of the title of the invention or of the specification which could not be sustained. The point now before the Court is new, and could not have been raised prior to the statute just referred to, because formerly the proceedings to repeal letters patent virtually terminated with the verdict, the patentee having no power of amending in case of an adverse verdict; it is, therefore, very important to determine until what period the patentee can disclaim, and by so doing cure a defect in the original specification which would otherwise be fatal. It is provided by section 2 of the statute 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 83, that, even after verdict, the patentee, who has been found thereby not to have been the true inventor, may apply on petition to the Queen in Council to confirm the letters patent, and that the matter of such petition shall be heard before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; and it is further provided, that such committee may, after examining the said matter, report to her Majesty their opinion that the letters patent ought to be confirmed, or that new letters patent ought to be granted, and that the prayer of the petition should be granted, in which case her Majesty may, if she shall think fit, grant such prayer. Now, prior to this statute, the Chancellor had, it is conceived, a similar power, viz. to decline to cancel letters patent although the issues had been found against the patentee; but if the Court of Queen's Bench had jurisdiction to pronounce judgment in the form here adopted, the Chancellor would, in every such case, be deprived of his discretionary power, and a great hardship would thus be inflicted on the patentee. On the whole, it is submitted that the case of Jefferson v. Morton only applies where the entire cause, or "the whole record," comes into the Queen's Bench, and where that Court consequently can so act that nothing remains subsequently to be done. It is further submitted that, according to the authorities, the judgment of the Court below in this case was erroneous. He also cited Richardson's Chancery Pr. 394; 2 Wms. Weld*, 6 Mod. 229; Lilly, Entries, 419, where is given the form of getting in a patent in order to cancel the enrolment; Rex v. Butler, 3 Lev. 220. He likewise referred to the forms of writs of scire facias given in Hindmarsh on Patents, to the recent cases reported in the same work of Reg. v. Newton and Reg. v. Nickels, and to the stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 20, as shewing that, in fact, the record itself is not sent from the Court of Chancery into the Court of Queen's Bench; but that only the tenor of the record is so sent; that is to say, only a sufficient statement of what occurred in Chancery to enable the Queen's Bench to dispose of the issues sent for trial. He also cited the above authorities to shew what was the practice in the Petty Bag Office, and what powers are delegated by the Court of Chancery to the Queen's Bench.

Hugh Hill, for the defendant in error.—The Court of Queen's Bench had power to give judgment upon this record; and the form here used is identical with that in Jefferson v. Morton. It is not necessary, on behalf of the defendant in error, to contend either that judgment may not be signed in the Court of Chancery, or that that Court does not possess the power of giving judgment to cancel letters patent after trial of the issues raised between the parties. The practice will be found laid down correctly in Gilbert, History and Pract. of Chancery, 12, 13; 3 Bla. Com. 48, 49; Tidd. Pr. 9th ed. 1095. According to the practice of the Petty Bag Office, the record, when the parties are at issue, is made out in duplicate, one part being kept in that office, and the other sent into the Court of Queen's Bench. It is not, therefore, a transcript of the record, as contended for the plaintiff in error, but the record itself, which is sent to the Queen's Bench. Besides, no case shews in what manner the defendant can be coerced to bring back the record into Chancery in order that judgment may there be given to cancel the letters patent; but it is evidently necessary that final judgment should be given somewhere, so as to prevent the patentee from using the letters patent to the damage of the public. There are many authorities to shew that the practice has been to give judgment in the Court of Queen's Bench. The case of The Mayor of Liverpool v. The Chancellor of the County Palatine of Lancaster (supra), is not in point; it merely shews that the scire facias must issue out of Chancery in the first instance, which is not denied; and the case of Brewster v. Weld, relied upon by the other side, is in favour of the defendant in error, for it is there said, that the Court of Queen's Bench "seemed likewise to hold that a scire facias upon a record in Chancery was not returnable here. But clearly, after a writ issues out of Chancery returnable in another court, that court into which it is returnable has jurisdiction of it, and not the Chancery; nor can the Chancery supersede such writ; but all the irregularity, both in issuing it out and in the return of it, is solely examinable in the court in which the writ is returnable, which, if the writ be legal, will hold plea upon it, but otherwise will quash it." Even if it should appear to this Court that the Court Below has exceeded its jurisdiction in that part of their judgment which declares that the enrolment shall be cancelled, this Court will, by omitting those words, give such judgment as the Court of Queen's Bench ought, under the circumstances, to have given. Then with reference to the argument drawn from Lord Brougham's Act, this may be dismissed by observing that a patentee may, at any time pending the trial of the issues, apply to enter a disclaimer in accordance with the provisions of that statute, and such entry will be available, although made after issue joined between the parties; but it is submitted that no power is given to the patentee by that Act either to enter a disclaimer, or to make any memorandum of alteration after verdict. Hill cited Stanford's Pleas of the Crown, 77, b; Brooke Abr. Judgment, pla. 135; Reg. v. Ailes, 10 Mod. 258; Reg. v. Holland, Ayley, R. 14; Fitz. Abr. Petition, last pla. 11 Rep. 74, a; a record in the Tower, described as Gloucester, No. 47, which was a scire facias brought by the Abbot of Cirencester to repeal letters patent which had been granted to that town, and in which it appears that the Court of Queen's Bench gave judgment cancelling the letters patent; Fazachary v. Baldo, 1 Salk. 341; Reg. v. Earl of Dorset, T. Raym. 154, 177; Arkwright's case, Webster's Patent Cases, 74; Year Book, Mich. T. 11 Hen. 4, fo. 5, Trin. T. 21 Edw. 3, fo. 58 b, Mich. Webster in reply.—The authorities cited on the other side merely shew that where a case comes regularly before the Court of Queen's Bench, from Chancery, the former Court is entitled to pronounce some judgment. (Sarnfield's case; Reg. v. Holland, supra.) Here it is contended that the judgment so pronounced is erroneous and cannot be sustained. [TINDAL, C.J.—Would not the proper course be for the patentee, if he thinks that the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench will be against him, to enter a disclaimer before such judgment is actually given, and pray the Court to suspend their judgment; if this course had been adopted in the present case, the difficulty which undoubtedly exists would have been avoided.] In this case, judgment was actually signed before it was thought advisable to disclaim.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C.J. (now, June 13), delivered judgment as follows:—This was a scire facias brought to repeal certain letters patent which had been granted to the plaintiff in error. The record before us, which is brought by writ of error from the Court of Queen's Bench, states that the Lord Chancellor had delivered into Court, with his own proper hands, a record had before our said lady the Queen, in her Chancery, being the record so brought into the Court of Queen's Bench, with the recital of the original writ of scire facias issued out of the Court of Chancery, returnable there, calling on Bynner, the plaintiff in error, to appear and show cause why the letters patent therein set forth, and the enrolment of the same, for the reasons therein given, ought not to be cancelled, vacated, and disallowed, and those letters patent restored into her Majesty's Chancery, there to be cancelled. The record proceeds to state also the grounds upon which the validity of the letters patent is impeached; the appearance and pleas in bar of Bynner and the issues in fact joined thereon; the award of the writ of venire facias returnable in the Court of Queen's Bench; the appearance there of the Attorney-General on the part of the Crown, and of Bynner, by his clerk in court; the return of the venire facias, the award of the distingas, and the usual clause of si prius; the postea as returned by Mr. Justice Coleridge, who tried the issue; then follows the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, in these words: "That the said letters of our said lady the Queen so granted to the said Jeremiah Bynner as aforesaid be revoked, cancelled, vacated, disallowed, annulled, void, and invalid, and be altogether had, and held for nothing; and also that the enrolment thereof be cancelled, quashed, and annulled, and that the said letters patent be restored into her said Majesty's Court of Chancery at Westminster aforesaid, there to be cancelled." The record now brought before us concludes with these words: "The tenor of the record so delivered by the said Lord Chancellor into the said court of our lady the Queen, before the Queen herself, and of all things had thereupon in the same court of our said lady the Queen, before the Queen herself, and remanded unto the said Chancery of our said lady the Queen." The question raised before us upon this writ of error has been, whether the Court of Queen's Bench has the power of giving the judgment before stated. On the part of the plaintiff in error it has been contended that no more than a transcript of the record is sent down to the Queen's Bench for the purpose of enabling that Court to try the issue which has been raised in the Court of Chancery, and that after the trial of such issue, the record sent to the Court should be returned with the postea to the Court of Chancery, to enable that Court to give the judgment which has in fact been given by the Court of Queen's Bench, so as to make the act of cancelling the enrolment of the letters patent the act of the Court of Chancery, as being an act which that Court alone can carry into effect. On the part of the defendant in error it has been contended, on the other hand, that the record in the action of scire facias being sent to the Court of Queen's Bench, it is the duty of that Court to pronounce the judgment; that the tenor of the record, that is, an exact transcript of the whole record, is then transmitted to the Court of Chancery, to enable the Court to carry the judgment into effect by cancelling the enrolment. There are difficulties undoubtedly in the establishing of either of these positions with absolute certainty. There are conflicting authorities, which have been brought forward in favour of both. On the whole, however, we think the balance of authority is decidedly in support of the position contended for on the part of the Crown, namely, that the record is sent down to the Queen's Bench; that the Queen's Bench has authority to award the judgment, and afterwards to transmit either the record, or the tenor thereof, to the Court of Chancery, in order to be fully carried into execution there. In the first place, the proceedings before us state that the Chancellor has delivered here into court, with his own proper hand, a record; and this is not the form in this instance only, but the general form in other precedents. See Tremain's Pleas of the Crown, 652; and also Jefferson v. Morton, 2 Wms. Saund. 6. In this latter case, the great question between the parties was, whether the record itself had been properly sent down from the Court of Chancery to the King's Bench, inasmuch as upon the record there was an issue in fact, and also a demurrer in law, both joined in the Court of Chancery upon the same record; and no one appears to have doubted in that case that where there is an issue in fact only, the record must be sent down to the Court of King's Bench for the purpose of trying the issue; but it was said that after the trial of the issue so transmitted to the King's Bench to be tried, the record ought to be sent back to the Court of Chancery for the Chancellor or Keeper to give judgment upon it. However the whole Court delivered their opinions seriatim that the record of the demurrer and issue together were well and legally transmitted into the King's Bench, and the Lord Keeper of the Great Seal was also of the same opinion; and in the course of the argument, Diggs's case, 1 Rep. 157, and Steward's case, cited in the 9th Rep. were relied upon, where the record was transmitted into the King's Bench and several special verdicts found, and the Court of King's Bench retained the records, and did not send them back into Chancery, but gave judgment on the special verdicts. It was objected, that although this might be the practice where a final judgment might be given, and execution had thereon, in the Court of King's Bench, yet that in this case more remained to be done in the Court of Chancery, and which could not be done elsewhere, namely, that the letters patent, with the enrolment thereof, which still remained in the Court of Chancery, were directed to be cancelled. But it seems a sufficient answer to this objection, that nothing remains to be done in the Court of Chancery but a mere ministerial act by the officer of that court; and it is clear that there is no difficulty in getting an exact transcript of the record of the judgment from the Chancery to the Queen's Bench by certiorari and mittimus. The point, however—the only point—to be determined by us is, whether the Queen's Bench had authority to give judgment in this case in the form in which they have given it; and we think they had. Many precedents have been found of judgments had in the Court of King's Bench to repeal letters patent, which records are still remaining. In the King's Bench, Michaelmas Term, 4 Philip & Mary, Roll 16, is a record of a scire facias to repeal letters patent returnable in the King's Bench; and the judgment thereon is, that the letters patent be cancelled. [His lordship here read a portion of the original judgment, which was in Latin, and the purport of which was, as stated, that the letters patent should be cancelled.] The case brought forward, in the course of the argument, of a record found in the Tower, Gloucester, No. 47, 5 Hen. 5, is strong to the same effect. It is a scire facias brought by the Abbot of Cirencester against the town of Cirencester, to repeal a charter which had been granted to that town, and judgment was given for the Crown. In that case the tenor of the judgment alone is certified by the Court of King's Bench to the Court of Chancery, a certiorari having been issued, to which the return is made, beginning with the words [his lordship here read a portion of the return, which was to the effect that the letters patent should be cancelled]; and we are informed by the officer in the Tower, that both in the Cirencester case and numerous other cases a writ of certiorari is tied or pinned to the record of the Court of King's Bench, at the head of it, with an endorsement by the Chief Justice of the King's Bench for execution of the judgment. Without commenting or referring to the other authorities cited in the course of the argument, we think these are abundantly sufficient to prove that the Court of Queen's Bench had the power of giving the judgment which they have given, and that the same must be affirmed.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

(Before Mr. Commissioner GOULBUEN.)

Re ROGERS.

The Court has jurisdiction to withhold the certificate in cases where the granting of it was not opposed either by assignees or creditors.

The bankrupt, a draper at Lewes, applied for his certificate. Neither the assignees nor any other creditor offered any opposition.

His HONOUR said, it was still the duty of the Court to inform itself through the proceedings, and by any evidence in its power, as to the conduct of the bankrupt as a trader, upon which (by granting the certificate) it was about to pronounce a favourable judgment. He availed himself of this opportunity to express his dissent from a proposition made in argument, in a recent case heard before his learned brother Holroyd, and which the latter had mentioned to him, viz. that in cases where neither assignees nor creditors opposed the granting of the certificate, the Court had no jurisdiction to withhold its assent thereto. This doctrine, if acted upon, would defeat the chief object of the legislature in passing the late statute (5 & 6 Vict. cap. 122, sec. 39), by which the power over the certificate was taken from the creditors, and transferred to the Court. The reason for this transfer was obvious; it arose from the experience of the very undue motives, whether vindictive or mercenary, which were found to operate on the minds of creditors, in order to induce them to give or withhold their assent, and wholly unfitting them to exercise a calm and unbiased judgment on the punishment fit to be awarded against their debtors. It is true the statute directs the Court to hear and judge of the objections urged by creditors against the certificate; but it also directs the Court "to have regard to the conformity of the bankrupt's laws, &c. and to his conduct as a trader, as well before as since his bankruptcy." Now, how can a commissioner certify that such conformity and conduct are in all respects blameless, when the proceedings before him perhaps plainly showed the direct opposite? The learned commissioner had made it a rule in his court to call upon the official assignee for a report in each case as to a bankrupt's conduct and his accounts.

The report in the present case was then read, and the bankrupt's solicitor heard in answer to some objections appearing therein as to the bankrupt's excess of expenditure over his profits; and this being answered to the satisfaction of the Court, the certificate was granted forthwith.

SIMPSON v. MARGETSON and OWNERS.

Meaning of the word "Month."

Where an agreement had been made between the parties.

off, an auctioneer, and the defendants, that the plaintiff's commission on the sale of a certain estate should be one per cent. if sold within two months, and one-half per cent. if sold after that time: Held, that the word "months," must be construed to mean, in such case, "calendar," and not "lunar" months.

Byles, Serjt. and Unthank, appeared for the plaintiff; and Watson, Q. C. and Palmer, for the defendants.

This was an action to recover the sum of 420l. claimed by the plaintiff under the following circumstances:—The defendants had paid 220l. and disputed the claim for the balance. The plaintiff was an auctioneer and land agent. The defendants were gentlemen, who, as trustees, were called on to sell an estate, and employed the plaintiff for that purpose. The contract between them was, that the plaintiff should receive one per cent. commission on the value obtained for the estate if sold within two months, and one-half per cent. if sold beyond that time. The estate was sold for 40,050l. and the plaintiff claimed 400l. on that sale as his commission. The remaining money was claimed as for money paid.

Watson and Palmer, for the defendants, contended, that the sale having taken place more than two lunar months after the agreement, the plaintiff was only entitled to one-half per cent. The question between the parties was, whether the word months, in the agreement, meant lunar or calendar months. The plaintiff tendered the evidence of auctioneers to show that they always understood in business the word month to mean calendar month, unless it was otherwise expressed, but the evidence was rejected. The defendants proved that the plaintiff had used the words "calendar months" in the catalogue issued by him, and, therefore, showed himself aware of the difference between a lunar and a calendar month, and must be taken to have made his contract with the defendants upon that understanding. It was further contended that the use of the word month with a meaning of a calendar month in bills of exchange and charter parties was an exception to the general rule of law, and depended entirely on the merchant law, which had no application to this case.

His lordship left it as a question of fact to the jury what was the intention of the parties when they entered into the contract.

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, considering that the parties had not intended to restrict the meaning of the word "month" to a lunar month. The verdict was returned for the plaintiff accordingly.

Watson then applied to the judge for his opinion on the question, which he insisted was a matter of law, and not of fact.

WIGHTMAN, J. expressed his opinion, subject to a motion in the court above, that the verdict ought to be entered for the plaintiff.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT.

Newcastle-on-Tyne Summer Assizes, 1846.

LAMBERT v. KNILL.

Liabilities of provisional committees.

Where there is both a managing committee and a provisional committee, and an action is brought against a member of the provisional committee, who had never interfered in the concern, for expenses incurred by the managing committee, it is a question for the jury, upon the facts, whether the defendant authorized the committee of management to order such work to be done as was necessary for the undertaking in that stage, and to pledge his credit for the amount? If the jury find in the negative, the verdict must be for the defendant.

Martin, Q.C. and Robinson, for the plaintiffs. Watson, Q.C. and Warren, for the defendant.

Martin stated the case for the plaintiffs; they are lithographers, and the action was brought to recover from the defendant the sum of 1,039l. for certain lithographed plans and books of reference, which they had executed for the Oxford, Witney, Cheltenham, and Gloucester Independent Extension Railway Company, of the provisional committee of which the defendant was a member. Until the trial of a cause before Mr. Justice Cresswell, some days before, he would have looked upon the present case as substantially undefended. It was one of those cases of which so many had occurred within these few years. The success of a few of the leading lines of railway had brought forward a great number of new schemes. To induce persons to come forward and take shares in these undertakings, a number of persons gave their names to the world as provisional committee-men, on the faith of whose respectability others were expected to embark in the concern, and to whom persons engaged to do the work, preliminary to an application to Parliament, were to look for their remuneration. The present plaintiffs had been engaged on the authority of the managing committee of the line in question, through Mr. Nicholson, their engineer, to execute the maps and books of reference necessary to enable the company to go to Parliament. The defendant was one of the provisional committee, and, according to many cases which had been decided in the Court of Exchequer, he, with the other members of such committee, would be liable for such preliminary works. Indeed, according to the provisions of the Act for the registration of joint-stock companies, they seemed to be the persons whom the law contemplated as the persons responsible for the expenses incurred preparatory to obtaining an Act. The parties who come forward to advance any such scheme are called the "promoters," an expressive and intelligible phrase. The Act provides for a provisional registration, and the granting of a certificate of such registration, and then empowers the parties to open subscription lists, and do other matters with a view to obtaining a bill. Many cases had been tried on the liability of these promoters, and the question left to the jury was, whether the provisional committee-men did not hold themselves out as persons who would be responsible to the various parties employed, and did such parties look to them for payment? This had been the view of the matter usually taken by the Courts, and this, he submitted, was the correct view, although the very learned judge to whom he had already referred had, in a late case, taken a different view. The learned counsel then went through the facts of the case, which in substance amounted to this, that the company in question was formed in the latter part of last year, and prospectuses were published, containing the names of thirty or forty provisional committee-men, among whom was the defendant. The plaintiffs were employed to do the work in question through Messrs. Albano and Nicholson, the engineers, who were authorized by the acting committee of management to engage them for that purpose. It would not appear that Mr. Knill had given any consent in writing to the use of his name as a committee-man, but he knew of it being so used, and described himself as such. References were made to him by some parties who applied for shares, and in these applications he was described as a provisional committee-man. On these applications he had indorsed his name approving of the applicants, and on one occasion he called at the office and asked to see the list of the parties who had referred to him, stating to the clerk that he was a provisional committee-man. In this case, as in most others, there were, it was true, two bodies—the provisional committee and the provisional committee of management, the latter being a selection of names from the former. He submitted that the latter was merely a more select body appointed by the others for convenience sake, but not the persons solely responsible to third persons. He would prove this party was a provisional committee-man, and shew the value of the work done.

Anthony Bustin, secretary to the company, proved that references were given to Mr. Knill. He is a wharfinger and merchant. Witness saw him at the office in Gracechurch-street in the latter part of September or the beginning of October. He said he was Mr. Knill, one of the provisional committee of the railway, and he had come to look over the applications for shares of the parties who had referred to him. Witness told him the lists for the provisional committee were not yet made out. He then went out of the room. As he went out, Mr. Hill, one of the committee of management, came in. Witness told Mr. Hill the object of defendant's visit. Mr. Hill called him back, and told him the list would be made out shortly. Mr. Knill then went away. There were nine on the committee of management. Cannot say if they took the office on themselves. It was done in the usual way. They were promoters of the scheme. They appointed themselves. There never was any meeting of the provisional committee apart from the committee of management. The latter was in existence before the provisional committee. Mr. Miller, the solicitor, is brother to Mr. Ambrose Miller, who is on the committee of management. Mr. Miller was not one of the original promoters. Messrs. Pontifex and Moginy are employed, advising the committee of management about winding up. The company had no funds, and the creditors were clamorous about their money. Mr. Moginy is acting as the solicitor for the plaintiffs in this case. The company began advertising in the early part of September. It was only a committee of management at first. The books of the committee of management are not here.

It appeared, from the prospectus put in, that it contains the following provisions:—

"Until an Act of Parliament is obtained the affairs of the company are to be under the control of the committee of management for the time being, to whom power is given to allot the shares, and to apply the funds of the company in payment of all the expenses incurred in its formation, and in the preparation of plans and sections to be submitted to Parliament.

"Power will be applied for in the Act, and in the meantime is hereby given, to the committee of management as above, to raise any additional capital, to abandon any part of the line, to make branch lines, or to enter into any arrangement with any other company, and also to nominate the first directors."

Evidence was then adduced to show that reference had been made to Mr. Knill by several persons applying for shares, in one of which applications he was described as a member of the provisional committee, and that he had endorsed such application with an approval of the parties.

At the close of the plaintiff's case, his lordship intimated an opinion that there was no proof of the retention of the plaintiff, according to the directions given by the committee of management. The clerk was directed, it was said, to write to Mr. Nicholson; but no proof was given of the receipt of such letter by Mr. Nicholson, which, were it produced, would shew the terms on which the parties were engaged, and from which it might perhaps appear that the committee of management were solely liable.

Mr. Nicholson was then called, and stated that he had no recollection of such a letter. He had received a great many. He recollected Mr. Potter, one of the acting committee of management, giving him verbal directions to employ Mr. Lambert, and, while the plans were being made, he frequently communicated with the committee of management on the subject.

Watson, for the defence, contended that this was not the action of the plaintiffs, but of the acting committee of management, who, having set the scheme on foot, before any provisional committee existed at all, and held themselves out to the world as the parties liable, were now seeking to throw the burthen of these liabilities on the shoulders of parties whom, like Mr. Knill, they had put forward as members of the provisional committee. No previous consent of Mr. Knill to make such use of his name had been shown, and any such subsequent assent was sought to be proved only by the most suspicious and ambiguous evidence. But the acting committee of management were the promoters of the scheme, and the parties liable, not the provisional committee. The latter did not appoint the committee of management. It was in existence before the provisional committee existed at all. Its members were originally the parties who, and not as the representatives or delegates of the larger body, set on foot the undertaking, and were responsible for the expenses.

His LORDSHIP summed up, and left the following questions to the jury:—

1. Whether the defendant was a member of the provisional committee, and suffered his name to be held out and used as such?

This the jury answered in the affirmative.

2. Did the defendant authorize the committee of management to order such work to be done as was necessary for the undertaking in that stage, and to pledge his credit for the amount?

The jury found he did not.

3. Did he give such authority to an individual member of the committee, Mr. Potter?—No.

4. Was the work done such as was proper and necessary for the undertaking in its then stage?—Yes.

5. Was the work done by the plaintiffs on the credit of the defendant as one of the provisional committee?—Yes.

On this finding, his LORDSHIP directed a verdict for the defendant, with liberty to move to enter a verdict for the plaintiff.

DURHAM SUMMER ASSIZES, 1846.

Durham, July 28.

(Before Mr. Justice CRESSWELL.)

WEBB v. WATTS.

Liabilities of provisional committees.

Where defendant had on the 15th of July written a letter stating his willingness to be a provisional director when the committee should be formed, but had never taken any active part in the business of the project, and the prospectus with his name appeared on the 16th of October, and on the 27th of September the plaintiff was employed by the acting manager to do certain work:—

Held, that such a mere consenting to the use of his name in the prospectus was not an entering into a partnership, nor did it render the defendant liable for all the acts done by other parties or committee-men, and that, therefore, the secretary, in the transaction shewn, had no power to impose upon the defendant this liability to the plaintiff.

This was an action of assumpsit, brought by Mr. George Hatton Webb, formerly an attorney's clerk, to recover the sum of 86l. alleged to be due for work, and labour, and money paid by the plaintiff, in the service of the Irish West Coast Railway undertaking; the defendant's liability to pay the demand being, that the latter had caused himself to be made a provisional committee-man to that railway.

Martin and Atherton, for the plaintiff.

Knowles, Addison, and Seymour, for the defendant.

Martin, in opening the plaintiff's case, said that the question upon the present inquiry would be very similar to that which had already arisen in other actions, in which it was said, some of the judges had expressed an opinion against those plaintiffs who claimed compensation of provisional committee-men. But, the learned counsel said, he had himself no doubt that such liability existed. He apprehended that every person who took any part in the establishing of a railway was to be considered as one of the promoters, and that when a man became a provisional director, and thus put himself forward as a promoter of the scheme, he did, impliedly, by so participating in the scheme, and recommending it to the public, undertake to pay those things which, by the Parliamentary standing orders, were made indispensable to the obtaining of a Bill from the legislature. If a man would come forward before the public as one of a provisional committee in these cases, he must, in reason and in justice, be taken to make himself answerable for such expenses as were needful for the end in view. Besides which, a person assuming that character had peculiar advantages, which, it would be found, had been enjoyed by the defendant in this case; the provisional directors were in the habit of receiving a number of shares in the undertaking, which were allotted to them at the commencement of the scheme, and which they could sell at a premium without having before paid any thing for them. The present defendant was sued for a sum of money due to the plaintiff for wages as a clerk employed in the taking of traffic, a species of work without which it would be useless to attempt to get a Bill to establish the company. The work to be done by the plaintiff was, therefore, something without which the scheme could not be successful, and that being the case, he (Mr. Martin) anticipated that the plaintiff would be held entitled to recover. The plaintiff had been five or six weeks in Ireland, and was afterwards recalled, in consequence of the cessation of the scheme, occasioned by the panic.

A letter from the defendant was then put in. It was dated at Darlington on the 15th July, 1845, signed by the defendant, and addressed to Messrs. Reid and Robinson, solicitors for the railway, No. 10, Old Jewry Chambers, London. It purported to be in answer to an application from the solicitors, and stated that the defendant would allow his name to be placed on the list of committee-men, and requiring that he should have 50 shares allotted to him, and 50 more afterwards in case circumstances might so permit. On the 16th October the prospectus, having the defendant's name in it, was published. On the 27th September preceding, Mr. William Campbell, who was acting manager from August to October, gave the plaintiff a written appointment to go to Ireland, as taker of the traffic on the projected line. It was signed by Mr. Campbell, dated at 21, Thavies'-inn, and appointed plaintiff to act as taker of traffic, at 25s. a-day, exclusive of travelling expenses, from the 29th, then inst. the engagement to terminate in 60 days, or two months from that date.

Evidence was then adduced of Mr. Campbell having acted as managing director.

His LORDSHIP said that this was the first action of the kind which had been tried before him, and asked if it had not already been decided by Mr. Baron Parke, that where there was a managing committee the defendant could not be made liable?

KNOWLES submitted that the plaintiff had made out no case: first, because there was no evidence of any work performed by the plaintiff, at least not in Ireland; and secondly, because the plaintiff had failed in giving any evidence at all of a contract between him and the defendant.

His LORDSHIP intimated that there might be some question upon the former of these points; but considered that the evidence given did afford proof of something having been done by the plaintiff towards earning the wages contracted for.

MARTIN contended that although the taking of the traffic had never been proceeded with, yet the defendant could be called on, in this form of action, to pay the wages, and that the plaintiff was not bound to sue in any other form. It was the same as with any other person whose services might be engaged. If a servant were hired for a year, and ready to work, but not put to work, he might still make his demand as for work and labour. It was upon the second point, however, that he mainly insisted, and he said that the defendant never having taken any active part in the business of the project, the letter of appointment being on the 27th of September, and the publication of the names of the committee not until the 15th or 16th of the month following, there could be no contract between these parties. He submitted, whether the mere fact of a gentleman writing a letter, to say that he was willing to be a provisional director when the committee should be formed, could render him liable to this action by a person so appointed by Mr. Campbell? Mr. Campbell could not have written the letter now read upon the responsibility of the defendant, and the plaintiff could not have undertaken this employ on any credit given by him to Mr. Watts, as the contract had been entered into before the name of the latter had been made public.

MARTIN said that this view of the case was contrary to decisions in the courts above. In Bennett v. Burdett, before Mr. Baron Alderson, on the 28th of January last, it was held that the defendant was liable. There the defendant had merely signed a written consent to become a provisional director.

CRESSWELL, J.—But what was the other evidence?

KNOWLES.—Mr. Burdett was shown to have attended meetings of the committee. He had consented to act, and he had acted. In this case the plaintiff had not acted on the authority of a secretary, but at the place where the defendant himself was attending as committee-man.

MARTIN.—Mr. Baron Alderson said that there could not be a doubt but that the defendant was liable for all contracts.

ATHERTON referred to the case of Barnet v. Lambert also in the Exchequer. There the plaintiff gave in evidence the defendant's letter, as here, but its terms were qualified by the writer saying that he would not incur any liability beyond the amount of his shares. The defendant then had attended one committee meeting, but the decision of the Court was upon the qualified expressions of the letter.

MARTIN was proceeding to quote the case of Wild v. Hopkins, when Mr. Watson exclaimed, "We are going to move for a new trial there."

His LORDSHIP then called upon Martin to say what question of fact he would wish him to leave to the jury.

MARTIN said that it would be this—"Whether the defendant, by giving his consent to be a provisional committee-man, and his consent to take shares, did not thereby hold himself out, or consent to have himself held out, as a party, to be responsible for the reasonable expenses of carrying the scheme before Parliament."

CRESSWELL, J. said that would be a question of law. He was at present of opinion that no contract with the defendant had been proved. It might be assumed that the defendant had seen prospectuses containing his own name, but his merely consenting to that use of his name was not entering into a partnership, nor would it render him liable for all the acts done by other parties or committee-men. His lordship thought that Campbell, in the transaction shewn, had not power to impose upon the defendant this liability to the plaintiff.

Plaintiff nonsuited.

DEVON SUMMER ASSIZES.

Exeter, July 29, 1846.

REG. v. CROYDON AND ANOTHER.

Evidence—Confession—Attorney.

The words "I dare say you had a hand in it; you may as well tell me all about it," constitute a sufficient inducement to exclude a subsequent confession.

An attorney engaged in the investigation of a crime, for the purpose of getting up a prosecution, is a person clothed with authority to offer such an inducement.

The prisoners were indicted for burglary. The facts are briefly, that, at a former assize, one Baker had been tried, found guilty, and transported for a burglary. After his conviction, the prisoner, who appears to have been connected with Baker in the transaction, went with Baker's daughter to Mr. Bartlett, the attorney who conducted Baker's defence, for the purpose of making some statement relating to the burglary. Mr. Bartlett admitted that he had said to him, "I dare say you had a hand in it; you may as well tell me all about it," and that he was then endeavouring to discover the criminals for the purpose of prosecution.

Cox, for the prisoner, objected that this was an inducement held out by a person having authority, and the subsequent statements of the prisoner were inadmissible. There was no case precisely in point. The words in the decided cases were, "It will be better for you to confess," or to that effect. But the Court would take the words, not according to their strict literal meaning, but according to the common understanding of them; and in this view, the expression, "You may as well tell me," is equivalent to "You had better tell me." It conveyed the same meaning to the prisoner, and the main question is, was it an expression calculated to operate as an inducement to him, what meaning may be fairly supposed to attach to it?

Cornish, for the prosecution, contended that the words themselves were not an inducement, and that, if they were, it was not held out by a person having authority. None of the cases went further than the words "You had better tell me," and the Court could not now carry those cases further; and certainly the words "You may as well" are not equivalent to the words "You had better." As to the second point, Mr. Bartlett was clothed with no such authority as was requisite to shut out any statement made to him, after an inducement which he had not the power to offer. He was not the prosecutor, or even his attorney or agent.

Cox.—But he was then engaged in an endeavour to get up a prosecution. He was seeking to discover a criminal. He did this either on his own account, or as attorney for another—in fact as attorney for the Bakers. In either case, he had the authority necessary to make any inducement by him a bar to the reception of the subsequent confession.

Mr. ROGERS said that the points being new, he would consult Mr. Baron Platt upon them. Having done so.

Mr. ROGERS said, "I have consulted Mr. Baron Platt upon the points raised, and he entirely agrees with me that there was an inducement, and that the statements of the prisoner are inadmissible."

Verdict—Not Guilty.

Cornish, for the prosecution.

Cox, for the prisoner.

Attorneys:—Prosecution, Bartlett. Prisoner, Toms.

Bills in Progress.

EPISCOPAL REVENUES AND DIOCESES.—On Saturday a bill was printed (prepared and brought into the House of Commons by Mr. Frewen and Mr. Colquhoun), "to provide for the better Regulation of Episcopal Revenues and Dioceses." There are sixteen provisions in this measure, founded on the preamble, which is to the effect that it is desirable to enlarge the powers of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and to increase the number of bishops for England and Wales, and to distribute the dioceses of bishops more equally than they are now, and more justly to apportion episcopal revenues. It is proposed that all episcopal property shall vest in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners; that nineteen new bishops be created, the appointment to be by the Queen in Council; and that the archiepiscopal and episcopal dioceses in England and Wales be in future distributed as set forth in the fourth provision. A return of the incomes of the bishops to be made, and a fixed stipend to be paid, and on a deficiency of income, then to be paid out of the Consolidated Fund. It is proposed that bishops shall sit in Parliament under certain regulations. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners are to provide suitable residences for bishops; and by the 13th clause it is proposed that the Queen may remove or suspend any archbishop or bishop. This bill is to be read a second time on Wednesday next.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.—Preamble recites inconveniences resulting from the present infrequency of holding sessions of the peace, as well as from the distance prosecutors, witnesses, and others, are compelled to travel to the sessions. Clause 1 authorizes the Secretary of State for the Home Department, on the requisition of twenty of the local magistrates, to cause an adjourned quarter sessions to be held in addition to the ordinary quarter sessions. Clause 2 requires that notice of such adjournment shall have been inserted in the London Gazette, and some local paper.

SMOKE PROHIBITION.—BILL TO PROHIBIT THE NUISANCE OF SMOKE FROM FURNACES OR MANUFACTORIES.—Preamble having recited the expediency of providing for the public health and comfort by controlling the above nuisance, Clause 1 empowers the justices in any city, borough, or place, to appoint inspectors for their locality, with salaries payable from the county, city, or borough rate. Clause 2 defines the following terms:—"Opaque smoke" means smoke not transparent at the point of its exit from a chimney; "furnace" comprehends such only as are used for the heating of stationary steam-engine boilers; and by "occupier" is intended such person or persons as are in actual possession of any such furnace, either as owner or owners, or as tenant or tenants, or any person having the joint or separate use thereof. Clauses 3 and 4 enact that opaque smoke shall not be permitted to issue from any chimney of a furnace for any longer time than is bona fide necessary for the kindling of the fire of such furnace, under a penalty not exceeding 5*l*. Clauses 5-7 empower the justices to hear complaints which are to be preferred within a month after the commission of the alleged offence. Personal service of the summons is not required. The magistrates have power to compel the attendance of witnesses, and to imprison such as are refractory for not more than fourteen days. Clause 8 inflicts the penalty of perjury for giving false evidence under this Act. Clause 9 throws the onus probandi upon the party summoned. Clauses 10 and 11 provide for the recovery of penalties. Clause 12 enables the party convicted to recover in return from any one through whose negligence or wilful misconduct the offence has been committed. Clause 13 provides that the provisions of the Act are not to affect any nuisances at common law, though evidence of having paid the penalty of a conviction under the Act is to be received from all other proceedings, civil or criminal, for the same offence. Clauses 14 and 15 regulate the form of conviction, and give a power of appealing to the Quarter Sessions. Clause 16 prohibits actions being brought on account of any thing done in pursuance of this Act, until twenty-one days' notice in writing; or after sufficient satisfaction tendered; or more than two months from the time of such act having been committed.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

ROYAL ASSENT.

MONDAY, August 3.—Shortly before four o'clock the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and the Earl of Minto, took their seats in front of the throne as Lords Commissioners, the Speaker, with several members of the Commons, having been summoned to the bar to hear the commission read for giving the Royal assent to sixty-one public and private Bills, the titles of which are subjoined, and to witness the proceedings. The Royal assent was then given, with the accustomed formalities, to the Bills in question. These are the titles:—The Sugar Duties, No. 2; New Zealand Loan; Ropeworkers; Battersea Park; Battersea Bridge; Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Junction; South Staffordshire Junction Railway, with Branches; Leeds and Bradford Railway, Junction at Bradford; Blackburn, Preston, and East Lancashire Railways Amalgamation; Newport, Abercavenny, and Hereford Railway; South-Eastern Railway, No. 2; Greenwich Railway to Chillingham, with Branches; Manchester and Leeds Railway Extension; Shrewsbury and Birmingham Railway; Shrewsbury, Wolverhampton, and South Staffordshire Junction Railway, No. 1; London and Birmingham Railway, Weedon and Northampton Branch; Blackburn, Darwen, and Bolton Railway; Midland Railways, Leicester and Swanington Railway Alteration and Branches; Liverpool and Bury Railway; Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth Railway; Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Dudley Railway; Trent Valley, Midlands, and Grand Junctions Railway; Strathsay and Breadalbane Railway; Londonderry and Enniskillen Railway Extension; Whitehaven and Furness Railway Extension; Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Extension; Dublin, Belfast, and Coleraine Junction Railway; Shropshire Union Railway and Canal, Chester and Wolverhampton Line; Shrewsbury and Herefordshire Railway; Shropshire Union Railway and Canal, Newtown to Crewe; Bristol and Birmingham and Midland Railway; Shropshire Union Railway and Canal, Shrewsbury and Stafford Railway; North Wales Railway; Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Stour Valley Railway; Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Derby Lines; Caledonian Railway, Glasgow, Garnkirk, and Coatbridge Railway Purchase; Newcastle and Darlington Railway, Pontop and South Shields Railway Purchase; London and Birmingham, Coventry to Nuneaton, Railway; Edinburgh and Bathgate Railway; Portbury Pier and Railway, No. 2; Surrey Iron Railway Company Dissolving Bill; Glasgow, Garnkirk, and Coatbridge Railway Extension; Caledonian Railway, Glasgow Terminal and Branches; Gravesend and Rochester Railway and Canal Sale and Purchase; Midland Railway, Birmingham and Gloucester Branches; Vale of Neath Railway; Cokermonth and Wokington Extension Railway; Sligo and Shannon Railway; Birmingham and Oxford Junction Railway; West Cornwall Railway; Cornwall Railway; Birmingham and Oxford Junction Railway, Birmingham Extension; Cambridge Improvement; Billingsgate Market Improvement; Gorbals Water; Sheffield Improvement; Tunbridge Wells Improvement; Kennington Improvement; Barr's Estate; Fleming's Estate; Vale's Estate; Pelp's Estate; and Eden's Estate.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

The house then went into committee on this bill.—Earl Powis suggested that the judges to be appointed in Wales should understand the Welsh language.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said it would be desirable if they could be found. The noble and learned lord then proposed an alteration in the 8th clause to the effect that the judges in existing courts of ancient tenure for recovering small debts, should be appointed to preside over the new courts. This alteration, as well as the remaining clauses, with some verbal amendments, having been agreed to, the bill went through committee, and the house resumed.

JOINT STOCK COMPANIES.

WEDNESDAY, August 5.—Lord SANDON wished to know in what state of progress was the measure for enabling joint stock companies to wind up their affairs.—Mr. M. GIBSON said he hoped the bill would be passed during the present session.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY BILL.

WEDNESDAY, August 5.—On the order of the day for the committee on this bill, Mr. BOUVIERIE observed at some length on the present deficiency of our bankruptcy law. Mr. Commissioner Goulburn stated that, after fifteen years' experience in the Court of Bankruptcy, he had come to the conclusion that there was great facility for evasion, and very little power of punishment. Mr. Commissioner Fane described the present system as "a law to encourage knavery with impunity," and it had been estimated that the amount of bad debts lost in consequence of the present system amounted to not less than 24,000,000*l*. per annum. It was said that the honesty of our trade was deteriorating year by year. This bill had for its object to remedy some of these evils. He had heard, however, that the subject was about to be taken up on a large scale by Her Majesty's government, and if that were the case, he should be ready to withdraw the bill.—Sir G. GREY said he had received from the Lord Chancellor an intimation that the Bankruptcy Laws were under his consideration with a view to consolidation and amendment. He hoped, therefore, the bill would be withdrawn. Bill withdrawn accordingly.

LOUGHBOROUGH MAGISTRACY.

THURSDAY, July 30.—Mr. CHRISTIE moved an address to her Majesty, praying for copies of the correspondence between the Home-office and the magistrates of the Loughborough petty sessions on the cases of Mary Ann Tyler, John Jarvis, and Catherine Stubbs, and of the report of the commissioner appointed to inquire into the case of Catherine Stubbs.—Sir G. GREY said, that it was not usual to produce the correspondence between the Secretary of State and the magistrates, or the reports of the commissioners; but in this particular case, as the magistrate had himself brought the subject before his brother magistrates at the late sessions for Leicestershire, although the course was unusual, yet the right hon. gentleman opposite (Sir J. Graham) having no objection, he would in this case agree to produce the correspondence and report, as the subject had been brought before the public by the magistrate; and if the newspaper report was correct,—the complete case made by the correspondence did not appear to have been shewn,—he would consent to the correspondence being laid before the house, but this must not be drawn into a precedent. The address was then agreed to.

THURSDAY, August 6.—On the motion of Lord CAMPBELL, the Interpleader Bill and the Mandamus and Prohibition Bill were read a first time. He said the object of the bill was to assimilate the practice in Ireland to that which now prevailed in England with much advantage.—Earl GREY moved the second reading of the Poor Removal Bill.—The Duke of RICHMOND said the measure was so very imperfect, that it would be better to postpone it until next session. It was one of those measures intended as a compensation to the agricultural interest for the passing of the Corn Bill; but in its present state it would be better for the agriculturists that it should not pass until next session, when a comprehensive measure of settlement would, he hoped, be brought forward by the Government.—Lord REDFERN supported the Bill, upon the express ground that it was so imperfect that it would compel legislation in the ensuing session of Parliament.—The Duke of GRAFTON said that the Bill in its present shape was so imperfect, and so practically useless without some further measure, that its postponement could not lead to any inconvenience.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said the Bill was an imperfect application of a sound principle; but, imperfect as it was, he thought it of great importance to have that principle affirmed on their journals, as a guide to future legislation.—The Bill was then read a second time, and was ordered to be committed on Tuesday.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE Poor Removal Bill is to be hurried into a law, and a glance at it will shew how completely our legislators are defeating their own object. Few and brief as are the clauses, they open a huge field for dispute and consequent litigation. The question, What is to be deemed a residence within a certain parish? will give rise to incalculable points of law, and interminable questions of fact. The truth is, that until the relief of the poor is paid out of a common fund, and the law of settlement abolished, there can be no peace between parishes. But from such a rational arrangement we are, as yet, far distant.

I. General Statement as to Counties.

Nos. 1 and 2.—In each of these two cases, the point raised for the determination of the Court of Appeal was precisely the same. The objector, in each case, had delivered his notice of objection at the post-office on the 24th August (observing all the requisites prescribed by the 100th section of the Registration Act, as to the form of such delivery), and the notices would, by the ordinary course of the post, be delivered at the place to which they were respectively directed on the 25th August, being the day on or before which the notice of objection is required by the 7th section of the same Act to be given both to the overseer of the parish and to the party objected to. But by reason of some cause, which was unexplained, the notices, instead of being delivered at the place to which they were respectively directed on the 25th August, as in the ordinary course of the post they ought to have been and would have been delivered, were not actually delivered until the 26th August, and whether these were valid and sufficient notices of objection was the question raised for the Court; upon which question the Court held, that the objector having done all that the statute required or made necessary on his part to be done, by delivering them at the post-office in the proper time, and in the proper form of delivery, the notices must be considered good and sufficient, and as the revising barrister had held the notices not to be sufficient, the Court reversed his decision, and directed the names of fourteen claimants mentioned in the case No. 1, and twenty claimants mentioned in the case No. 2, to be expunged from the register.

No. 3.—The appeal in this case also turned upon the sufficiency of the notice of objection. The notice described the objector's place of abode as "No. 398, High-street, Cheltenham," and in the "register of voters for the parish of Cirencester." The objection taken to the notice was, that in the register the objector was described as of "Cheltenham" only, without any further particularity; but as this more particular description gave the true place of the objector's abode, the Court held the addition to the general description in the register of the particular street and number of the house where the objector resided could not invalidate the sufficiency of the notice, and affirmed the barrister's decision that the notice of the objection was good, with costs.

No. 4.—This case raised a very important question, namely the proper construction of the statute 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 25. By the 7th section of that statute, all conveyances are declared to be void which are made in order to multiply voices, or to split and divide the interest in houses or lands among several persons, to enable them to vote at elections of members to serve in Parliament. And the question before the Court was, whether a conveyance made to a large number of persons and their heirs as tenants in common, where the object and design of all the parties to the conveyance was avowedly that of multiplying voices at elections was, upon that ground only, necessarily a void conveyance; such conveyance being in the particular case made in completion of a bond fide contract of sale, under which the purchasers paid the purchase-money to the seller, and the seller gave up the possession of the premises to the purchasers who kept such possession, and in which transaction there was no secret reservation or trust of any kind for the benefit of the seller, and the Court held that the statute intended to declare void all such conveyances made for the object and purpose prohibited by the Act as were fraudulent and collusive, and such only, that is, conveyances where it was intended by the parties themselves that no money should pass to the grantors, or that the deed should be nothing more than a conveyance in form, not a conveyance in reality; but that in cases where the conveyance was really intended by the parties thereto to have the full operation which it purported on the face of it to carry, and where there was no secret trust or reservation of any kind for the benefit of the grantor; as where, for instance, it was intended to be a real conveyance made in completion of a bond fide contract of sale; that in such cases the conveyance was not within the intention of the statute, although the motive or object of the parties might be that of creating qualifications to vote at elections, and thereby to multiply voices or split freeholds, and the Court accordingly affirmed the decision of the revising barrister who had directed the names of the claimants to be kept on the register.

This decision had the effect of retaining the names of fifty claimants on the register, whose cases were consolidated with this appeal.

No. 5.—This case related to the sufficiency of the description of the voter, and also of his qualification as it appeared on the register of voters for the county of Middlesex.

The description of the voter upon the register made in conformity with Schedule (A), No. 3 of the statute 6 Vict. c. 18, was this: "Henry Hall, of the Grove, Neasdon, in this parish;" and it was objected that Neasdon was no parish, and that it did not appear within what parish it was situated; but the answer given by the Court was, that the register as to this part of it appeared to be made out by the overseers of the parish of Willesden, and that the words "parish of Willesden" immediately preceded this list of voters, and stood as a heading of every page, so that of necessity "Neasdon, in this parish," must be taken to mean "in the parish of Willesden." The next question reserved was, whether the property was sufficiently described for the purpose of being identified? But as it appeared upon the face of the register that the place of abode of the voter was "the Grove, Neasdon," and that he claimed to vote "for house and land in Neasdon, of which he was the occupier," the Court thought the property was sufficiently described for the purpose of being identified, and affirmed the decision of the revising barrister for the respondents.

No. 6.—In this case also, as in the last, the objection taken was, that the place of abode of the voter was not sufficiently described upon the register; the column which was headed by the words "place of abode" was filled up with the words "travelling abroad," and it was insisted before the revising barrister that he ought to expunge the name of the voter, as directed by the 40th section of the Registration Act; but we thought the revising barrister had properly refused to expunge the name; for that this was not a case in which the place of abode was omitted as contemplated by the 40th section, but where the voter had no fixed place of abode, and consequently that the 40th section of the statute did not apply.

No. 7, &c.—The point raised in each of these cases respectively was the same as that raised in the case No. 4, and the Court of Common Pleas decided each of them in conformity with the principle laid down in their decision of the case No. 4, viz. that if it did not appear that the conveyance was fraudulent or collusive, but, on the contrary, if it was made in completion of a bond fide contract of purchase and sale, the case did not fall within the statute of Wm. 3, although made with the object of splitting freeholds, and multiplying voices at elections. In the cases No. 7, No. 11, and No. 12, the revising barrister having held the conveyance to fall within the statute, and to be, therefore, void, and having directed the names mentioned in these respective cases to be expunged, the Court of Appeal reversed those decisions, and directed the names of the 27 persons mentioned in the schedules in the case No. 7, the names of the 133 persons mentioned in the schedules in the case No. 11, and the names of the forty-three persons mentioned in the schedule to the case No. 12, to be restored to the register. And, on the other hand, with respect to the cases No. 8, No. 9, No. 15 and No. 16, the revising barrister having held the conveyances to be good, notwithstanding the objections taken thereto, the Court affirmed those decisions, and thereby continued on the respective registers the names of the thirty-one persons mentioned in the schedules in the case No. 8, the names of the one hundred and sixty-nine persons mentioned in the schedules in the case No. 9, the names of the nine persons mentioned in the case No. 15, and of the two persons mentioned in the case No. 16.

No. 10.—This was the case of an objection made by the overseers against the validity of the claims of forty persons whose names are enumerated therein, upon the ground that the notices of claims were left at the overseer's house on a Sunday. The revising barrister thought the objection good, and expunged the names. The court of appeal, however, was of opinion, that the act of delivering such notice was not void by the registration statute, which carefully excepts Sunday in various other instances from being a day on which certain acts can be done, but is silent as to this Act; nor is it void by any other statute, nor by the common law. The judgment of the revising barrister was therefore reversed, and the names of the forty claimants directed to be restored to the list.

Nos. 13 and 14.—These two cases arose upon the grant of rent-charges, the question of law in each being virtually the same as that decided by the Court in No. 4, namely, whether the grants of these rent-charges were made void by the statute of Wm. 3, before referred to, as being made for the purpose of splitting freeholds and multiplying voices at elections; and the Court adhered to the same decision as before, and affirmed the judgment of the revising barrister.

No. 17.—In this case an objection was taken to the names of two persons being retained on the list of voters on the ground that they had not been in the actual receipt of the rents and profits for their own use for six calendar months at least before the last day of July, as is required by the sixth section of the statute 2 Wm. 4, c. 45. The property in respect of which the votes were claimed was a rent-charge created by deed, bearing date the 28th January, 1845; but, inasmuch as the first payment of this rent-charge did not become due until the 1st January, 1846, a day subsequent to the last day of July, the three judges who heard the case argued, held there had been no such actual possession for the period of time required by the Act, and affirmed the decision of the revising barrister to that effect.

No. 18.—The objection taken in this case before the revising barrister was, that the notices of the claims delivered by the appellant and twenty-four other claimants, were not proved to have been delivered in due time, and the revising barrister, thinking the objection well founded, directed the names to be expunged. But, inasmuch as it appeared by the case that the notices were duly posted at Manchester on such a day as was sufficient for them to have reached Nantwich within the time required by the statute, although, from some neglect in the Post-office, they did not reach Nantwich until after that day, we thought the same principle of decision which we had laid down in the case of a notice of objection applied also to a notice of claim; and that as the claimants had done all that was necessary on their part and required of them by the statute, the notices were sufficient. We accordingly reversed the decision made below, and directed the twenty-five names to be restored to the register.

No. 19.—Is a case parallel in all its circumstances with the last, except that this relates to the posting of a notice of objection, instead of a notice of claim. And the revising barrister having held the notice of objection insufficient, and directed the claimant's name to stand on the register, we did, upon the principle laid down in the last case, hold his decision to be wrong, and reversed the same, directing the voter's name to be expunged.

No. 20.—In this case the claimant, James Ashmore, and sixteen other persons, whose cases are consolidated with that of Ashmore, claimed the right to vote for the Northern Division of the county of Notts, as inmates of the Shrewsbury Hospital, describing their qualification to be "freehold interest in lands, buildings, and corn-rents, in lieu of tithes." The question raised for our determination, and upon which our judgment ultimately turned, was, whether the inmates of the hospital, upon the proper construction of the constitutions and the private Acts of Parliament by which the hospital was governed, were entitled, either legally or equitably, to a freehold interest in any lands or rents to the amount of 10l. by the year. And we were of opinion, upon the proper construction of those constitutions and the Acts of Parliament, the inmates had an equitable interest in the lands and rents of the hospital to the amount of 3s. 6d. by the week, and to that amount only, that is, to a smaller amount than 10l. by the year. We, therefore, affirmed the decision of the revising barrister, that the names of the several persons should be expunged from the register.

livered to the claimant on Sunday the 24th; and it was objected by a claimant before the revising barrister, that the notice being delivered and served on a Sunday, such a delivery and service was altogether void, of which opinion was the revising barrister, who thereupon disallowed the notice of objection, and retained the name of the claimant on the list of voters. The Court of Appeal, however, thought the decision was wrong; that the notice of objection directed by this statute was not, as was contended by the respondent, in the nature of a writ or process, the service whereof is prohibited on a Sunday by the statute 29 Car. 2, c. 7, neither was it prohibited by the Registration Act, and they therefore reversed the decision.

The effect of this judgment was to expunge the name of the claimant, and those of twenty-two other persons, whose cases were consolidated with the present.

No. 5.—The claimant in this case described his qualification to vote to consist of two houses, but in the column of his notice to claim, in which the situation of his property ought to be described, he inserted the number of one of the houses in the street in which it was situated, but neglected to insert the number of the other house; and whether this was a compliance with the form prescribed by the 6th Vict. c. 18, schedule (B.), No. 3, was the question. The revising barrister held the notice of claim insufficient, and that the claimant was not entitled to have his name inserted in the list; and we think his decision right. This case disposed of the claims of seven other individuals, which arose under similar circumstances, and were consolidated with this case.

No. 6.—This case proceeded upon a statement of similar facts, and involved the same question with that which was decided by the Court of Appeal in the case of the borough of Dartmouth (No. 2); and three of the judges of the Court who heard the argument in this case, held the notice of objection to be sufficient, whilst the same judge who in the former case held the notice insufficient, retained his former opinion. The Court therefore affirmed the decision of the revising barrister, that the name of the appellant, and the names of five other individuals whose cases were consolidated with the present, should remain expunged from the list.

No. 7.—The question in this case was, whether the claimant, James Bishop, had been duly rated in respect of the premises which he occupied.

The name of Bishop did not appear upon the rate-book; the only name which appeared there was that of the landlord, John Scott; and there appeared upon the rate-book to be a sum of 3l. 2s. 6d. to be still unpaid for rates due on the 6th April preceeding. The revising barrister held that it was incumbent on the claimant (the occupier) to see that those rates had been actually paid on or before the 20th July; and that the evidence produced by him neither shewed actual payment, nor a legal tender of the amount of the rate, and that the claimant was therefore not entitled to vote; and we were of the same opinion, and affirmed his decision.

No. 8.—The objection in this case was taken as to the sufficiency of the description of the qualification in respect of which the claimant had delivered his notice of claim. He had described his qualification as "a house, No. 5, Much-lane, St. Peter-at-Arches, and previously in the occupation of a house, No. 21, St. Mary's-street, in the parish of St. Mary-le-Wigford, Lincoln." The revising barrister held this a sufficient description of two successive occupations, and we affirmed his decision with costs.

No. 9.—The respondent in this case claimed the right to vote in the election of members for the city of London, as a freeman of the city of London, and liveryman of the Company of Bakers. It was objected that he was disqualified, inasmuch as he had been admitted freeman since the 1st of March, 1831, "otherwise than in respect of birth or servitude," which, it was contended, was a disqualification under the 2nd Wm. 4, c. 45, s. 32. The revising barrister decided that the prohibition in section 32 was confined to those cases in which the claimant's right to vote was in respect of his being a Burgess or freeman of any city or borough, and did not extend to the present case, where the claimant's right to vote was that of a freeman and liveryman of the city of London. And the Court of Appeal held this to be the proper construction of the statute, and affirmed the decision.

No. 10.—The question raised upon this case was, whether the value of the house occupied by the appellant was sufficient to confer the right to vote. The revising barrister decided it was not sufficient, stating the facts upon which his decision was founded. The Court of Appeal held this not to be a question of law upon which they had authority to decide, but a question of fact only, for the decision of the revising barrister himself; and that, at all events, as nothing appeared upon the statement to show his decision to be wrong, it must be held by them to be right, and the Court accordingly affirmed the same.

No. 11.—The respondent in this case objected to the name of the appellant being retained on the list of voters for the city of London. The revising bar-

II. General Statement as to Cities and Boroughs.

No. 1.—In this case the appellant had objected to the name of the respondent being retained upon the list of voters for the city of Lichfield, and, in his notice of objection to the overseers, had stated generally, "that he objected to the name being retained in the list of persons entitled to vote in the election of members for the city of Lichfield." But, under the statute, it is the duty of the overseers to make out two lists of voters; one of persons entitled to vote in respect of property occupied within the parish, and another list of persons, not being freemen, entitled to vote in respect of any right other than that of property. And as objection was taken, that the notice of objection delivered by the appellant was not sufficient, inasmuch as it did not specify in which list of voters the respondent's name was to be found; and the revising barrister was of opinion that the notice of objection was insufficient on that ground, and the Court of Appeal has affirmed his decision.

No. 2.—The question in the case No. 2 arose upon the form of the notice of objection sent to the appellant. The notice of objection was signed by the objector (the respondent), with the addition of the true place of his abode, as it was at the time of serving the notice; but this place of abode was different from that which appeared against his name upon the list of voters; and the question was, whether a notice of objection signed with the addition of the true place of abode was sufficient within the meaning of the Act, or whether it was necessary, to constitute a valid notice of objection, that the objector should add the place of abode as it appeared on the list of voters. Three of the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas were of opinion that the description by the true place of abode of the objector was sufficient, contrary to the opinion of the remaining Judge, who held the description must be that of the same place of abode as is inserted in the list of voters. The judgment of the Court was therefore given that this notice was sufficient, and the decision of the revising barrister was thereby affirmed. The cases of eight other persons were consolidated with this appeal.

No. 3.—In this case the question reserved for the consideration of the Court of Appeal was, whether in the case of a person claiming the right to vote for a borough by reason of the occupation of a house as tenant, the fair annual rent was the proper criterion of value, without deducting therefrom the average annual expense of landlord's repairs; and the Court of Common Pleas was of opinion that the fair annual rent was to be considered as the clear yearly value within the meaning of the statute 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, s. 37, and affirmed the decision of the revising barrister to that effect. This decision disposed of the case of seventeen claimants, which were consolidated with the above.

No. 4.—In this case the notice of objection sent by the post to the claimant was put into the post by the objector on Saturday, the 23rd August, and was derist expunged the name of the appellant, upon the ground that he had not been duly rated, as to which he reserved a question for the Court of Appeal. But the Court of Appeal, on consideration of the facts stated in the case, held that the appellant was rated duly in a rate of the premises made in September, 1844, and that such rate must be held in law to continue until a new rate was made, published and allowed, and that the objection therefore did not exist, and reversed the decision accordingly.

No. 12.—In this case the appellant claimed the right to vote in respect of a qualification which was described in the list of voters as "part of a house," and the first question reserved for the consideration of the Court of Appeals was, whether such description was sufficient in point of law; and we held that it was.

The next question reserved for us was as to the sufficiency of the rating. The landlord's name was on the rate with the house opposite to it, and the appellant's name was under that of the landlord, but nothing was carried out against the name of the appellant, nor were the two names connected by a bracket or otherwise; but it appeared to us that a rate so made must be construed to charge the appellant in respect of the premises placed opposite the landlord's name, and as the revising barrister had decided otherwise, we reversed his decision.

No. 13.—The question in this case turned upon the sufficiency of the rating of the defendant to the poor-rate in respect of the house in his occupation, which formed the qualification of his right to vote. But the Court held upon the facts stated in the case, that, notwithstanding the landlord had bargained to pay the poor-rate, and had actually paid it, yet, as the tenant's name was upon the poor-rate, he must be taken to have been bonâ fide called upon, and did bonâ fide pay the poor-rate, within the meaning of the 75th section of the Registration Act, so as to answer the objection, and the Court reversed the decision of the revising barrister.

No. 14.—In this case, also, the question turned upon the sufficiency of the rating of the appellant on the poor-rate. The revising barrister held the rating to be insufficient, but referred the question to the Court of Appeal. Upon consideration of the facts stated by him, that Court thought the name of the appellant did appear on the rate to be the person rated for the premises, within a reasonable construction of that instrument, or that at all events, both landlord and tenant were rated, which would be sufficient, and reversed the decision accordingly.

No. 15.—This case arose upon an objection made by the appellant against the name of the respondent being retained on the list of voters, on the ground of his place of abode inserted in the list being incorrect. The revising barrister corrected the mistake by inserting the true place of abode of the claimant. And the question reserved for our determination was, whether the revising barrister had the power to make that amendment under the 40th section of the Registration Act. And, upon consideration of that section, we were of opinion, that as he had the power of inserting the true place of abode, both where it was entirely omitted, and also where it was insufficiently described for the purpose of being identified, the present case was substantially within the latter branch of the provision. The decision of the revising barrister was therefore affirmed.

No. 16.—The objection raised by the appellant against the name of the respondent being retained on the list of voters for the city of London was, that he was not the occupier of the house in respect of which he claimed the right to vote. The revising barrister retained his name on the list. And as it appeared upon the facts stated, that the respondent, as one of the joint lessees of the house, had the right to occupy with them, and as there is nothing stated to shew the revising barrister to be wrong in his decision that the appellant did occupy, we held we could not do otherwise than affirm his decision.

CRIME IN MANCHESTER AND LIVERPOOL.—The police returns of Manchester and Liverpool for the last year have recently been printed. A comparison suggests itself. The amount of property stolen in twelve months, in Manchester, was 13,213*l.*; in Liverpool, 7,852*l.* Recovered in Manchester, 9,532*l.*; in Liverpool, 2,860*l.* The Manchester amount is swelled by a single item, 4,888*l.* The number of persons in custody in Manchester was 9,770; in Liverpool, 16,588. In Manchester, the summary convictions were 5,117; in Liverpool, 11,993; while the number sent to trial was pretty much the same in both places; 643 here, 667 there. In drunkenness we excel. With us, the number was 9,791; in Manchester, 4,188. The number of public-houses fined in Manchester was 227, and the fines 174*l.*; while the number of beer-houses fined was 483, and the penalties 319*l.* With us, the offending publicans were 176, and the penalties 297*l.* The beer-houses convicted were 250, and the fines 409*l.* In fines for offences against local Acts, the practice differs. The number of summonses in Manchester was 6,015, and the fines 541*l.*; here the summonses were 4,178, and the penalties 10,551*l.* The dock fines constitute the difference. Our neighbours are burdened with 194 habitual thieves, and 82 occasional ones. We have 297 confirmed thieves, and 371 who are only sometimes honest. The Manchester police consists of 435 men; and these were last year fined 168*l.* for misconduct, and rewarded for good conduct with 88*l.* We seem to manage things more liberally. Our force numbers 752 men; they were punished for misconduct to the amount of 101*l.* and rewarded with 458*l.* The number of constables admitted in Manchester last year was 162; in Liverpool, 268. The changes in both forces are rapid. About one-third of the men taken on in Liverpool in 1842 were on last Christmas; two-thirds, or 431, had resigned, or were dismissed. The case is similar in Manchester; the average duration of service hardly exceeds three years.—Liverpool Journal.

COURT OF ALDERMEN.—On Saturday a special Court of Aldermen was held for the purpose of receiving a deputation from the committee appointed relative to the building a new criminal gaol in the room of the present Compter. Mr. Wire, the chairman of the committee, said, that finding it would be impossible to purchase land in the city, except at an enormous rate, they had come to the resolution that the proposed gaol ought to be built out of the city, and that Holloway would be the best site. The cost of the ground for the intended building on the site of the old Fleet prison would be 132,000*l.* while the building would be 78,000*l.* and then only three acres would be obtained; whereas the spot fixed on at Holloway consisted of five acres, and could be purchased for 17,000*l.*—the prison to contain 400 persons. Several Aldermen spoke against this proposition, as being directly at variance with the former resolution of the Court of Aldermen, which was that the prison should be built in the city. After some discussion upon the subject of rather an angry description, Mr. Alderman Musgrove suggested that the deputation should write down their propositions to be submitted to the Court. The deputation then withdrew, and the remainder of the business was conducted with closed doors.

The following buildings are certified as places duly registered for solemnising marriages, pursuant to an Act of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 85:—Holloway Chapel, Camden-road, Holloway; William May, superintendent registrar. The Independent Chapel, situated at Hartshill, in the parish of Mancetter, in the county of Warwick, in the district of Atherstone. The Independent Chapel, or Low Meeting House, situated at Workington, in the parish of Workington, in the county of Cumberland, in the district of Cockermouth. The Adfa Chapel, situated at the Adfa, in the parish of Llanwyddelan, in the county of Montgomery, in the district of Newtown and Llanidloes. Bethlehem Chapel, situated at Peterstone, in the parish of Coychurch, in the county of Glamorgan, in the district of Bridgend and Cowbridge.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

There has been a calm in the legal world during the past week. Every lawyer in London is looking eagerly for the emancipation of the vacation, and business slackens as the holidays approach. A large variety of legal intelligence occupies our columns to-day, and almost as much as is printed is deferred for want of room. It will be seen, on reference to our Parliamentary Report, that, on receiving an intimation from the LORD CHANCELLOR, that the bankruptcy laws were under his consideration, with a view to consolidation and amendment, Mr. BOUVIER withdrew his Bill; we may expect, therefore, the Government measure early in the next session. We invite attention to a report of the case of Newton v. Belcher, at Judge's Chambers (which we give in the proper place), where what we have more than once suggested has been attempted with success,

POLLOCK, C.B. having ordered a stay of proceedings in two of three actions, which had been brought for the same debt against different directors of a railway company, until the other of the three, on which issue had been joined, should be determined. In another column we present a report of an important meeting of the Profession, to concert measures for opposing the obnoxious clauses of the Small Debts Act, now before Parliament. The most effective of the propositions, that urged by Sir GEORGE STEPHEN, if energetically acted upon, can hardly fail to secure the reconsideration and alteration of this—to the Profession—illiberal and unjust measure.

It will be observed, that the very useful Review of Cases in Equity during the last half-year, has been completed, and that of the cases in the Common Law Courts in the two last Terms has been commenced. Thus arranged, they are more easily impressed upon the memory—more readily noted and referred to.

JUDGES' CHAMBERS.

TUCKER v. SLIGH.

A novel but important proceeding was taken in the above cause last Saturday.

A summons had been taken out to set aside a demurrer to the replication as frivolous. The matter was argued by counsel before the Chief Baron, and his lordship made an order, setting the demurrer aside on the ground of its being frivolous. The learned counsel for the defendant, when his lordship was about to make the order, stated, that, before his lordship made the order, he wished to inform him of the course the defendant intended to pursue. He said, that the defendant was desirous to place the point of the validity of the demurrer on the record, that he might be in a position to bring the matter before a court of error if advised to do so. That he, the learned counsel for the defendant, had considered the matter, and that the conclusion he had come to was, that the only mode of getting the matter on the record was by tendering to his lordship a bill of exceptions, under the Statute of Westminster 2 (13 Edw. 1, c. 31); that a bill of exceptions had accordingly been prepared. He then produced the bill of exceptions, engrossed on parchment, and handed it to his lordship, and requested his lordship to seal it. This the Chief Baron wholly refused to do, saying, that a bill of exceptions could not be tendered to a judge sitting at chambers; that his decision was conclusive; that the jurisdiction at chambers was a perfect tyranny. He at the same time added, that if the Court of Common Pleas (where the cause was depending) should be of opinion that he ought to have sealed the bill of exceptions, he would seal it tunc pro nunc. The learned counsel for the defendant then offered to shew to his lordship the authorities upon which the proceeding was founded, but the Chief Baron refused to entertain the matter at all. The defendant's counsel then said, that perhaps his lordship would be good enough to look at the bill, in order to see that it was truly and correctly stated. This, also, his lordship refused to do, and the parties then retired.

Considering the summary mode in which important matters are often disposed of at chambers, where a single judge settles in five minutes what the full Court would frequently not decide under as many hours, and then perhaps in a contrary way, it is highly important to ascertain whether or not the law affords any mode of bringing questions so summarily decided before a court of error. According to the present practice, the only appeal from a judge at chambers is to the Court in which the cause is depending. The objections to this practice are: that in the majority of instances the appeal is, partially at least, an appeal from the judge sitting at chambers to the same judge sitting in court, since it is only when the judges are on circuit that a judge of one court entertains applications in causes depending in another; and, which is the more serious objection, that a party may have judgment signed against him on the judge's decision, his property seized under a f. fe. or himself imprisoned under ce. ss. and detained in prison for months before he has an opportunity of appealing; in short, he may be completely ruined, and by the erroneous decision itself be deprived of the means of procuring its reversal, and of endeavouring to obtain redress for the injury occasioned by it. Whereas, if the matter can be placed on the record, the defendant may, as soon as final judgment is signed, sue out a writ of error, and, by giving bail in error, stay the issuing of execution. And the statute of Westminster the Second seems adapted to meet this very case. It was passed when pleadings were conducted not as now, in the superior courts, in writing, but, ore tenus, in open court, as before a magistrate at the present day; and the evil it was intended to remedy was the summary overruling or disallowing by the Court of some matter alleged by either party by way of plea in the course of the argument, which, when overruled, was never entered on the record, and, consequently, could not be made the ground of a writ of error. And the course it points out is this: the party making the allegation which is disallowed is to write it down and require the judge to put his seal to it, which done, if the record did not itself contain the allegation, the bill of exceptions was taken as part of it, and judgment given upon it. According to the present practice, the bill of exceptions forms part of the record, and the whole is at once brought before a court of error.

Lord Coke, in his commentary on this statute (2 Inst. 427), says that it extends "not only to all courts of record but to the County Court, the hundred, and Court Baron, for therein the judges were more likely to err: and albeit of judgments given in them a writ of error lyeth not, but a writ of false judgment in the Court of Common Pleas, yet the case being in the same or greater mischief, the purview of this statute doth extend to those inferior courts." He also says that "it extends not only to all pleas dilatory and peremptory, &c. and (as hath been said) to prayers to be received, oyer of any record or deed and the like: but also to all challenges of any jurors, and any material evidence given to any jury which by the Court is overruled."

From this it is evident that its primary object was to remedy the mischief of overruling pleas, &c. rather than the rejection of evidence, to which it has been almost exclusively confined in modern practice. In the 9th vol. of his Reports, page 13, b, Lord Coke says that this Act was passed "to prevent precipitation of judges in overruling ex improviso questions in law." "For," he quaintly adds, "it is a good rule in the ninth chapter of Judges, consider, consult, and then give judgment."

It is to be hoped that this question will, before long, be fully and fairly raised, argued, and determined.

SERGEANT'S-INN.
(Before the Chief Baron.)
Wednesday, Aug. 5.
NEWTON v. BELCHER.

Where several actions are brought for the same debt, against different directors of a railway company, the judge will, on affidavit of the facts, make an order to stay proceedings in the causes where pleas have not been delivered until the action on which issue has been joined shall have been determined.

This was an application to the Lord Chief Baron to order all proceedings in two of three actions, which had been brought for the same debt against different directors of a railway company, and in which pleas had not been delivered, to be stayed until the other of the three, on which issue had been joined, should be determined.

Keane appeared to shew cause, and contended, first, that a judge at chambers had no power to make such an order; second, that the case of Ross v. Jacques, 8 M. & W. 135, was conclusive against an application that would, in effect, amount to the trying on affidavit an issue that should be raised by a plea; thirdly, that the affidavit in support of the application ought to confess the cause of action, and should also state that the defendant in the action that was to be proceeded with was within the jurisdiction.

POLLOCK, C. B. would not allow the question of jurisdiction to be argued, as the proper time for discussing it would be by an application to rescind his order. The affidavit he thought sufficient; and the injustice of allowing several actions to be proceeded with against several parties for the same debt was so great as to justify him in granting the application. The order would not be one "by consent; and, if the plaintiff was dissatisfied with it, he would not be precluded from applying to the Court to rescind it.

Order made.

The following article appears in the Morning Herald. We believe that is not the journal alluded to.

We find the following paragraph in the number of the Law Magazine for the present month:—

"Notwithstanding the abandonment of the resolution regarding the reporters by the Oxford and Western Circuits, the practice of excluding the names of many of the counsel who practise in London has been continued in the most inveterate and marked manner. Several instances have been made known to us, especially as relates to the practice before parliamentary committees. Remonstrance has been made, but with no effect."

The foregoing passage is conceived in precisely the same spirit that dictated the proscription of an entire class for the fault of an individual member with whom the retaliating party was too timid to grapple openly. In like manner we are here indulged with a libel upon the entire metropolitan press, solely because the writer cannot or dare not make a direct reference to the journal of which he complains. "The names of several counsel, &c. are excluded in the most inveterate and marked manner." But by whom? "Remonstrance has been made, but with no effect."

And to whom? Does the writer refer to the Morning Herald? or the Morning Chronicle? or the Daily News? If such be his intention, would it not be the fairer and more manly course to specify the act and the journal complained of, in lieu of a general accusation, omitting parties and circumstances, which cannot possibly admit of specific refutation? Nay, it would be only common honesty to "editors and proprietors" to do so, for in the latter part of the paragraph, which we have not quoted, it is implied that the obnoxious practice,—which, assuredly, if it exists, is justly condemned,—"arises from the trickeries of persons who are unfortunately members of the profession," meaning, of course, the reporters employed in the several courts and committee-rooms. Surely, if such be the fact, the offender ought to be held up to public reprobation, in the place of being really screened from detection and punishment by the general charge of misconduct upon the whole press, and which is manifestly and notoriously unjust. As the case has been made out, on the common principle of justice, we are bound to conclude that an accusation, couched in the vague general terms which Burke so forcibly describes as the patois of fraud, is devoid of foundation, and to dismiss it with contempt. It was, as we before intimated, precisely the same fear of grappling with the delinquent journal itself that led to the act of injustice which embroiled the bar with the entire press, and from which contest the former had to retreat, par-mula non bene relicta, to a more tenable position in the public estimation than that from which the attack was commenced. Let it not be supposed, at the same time, that our adherence to our own order blinds us to what is due to the learning, position, and character of the English bar. Let the Law Magazine bring forward, if it can, a direct and specific charge, supported by proof, and we promise it our hearty co-operation in reforming the abuse, if it exist; but until it does that we must treat the whole story, on which a superstructure so imposing has been raised, as unworthy of credit. We confess we are the more inclined to this incredulity, remembering the inconsiderate article in which the Law Magazine, avowedly as the organ of the Bar, recommended the circuits to adhere to their principle of proscription, and which was published, if we recollect rightly, within a few days of the meeting of her Majesty's counsel, presided over by the then Attorney-General, when the practice of reporting for newspapers was formally vindicated against the stigma with which it had been sought to be branded. We advise the Law Magazine to beware how it revive the controversy now so happily at rest.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

At the Court at Buckingham Palace, the 1st day of August, 1846: present—The Queen's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

The Right Hon. Granville George Earl Granville was, by Her Majesty's command, sworn of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, and took his place at the Board accordingly.

Her Majesty having been pleased to appoint the Right Hon. Thomas William, Earl of Leicester, to be Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the county of Norfolk, his lordship took the oaths appointed to be taken thereupon, instead of the oaths of allegiance and supremacy.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Samuel Nicholas Rooks, esq. to be her Majesty's Solicitor-General for the Island of Tobago.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Richard Langworthy Hington, esq. to be one of the Keepers of the Peace, in the borough of Clifton Dartmouth Hardness, in the county of Devon.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Samuel Milner

Barton, of Manchester, in the county of Lancaster, gent. and William Frankish, of Kingston-upon-Hull, gent. and John William Cudworth, of Leeds, in the county of York, gent. to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

THE NEW MASTER IN CHANCERY.—The official notification of the appointment of Mr. J. J. Murphy, Q.C. reached the learned gentleman while in attendance at the Cork assizes. Mr. Murphy has returned all his briefs, and will at once proceed to Dublin to enter upon the duties of his new office. The new Master, as well as his immediate predecessor, was born in the "beautiful city" of Cork, and is nephew to the Right Rev. Dr. Murphy, one of the most learned and tolerant of the Irish Roman Catholic hierarchy, and, moreover, a decided anti-Repealer.

IRELAND.—Jeremiah J. Murphy, esq. the new Master in Chancery, has appointed James Watt, esq. the Queen's Proctor in Ireland, his examiner, an office worth 800*l.* a year.

COURT PAPERS.

CHANCERY ORDER.—The following order has been made and issued by the Lord Chancellor, appointing the last days for closing the books of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, for the payment of money out of court, and for the purchase, sale, or transfer of stock, &c. and a copy of such order posted in the registrar's office, Chancery-lane:—

"Court of Chancery.

"Whereas it is proper that the accounts kept by the Accountant-General of this Court should be examined and compared, in order to settle the same. And whereas it will require considerable time to perfect such examination, and it is necessary that the time should be appointed for closing the books of the said Accountant-General for the purposes aforesaid. It is ordered that the books of the Accountant-General be closed from and after Saturday the 15th of August to Thursday the 29th of October, in order to adjust the accounts of the suitors with the books kept at the Bank. That, during that time, no draft for any money, or certificate for any effects under the care and direction of this Court, be signed or delivered out by the said Accountant-General, or any stocks or annuities accepted or transferred by him, relating to the suitors of this Court. That no purchase, sale, or transfer be made by the said Accountant-General, unless the order, request, or registrar's certificate be left at his office on or before Friday next, the 7th of August. That no order for the payment of any money out of court, which may be then in court, be received at the Accountant-General's Office after Monday next, the 10th of August. That, in order that the suitors may have notice hereof, and apply to the Court as there shall be occasion to have money paid to them out of the Bank, or stocks, or annuities transferred to them before the said 15th day of August, this order is to be affixed in the offices of the court."

JUDGES' CHAMBERS, SERJEANTS'-INN. — The Lord Chief Baron has issued a notice altering the time of sitting at his chambers as vacation judge for the remainder of the vacation, and on Monday sat at eleven o'clock instead of ten, as heretofore. Summonses will, therefore, be returnable and attendable at that hour for the future.

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE WILDE.—Sir Thomas Wilde entered upon his duties as Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas at Staffordshire Assizes. His lordship, who sat in the Nisi Prius court, has made a most favourable impression on all parties who have witnessed his labours, which have been marked by great suavity and patience, as well as a clear and quick perception of the chief points of a case. His lordship is accompanied by Lady Wilde (lately Mademoiselle D'Este), who has attracted considerable attention, in consequence of her relationship to the Royal family, being a daughter of the late Duke of Sussex, by Lady Augusta Murray, to whom his Royal Highness was privately married at Rome. Her ladyship is almost portly in person, and bears considerable resemblance to members of the family of George the Third. Her ladyship and Sir Thomas did not occupy the apartments at the judges' house, but had lodgings in the house of Mr. Hughes, surgeon.—Staffordshire Mercury.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

SMALL DEBTS ACT.—MEETING OF THE PROFESSION.

A MEETING of Members of the Legal Profession was held at the Gray's-inn Coffee-house on Tuesday last, to consider the best mode to be adopted for opposing certain clauses in the Small Debts Bill, which materially affect the duties and emoluments of attorneys and solicitors in England.

Mr. PRESTON (of the firm of Elmslie and Preston) took the chair. After stating that in common, he feared, with too many of his legal brethren, he was ignorant of the enactments of the proposed Bill, called upon Mr. Clarke, who had convened the meeting, to explain to them the nature and operation of the proposed measure.

Sir GEORGE STEPHEN, and several members of leading firms, here entered the room.

Mr. CLARKE was sorry it had devolved upon so young and humble a member of the Profession to perform a duty which he should have supposed many older and more influential attorneys would have been eager to discharge; but he found that no danger, however imminent, could induce the majority of the Profession to awaken from the lethargy which, in matters affecting their interest as a body, was unfortunately too proverbial. Like many others, he read in the papers of the numerous petitions from various parts of the country in favour of this Bill; he also saw that it was the determination of the Government, if not effectually opposed, to pass the measure this session, and his curiosity induced him to obtain a copy of the Bill. No sooner had he perused it, than he felt it his duty to inquire if any thing was doing amongst the Profession to check the progress of the measure. He had inquired of some twenty attorneys, and not one of them knew the contents of a single clause—they had all heard and read there was such a Bill—but “it was the old story over again, and, no doubt, it would not be allowed to pass this session.” He, however, felt persuaded it would pass this session; but whether this should be the case or not, he trusted such a Bill would not be allowed to proceed through all its stages without some remonstrance on their part; and when he had read to the meeting seriatim, as he should do, each clause of the Bill, he would leave his hearers to judge whether there was not only just ground for complaint, but also for alarm. Mr. Clarke then read to the meeting the various clauses which more materially affected the public and the Profession; amongst these he more particularly alluded to clause 51, whereby a plaintiff, if his claim was above 20*l*. could abandon the assess, and sue in this county court for 20*l*. and next to clause 53, which provides that if the unliquidated balance of any partnership or other account, however extensive or intricate, was under 20*l*.; it might be sued for in this court, so as not only to deprive the Profession of issuing process for debts under 20*l*. but also in many cases above that sum. He then more particularly dwelt upon clauses Nos. 62 and 67, where any plaintiff or defendant might appear themselves, or by any person on their behalf. By clause 79 a barrister or attorney must obtain leave of the Court to appear for either the plaintiff or defendant; but an unqualified person might absolutely, and as a matter of right, appear without any such leave; thus at once opening the court to a swarm of persons of whom he need not further remark. True it was that such persons could not, by clause 73, recover any fee for such attendance; but it was well known to all who were conversant with such matters, that the fee would be exacted beforehand, and the recovery rendered unnecessary. By clause 113, no future ejectments could be brought where the rental was under 50*l*. as the same summary mode was to apply in these courts, as under the Small Tenements Acts, to rentals not exceeding 20*l*. per annum. Mr. Clarke then adverted to clause 20, enforcing certain penalties where actions were brought in the superior courts; descanted on various other parts of the Bill; and concluded by stating that he thought it was the interest of the Profession to write letters to the framers of the Bill, pointing out the defects of these new enactments, before they had passed into law. There could be no doubt about the principles of the Bill; and certainly the terrible costs upon small debts had long ago convinced him that it would have been the duty and interest of the Profession to have promoted a graduated scale of costs upon debts of five, ten, twenty, fifty pounds, and so on; but the sluggish Profession refused to bestir themselves, and the Legislature had taken advantage of their supineness. Mr. Clarke then read to the meeting a petition to Parliament, which he had prepared, setting forth the injury this Bill was likely to entail upon the Profession, by curtailment of their duties and emoluments, unless certain clauses were altered and modified.

Mr. F. HARRISON said that he begged to differ from Mr. Clarke in respect to one observation which had fallen from him, namely, that it was not the duty of the Profession to aid and assist the Legislature to make every measure tending to affect the public, as this Bill did, as perfect as possible, and he thought that the Profession ought to shew that they considered the interests of the public identical with their own.

Mr. CLARKE said the Profession were too rarely consulted upon practical measures, and they would have no credit given nor sympathy shewn them for any assistance they might proffer; in fact, there appeared to be a general leave and license to ruin the Profession—a consummation which was fast approaching.

Sir GEORGE STEPHEN next addressed the meeting.—He said, having heard of the meeting, he attended there out of a desire to aid his professional brethren; not that the Bill in question would much affect him, but it would no doubt affect the major part of attorneys. He could not advise any petition to Parliament, for from his parliamentary knowledge of petitions he knew how they were presented and “laid on the table;” but he thought that if a deputation was formed to wait upon the Lord Chancellor, who was a kind, considerate, affable, and liberal man, and also to wait upon the Attorney-General, Solicitor-General, Sir Fitzroy Kelly, Sir Frederick Thesiger, Mr. Watson, Mr. Stuart, and any other gentlemen of the House of Commons, and that such deputation would explain and shew in what respect certain clauses in this Bill bore hardly upon the Profession, that such representations would receive support and attention much beyond the mere presentation of a petition. Besides, there was no time to be lost; the Bill had passed through committee in the Lords, and in a few days would be in the Commons. Sir GEORGE then strongly commented upon the clause requiring a barrister or attorney to obtain leave of the Court to appear for plaintiff or defendant; he also stated he thought, in justice to the Profession, that a clause ought to be inserted that an attorney of ten years’ standing should at any future time be as eligible for the office of Judge, under this Bill, as a barrister of seven years’ standing. After some further appropriate remarks, Sir GEORGE concluded by proposing the deputation.

Mr. SCOTT next addressed the meeting.—He said that for the last sixteen years he had been watching the endeavours of the Profession to obtain the abolition of the certificate duty; and if ever there was a measure which entitled the Profession to demand the repeal of the certificate duty, it was the present. He then made some humorous remarks as to the free-trade system of the present day, remarking “we must all go with the times.” He certainly did not like many of the clauses of the Bill; and he thought the deputation proposed was preferable to the petition.

Mr. MASTERMAN followed.—The time, he thought, was come when they must be stirring, and he would cheerfully aid and assist to carry out any measure to obtain the modification of such clauses in this Bill as must tend to injure and degrade the Profession. He was in favour of the deputation.

Mr. CURLING said, as a commissioner of the Borough Court of Requests, he could testify to the good effect of the principle of such a Bill as this; and he thought that clause 119 was more in favour of the Profession than they were aware of. It certainly was ambiguous; but still, he thought, it gave the attorneys the right to sue in the superior courts under certain conditions.

The CHAIRMAN then made “a few observations before he put the question of Deputation or Petition,” and inquired whether any one could inform him what the Law Institution was about? Was it not monstrous, that instead of their Hall being thrown open for a meeting like this, and all requisite information, and every assistance given the Profession in a matter of such vital importance to their interests, nothing whatever was done? At least no intimation was given that the Law Institution moved at all in the matter; but, however, whether it moved or not, the Profession must move, or be severely injured.

The Chairman then put the question as to the adoption of Petition or Deputation, and the latter was carried unanimously.

A GENTLEMAN in the room, and a member of the Law Institution, as it was understood, said he thought the meeting were too hasty in supposing nothing had been done or was doing by the Law Institution

—he thought they were at work—but if he found they were not, after hearing the clauses of the Bill as read by Mr. Clarke, he should feel it his duty to withdraw from that Institution.

A Committee of five was then nominated for general purposes, with a view immediately to form the proposed Deputation.

After the usual vote of thanks to the Chairman, and a unanimous vote of thanks to Mr. Clarke for his active services in the cause of the Profession, the meeting, after three hours’ discussion, separated.

THE CIRCUITS.

WESTERN CIRCUIT.

EXETER, July 27.—There are twenty-seven causes entered for trial, six of which are special jury cases; and the calendar contains the names of fifty-two prisoners. The majority of charges are of a comparatively trifling nature; but there are several cases of burglary and three of arson, and also a charge of manslaughter, said to have been occasioned by the improper treatment of a patient. Mr. Baron Platt, in his address to the grand jury, commented with much earnestness upon the non-attendance of a very large majority of the gentlemen whose duty it was to appear. Out of some 150 persons summoned to attend, only sixteen answered to their names, and in order to complete the required number (twenty-three) of grand jurymen, the Court was reduced to the necessity of claiming the services of several gentlemen of the county who were qualified to appear, and who were present, though not called upon by summons.

BODMIN, Aug. 3.—The commission for holding the assizes for the county of Cornwall was opened here on Saturday night, about 11 o’clock, by Mr. Justice Erle, who had been detained at Exeter. The business is heavy for this county, there being 16 causes for trial and 23 prisoners in the calendar. It is hardly possible to conceive a reason for so short a time having been allowed for the assizes in this county; the usual time was a week; but now the commission day was last Saturday, and the assizes for Somerset commence on Thursday at Wells, a long distance off, and very difficult to be got at; business, must, therefore, of necessity, be much hurried.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.

NORWICH, July 23.—Mr. Serjeant Byles opened the commission for this city and the county at large yesterday, on his arrival by the train from Cambridge, and their lordships having attended divine service in the cathedral this morning at ten o’clock, proceeded to the despatch of business in their respective courts at twelve o’clock, Mr. Baron Alderson presiding on the civil side, and Mr. Justice Williams in the criminal Court. The cause list is very light indeed, there being only thirteen causes in all the county, and not one in the city; and though the calendar contains the names of forty prisoners, none of the cases are likely to occupy much time. The calendar embraces one charge of administering cantharides, with intent to murder, which has been ignored by the grand jury; four charges of arson, four of rape, one of burglary, three of housebreaking, one of horse-stealing, one of uttering a forged order for the payment of money, and a variety of minor cases.

IPSWICH, July 29.—Their lordships opened the commission for this county, the last on the circuit, yesterday afternoon, after which they proceeded to partake of the hospitality of Sir William Middleton, at Shrublands-park. This morning the courts were opened at twelve o’clock. There being an entry of eight causes only on the civil court, and thirty-three prisoners on the criminal side, Mr. Justice Williams presided in the Nisi Prius court, and, having disposed of two undefended actions, took next a horse cause, which was only part heard at the rising of his lordship.

HOME CIRCUIT.

GUILDFORD, Friday, July 31.—The commission for the county of Surrey was opened here on Thursday, and business was proceeded with in both courts this morning at ten o’clock; Mr. Baron Parke presiding at Nisi Prius, and Mr. Justice Colman in the Crown Court. The business on the civil side is very heavy, there being 100 causes entered for trial, none of which are special jury cases. There are only twenty prisoners for trial, and it is expected that the criminal business will be got through to-morrow (Saturday), and it is arranged that Mr. Justice Colman shall then try the last thirty common jury cases. The first special jury cause is fixed for Wednesday, and the others will be taken afterwards in their order.

A case which occurred at the Southwark Police-office, on Saturday, furnishes one of a thousand instances which continually demonstrate the necessity of appointing in this country such an officer as exists in Scotland, for the purpose of completing the administration of criminal justice where the parties who have, truly or otherwise, been represented as the objects of illegal violence omit, for any reason, to put the law into motion upon their own account. It seems that a Mrs. Neveson charged a Mr. Innes with having assaulted her indelicately in one of the first-class carriages of the Greenwich Railway. The gentleman having been taken into custody upon the spot, was conveyed to the police-station, and detained in the lock-up house all night; but was, of necessity, discharged on the following morning, upon the ground that the lady was not in attendance to prosecute the charge. Her absence was accounted for, partly by alleged illness, and partly by the fact that the circumstance of Mr. Innes having been kept a whole night in the lock-up house was, in her opinion, a sufficient punishment for the offence which he had committed. Supposing the complaint of Mrs. Neve-son to be well founded, she has endured an outrage for which she has received no appropriate or adequate redress from the deliberate decision of the law; whilst, upon the other hand, supposing Mr. Innes's conduct to have been either misrepresented, or exaggerated, or misunderstood, he is the object of an imputation which affects his character as a gentleman in a very serious degree, but of which he has had no opportunity to give even an explanation. We agree with the worthy magistrate that charges of this nature ought, for the safety of the public, to be thoroughly investigated, and a punishment inflicted commensurate with the offence. In the actual case, however, there existed no means of procuring such an investigation, and the prisoner was discharged as of course. It is true that the lady professed herself to be satisfied with the punishment which the accused party had suffered for his offence. But the punishment was the result, not of the offence, but of the charge; and all persons who have had any experience of actions for false imprisonment are aware that the punishment in question is one which is not unfrequently inflicted upon the innocent. Whether the accused party in the present case is innocent or not, or what, if he be guilty, is the degree of his guilt, are questions which it is impossible to decide, as there exist no means of procuring any further investigation. This would only be effected by a public prosecutor, possessing the power to take up the case upon the part of the public, who, in the present state of the law, pass for nothing in such cases. The propriety of appointing such an officer has been long felt, and is now, we believe, universally admitted in the profession of the law; and as we know scarcely any contemplated improvement in that direction which can be effected with so little disturbance of any part of the machinery of justice and with so much practical advantage to the public, we earnestly hope that it will form a portion of the improvements to be introduced into that department in the ensuing session of Parliament.—Chronicle.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE, July 30.—The calendar of prisoners for the county of Northumberland contains the names of 20 persons, of whom 1 is charged with the crime of rape, 3 manslaughter, 1 burglary accompanied by maliciously wounding, 2 bigamy, 1 robbing and attempt at rape, 3 uttering forged orders for the payment of money, 1 uttering counterfeit coin, 4 larceny, 1 assault on a constable, and 2 rescuing a prisoner. The calendar for the town and county of Newcastle contains the names of 5: 1 charged with the wilful murder of her infant child, 1 burglary, and 3 larceny.

The cause-list for Northumberland contains 8 causes for trial; that for the town and county of Newcastle, 4 causes.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT.

NOTTINGHAM, July 23.—Mr. Justice Coleridge arrived here about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and having opened the commissions for the county, and county of the town of Nottingham, proceeded to charge the grand jury for the town.

Mr. Justice Patteson, having been detained by the civil business at Lincoln, arrived at a much later hour.

Mr. Justice Coleridge proceeded with the trial of the town prisoners, as, after charging the grand jury for the county, did also Mr. Justice Patteson.

There were nine causes in the list for the county, of which The Queen v. Lord Harborough, to be tried here instead of at Okham, was one; and two for the town, of which one, Keely and Another v. Wray and Another, was marked for the special jury; and the other, Levick and Another v. Flather, was an action upon promises, arising out of railway transactions.

The town calendar presented the names of five prisoners only for trial, of whom one was charged with feloniously attempting to kill by suffocation her newborn female child; 1 with forgery; 1 with burglary, and the other two with bigamy.

In the county calendar there appeared the names of 15 prisoners, and 12 cases for trial, of which latter 1 was of burglary, 1 of arson, 1 of stealing from the person, 1 of bigamy, and 2 of rape. The remaining 6 were ordinary charges of larceny.

LEICESTER, July 31.—The commissions for this county and borough were opened yesterday by Mr. Justice Coleridge, at one o'clock. The borough calendar contained only three cases, and the prisoners all pleaded guilty. They were common cases of felony; but in one case, where there had been a previous conviction, the party was sentenced to 14 years' transportation. The calendar for the county, though few as to number, contains some serious charges. There are three cases of manslaughter, two of arson, one for rape, &c. There are ten causes, but none of them, we believe, will present any particular feature of novelty. Three of them are special juries.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.

STAFFORD, July 24.—The commission was opened for this county yesterday, with the usual formalities, by Lord Chief Justice Wilde, who afterwards attended divine service at St. Mary's church. The calendar, containing the names of 29 prisoners, may be analyzed thus:—Murder, 1; manslaughter, 3; rape, 2; forgery, 1; administering poison with intent to murder, 1; concealment of birth, 1; cutting and wounding, 1; robbery with violence, 5; burglary, 1; house-breaking, 1; larceny, 1. There are 15 causes (one a special jury case) on the list.

SHREWSBURY, July 30.—The judges of assize arrived here yesterday, and the commission was opened with the usual formalities. Lord Chief Justice Wilde on the Crown side, and Mr. Justice Maule on the civil side, commenced business at 10 o'clock this morning. The calendar contains the small number of 15 offences, all of a very ordinary character, whilst in the cause list there are but 8 causes, 2 only being special juries. Of the latter number, all, except the special jury cases, were either tried or withdrawn by one o'clock.

HEREFORD, Aug. 2.—The commission for this county was yesterday opened by Lord Chief Justice Wilde. There are 23 prisoners for trial, of whom 1 is charged with cutting and maiming, with intent to murder, 1 with assault and robbery, 10 with burglary, 5 with housebreaking, 2 with horse-stealing, and 4 with larceny. In the list there are 16 causes, of which 8 are special jury cases. This morning the Lord Chief Justice attended divine service at All Saints' Church, the repairs of the cathedral not being yet completed.

NORTH WALES CIRCUIT.

CHESTER, Aug. 3.—The business of these assizes commenced this day before Lord Chief Justice Deaman and Mr. Baron Rolfe. The calendar contains 31 prisoners, of whom 2 are charged with arson, 1 burglary, 4 cutting and maiming, 1 forgery, 2 horse-stealing, 4 manslaughter, 2 murder, 5 with rape, 3 receiving stolen goods, 4 with stealing from the person, 2 unnatural crime, and 1 with a minor offence. The cause list contains only 9 cases, 2 of which are special juries, and possess some interest. The whole of the common jury cases, which were of no public interest, were disposed of to-day.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.—On Wednesday evening a very numerous meeting took place at the Hall of Commerce, Threadneedle-street, for the purpose of hearing from the Rev. Edward Muscutt a lecture on the constitution and abuses of ecclesiastical courts. Earl Ducie presided, and in opening the proceedings said, they could not but come to the conclusion that it was folly to allow themselves to be over-ruled by courts which owed their origin to the superstition of the eleventh and twelfth centuries. Before we were a Protestant country these courts were borne with, but since the change of our religion they had been constantly reprobated by the country at large. These was no party in the state that supported them; on the contrary, the present Lord Chancellor, Lord Brougham, and Lord Lyndhurst, concurred in recommending their abolition. These courts had stood up against the opinion of the world in consequence of the sponging of the people. In addition to the three eminent lawyers to whom he had alluded, he found that the Archbishop of Canterbury, several of the bishops, and Dr. Lushington were in favour of sweeping away ecclesiastical Courts. From the abolition of them he did not believe any danger would accrue to the church. The only fear for her safety came from her own internal dissensions. The noble earl introduced the Rev. Mr. Muscutt to the meeting. The reverend gentleman, who said that in the movement they were making against the ecclesiastical courts they were influenced by no hostile motives towards the Established Church, gave a short history of the origin of the Peculiars, and adverted to this instance of their mischievous jurisdiction:—The parish of Wokingham, Berks, was a "peculiar" of the Dean of Salisbury. Some time since the church was to be rebuilt, but the chancel being claimed as the property of the dean, he would not allow it to be touched, and Wokingham Church remained to the present day a monument of the folly of perpetuating these peculiars. The first question that would naturally arise was, why the bishop should grant probates and letters of administration? It arose out of the errors of olden times. The church of Rome, in times past, said that as it had the care of a man's soul during his life, it was proper that it should manage his estate after his death, more particularly as they were enabled to give the soul repose. Testamentary power had nothing to do with episcopal duties. He had no hesitation in saying that the bishops conducted the business in a most slovenly manner, dangerous to the state, and discreditable to themselves. For these services they were exorbitantly paid. In the diocese of Canterbury, a probate under 1,000*l.* cost 6*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*; under 2,000*l.*, 9*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*. In the diocese of St. David's, the charge was, under 1,000*l.*, 5*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*; under 2,000*l.*, 7*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*; while in the diocese of Gloucester, the charge was, under 1,000*l.*, 6*l.* 15*s.*; under 2,000*l.*, 9*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*. These and other courts charged what they pleased, chancing whether or not they could get it, for by legal process they could not recover it. The lecturer proceeded to say that it appeared, by evidence taken by the commissioners, that the registrar in the diocese of Chester had his office given to him by his father, the Bishop of Chester, when he was about 14 years of age, and that the remuneration was about 4,000*l.* a year. In 1830 that gentleman had held his office forty years, and it was possible that, before he left this life, he would have derived from his court nearly, if not quite, a quarter of a million sterling. In many parts of the country the places in which the wills were kept were by no means fit for the purpose; in one of the dioceses in the province of York, the registrar was very fond of smoking; he always had a pipe in his mouth, even in the office. When he wanted a light, he was in the habit of going to the "wills," and from the corner of one of them he would tear a piece, exclaiming, "Here goes another testator." The rev. gentleman concluded his lecture by recommending the immediate abolition of these courts. A vote of thanks to Earl Ducie closed the proceedings.

MR. HAYWARD, Q.C.—(From the Morning Herald).—It is reported that the judges have adjourned the further consideration of Mr. Hayward's appeal against his exclusion from the bench of the Inner Temple, but that they are unanimous in their condemnation of the act of injustice of which Mr. Hayward was the victim. We possess no information beyond what is shared by the public, but we certainly feel little difficulty in believing the decision of the judges to be that which justice and reason alike demand from them. It is, we believe, incontestably established that the majority of the masters of the bench themselves were strongly opposed to the arbitrary act of the individual member of their body that has led to the present proceeding, and would be only too happy to avail themselves of any mode of escape that could be devised from the position in which they have been unwillingly placed. Unfortunately, as it seems, there exists no power inherent in the body of benchers themselves to remedy or obviate the mischief that may arise, and in this instance has arisen, without their consent; and if this view be correct, we can scarcely conceive a stronger argument against allowing the old constitution of the governing portion of the society to continue. We say nothing here of the claim or title of the individual who thought proper to fix a stigma upon a gentleman in all respects fully his equal, and, in professional experience, assuredly his superior, because we are willing to argue the question entirely on principle. Assuming, then, that the most distinguished member of the bench of the Inner Temple had committed the injustice of which Mr. Hayward complains, can the mode and manner of rejection be defended? Certainly not. Why, even in a club, to which the learned societies have been somewhat hastily assimilated, the exclusion, we believe, by a single vote is altogether unknown, and even where the number of dissentients is greater, the system, though to some extent necessary, has been often found practically oppressive and unjust. A candidate for admission to a club may be rejected in consequence of a private quarrel with a member, or by reason of a personal antipathy, or any other inadequate cause, and the wrong can scarcely admit of palliation; but still the rejection leaves such candidate free to apply elsewhere, affecting neither his character nor his position in society. But the case to which we refer is in no respect similar to that we have imagined. Mr. Hayward cannot apply elsewhere; his character and position are not unaffected by the sentence which has been pronounced against him. So far, then, as the suffering party is concerned, the analogy between a club and a society does not hold. Let us see whether, as regards the tenure of the authority of the benchers, their case is more plausible. The Inns of Court are private societies. Indeed! For what purpose? What one feature have they in common with other private societies to which they have been likened? What are their duties? They command, as has been well said, the avenue of the most lucrative of all the professions. Is this like the constitution of a private society? How are they supported?—by private subscriptions? No such thing—by property vested in them, not for their own benefit, but in trust for the common body, and by payments made to them by members of the Inns. Are these, we ask again, the ingredients of a merely private society? Clearly not. The masters of the bench are no more than trustees for the public, and ought to be accountable like other trustees, both as to the manner in which the powers and the funds with which they are intrusted have been exercised and employed. It is true that the Court of Queen's Bench has refused, by mandamus, to assist a complainant against the authority of the benchers, although every vestry clerk in the kingdom may claim its aid if improperly deprived of his office; but the real truth is, that the authority and jurisdiction of the benchers of the inns of court are so anomalous and uncertain that no Court can know how to deal with them. We think that those who seek to preserve the undoubted abuse which is referred to will have but little reason to be grateful to the party whose conduct has directed to it the attention of the public.

WILLS.—The Right Hon. Lady E. T. F. Fielding, late of Lacock Abbey, Wilts, relict of the late Rear-Admiral Fielding, has bequeathed all the real estate, funds, stocks, and securities, and all the personal estate which she had the power to dispose of, to her daughter, H. H. M. Fielding, in exclusion of her other daughter, the Countess of Mount Edgumbe, the countess being amply provided for. Also bequeaths to her said daughter Henrietta all her own estate and effects, and has appointed her, together with her son, W. H. Fox Talbot, esq. executors. Barron Field, esq. formerly Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Gibraltar, but late of Torquay, Devon, has bequeathed to his brother, F. J. Field, esq. of Regent's-park, the piece of plate which had been presented to their father by the City of London, and named in his will many persons to whom he wishes a mourning-ring or other token of remembrance to be given. To his sister-in-law, Mrs. A. Field, an annuity under certain provisions. The residue of his estate and effects he leaves to his wife and brother, who are his executors in trust, for his wife to receive the interest, and then to his godson, E. N. Swainson, and the principal when he is of age; but in the event of his not attaining a vested interest, the whole to be equally divided among the testator's brothers and sisters.

The Lords of her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council had a meeting on Wednesday, in the council chamber, to consider a petition of the provost and fellows of the College of Eton against a scheme of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for carrying into effect certain alterations in the dioceses of Oxford and Salisbury. Mr. Bethel, Q.C. was heard by their lordships during the whole of the sitting. The lords present were, the Lord President, the Lord Privy Seal, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, the Vice-Chancellor of England, and the Judge of the Admiralty Court. The Hon. William Bathurst was the Clerk of the Council in waiting. The case was adjourned.

RAILWAY ACTIONS.—The notion that any plaintiff would get a verdict, whatever might be the cause of action, against railway provisional committee men, received a severe check at Lincoln last week, where, in every case, the plaintiff was nonsuited. In one case the sanction of the party to the use of his name was not sufficiently proved; in another, an engineer made a lumping charge of 70*l.* a mile for his survey, and when called upon in chambers to furnish particulars, pleaded an agreement, but on the trial no agreement was proved. In the third case, the allottee had brought his action before the company, which was a bond fide one, had been dissolved. There is a rumour of an entirely new class of actions for next Term, where engineers will figure as defendants instead of plaintiffs; on the same ground that a medical man mistreating his patient, or an attorney misdirecting his client, is punishable in his purse; so it seems the engineer, who grossly blunders in his survey, is to be brought to book by the unfortunate shareholders victimised on "standing orders."—Lincolnshire Chronicle.

DISSOLUTION OF RAILWAY COMPANIES.—A correspondent thus answers some questions referring to the "winding up" of railways, which were inserted the other day:—"If the dissolution is carried as an act of bankruptcy, the official assignee will sift all the charges ab initio, and allow such only as are proper; and if the dissolution is carried as not constituting an act of bankruptcy, the funds will be distributed by the directors; but in either case a shareholder or shareholders may have the accounts passed before a Master in Chancery, who will allow such payments only as he may consider right. Shareholders have much more power over their directors if they can get the company dissolved than they otherwise have."—Times.

THE LICENCE OF THE BAR.—In an action brought at our late assizes, by one Henson against Mr. Barrow, late high sheriff, a young woman named Eleanor Wilson, was called to prove that the plaintiff had been arrested in the town and not in the county of Nottingham—a circumstance which formed the ground of action. During the examination of the girl, it came out that she and her two sisters, whose united earnings amounted to 14*s.* a week, supported their parents. The judge (Coleridge) demanded, "How came you by that black silk scarf, and the other things you have on?" The girl, bursting into tears, replied indignantly, "They are paid for. I do not know why I should be asked such a question." We confess we do not marvel at the girl's indignation, or at her surprise that such an inquiry should proceed from the judicial bench. Mr. Justice Coleridge asked a very thoughtless and preposterous question. Why cavil at the decency of the young woman's appearance, or hazard a grave insinuation, when a moment's reflection must tell him that poor people, subpoenaed on a trial, if they cannot make what they conceive to be a creditable appearance out of their own stock of apparel, have recourse to friends or neighbours, that they may shew that respect to the Court, which, we imagine Eleanor Wilson will not henceforth be inclined to feel, or be anxious to disseminate. Mr. Whitehurst, the defendant's counsel, taking the cue which the judge had suggested, asked, "Where did she get that fine silk scarf, and bonnet decked out in flowers?" Unwarrantable insinuations we firmly believe them to have been—discreditable we know they were. We are given to understand that this girl, Eleanor Wilson, has been in the employment of a highly respected lace-manufacturer of this town for a period of eight years, and that that gentleman can give her a most unexceptionable character.—Nottingham Mercury.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

At the annual general meeting of the members of the Society, held in the Hall, on Tuesday, May 12, 1846, Michael Clayton, esq. in the chair; the following report of the council was read by the secretary:—

The council, in proceeding to state briefly the measures which have been adopted in the course of the past year in furtherance of the objects of the Society, and the general management of its affairs, have first to notice the numerous projects for the alteration of the Law and the practice of the Courts, which have called for much attention on the part of the Profession. The several Bills which remained under the consideration of Parliament at the time of the last annual meeting were duly considered with reference to their operation and effect on professional practice. Amongst the measures then pending, and which were passed at the latter part of the Session, were the Acts for the Amendment of the Law of Real Property, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106; the Act for Rendering the Assignment of Satisfied Terms Unnecessary, c. 112; the Acts for Facilitating the Conveyance of Real Property and the Granting of Leases, c. 119 and 124; the Small Debts and Local Courts Act, c. 127; the Documentary Evidence Act, c. 113; the Act relating to the Testamentary Disposition of Funds, c. 97; the Act for Facilitating the Administration of Justice in Chancery, c. 105; and the Act for Abolishing the Seal Office, c. 34.

There were also other Bills before Parliament which did not receive its sanction: namely,—for the Consolidation of the Ecclesiastical Courts; for Regulating Charitable Trusts; for Amending the Law of Debtor and Creditor; for Enabling the Service Abroad of Common Law Process; for Amending the Law relating to Clerks of the Peace and Magistrates' Clerks; for Admitting the Evidence of Parties in Civil Actions; for Declaring the Rights of Parties in reference to Future Claims, and various other measures.

All these Bills received the attention of the council, and on many of them observations were submitted, and objections and suggestions made in the proper quarter. In the present session the council have also had under their consideration several Bills already before Parliament, namely, the Bills for Establishing a General Registry of Deeds; for Regulating Charitable Trusts; for Amending the Law of Bankruptcy and Insolvency; and several Bills for Establishing County Courts. These have already been under the consideration of several special committees, and the council will also bestow their best attention on the other Bills which have been announced to be brought before Parliament, relating to the Short Forms of Settlements, Mortgages, Leases, and other deeds and Instruments in Conveyancing Practice.

The proposed change which was suggested last summer in the time of holding the circuits, and the consequent alteration of some of the Terms, was, by the direction of the Secretary of State for the Home Department, brought before the council, and the sentiments of a considerable number of the members of the Society most interested in the subject having been collected, the council were prepared to make several suggestions; but, owing to the lateness of the session when the measure was introduced, it was postponed, and the proposition has not yet been revived.

In furtherance of the suggested removal of the courts from Palace-yard to the neighbourhood of the Inns of court, the council presented a petition to the House of Commons; and the special committee of the house on that subject having been revived, further evidence was adduced, and the plan of a new site suggested, situate west of the Institution, and extending from Carey-street to the Strand. The evidence has been printed, accompanied by a map.

The council have received numerous complaints of mal-practice of attorneys, which they much lament, and to which they have paid due attention. They have also been informed of many unqualified persons acting as attorneys. In one of the instances of mal-practice, on an application to the Society, the Court struck the party off the roll; in several cases the council have been advised by their counsel that the evidence was insufficient; and in those cases they have not interfered; other complaints are still under consideration, particularly in regard to unqualified persons practising at the quarter sessions; and the council have pleasure in stating that the Court of Queen's Bench in the course of last Term decided the case of Reg. v. Buchanan in favour of the views of the Profession on this point. The Court said the defendant was indicted for practising as an attorney in conducting an appeal at the quarter sessions, namely, for practising in a manner which was forbidden by the second section of the recent Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73). Disobedience to the Act of Parliament was an indictable offence. The demurrer having been overruled, the defendant applied for leave to plead to the indictment, but the Court refused the application, saying, it was unreasonable where the Act of Parliament was very plain.

During the past year an application for re-admission as an attorney by a recent member of the Bar, who had been disbarred for misconduct, was successfully resisted by the Society; and several cases for the renewal of the certificates of persons who had ceased to practise have been investigated, and such steps adopted as the circumstances of each rendered necessary.

Various usages of the Profession have been under the consideration of the council; and, where any general usage could be ascertained, the result has been recorded in the usage book kept at the secretary's office, which is open to the inspection of every member of the Society.

Connected with this subject, may be mentioned the difficulties lately raised in the office of the Registrar of Deeds in Middlesex, as to the party by whom the memorial should be executed; and, though the registrar has, for the present, modified the rule which he at first laid down, and the inconvenience occasioned by it has been diminished, there are still some questions which it is highly desirable should be finally settled; the council are directing their attention to that object, and they think it probable that it will be expedient to make an application to Parliament to amend the Registry Act.

Amongst other matters of professional inconvenience which the council have been desirous of removing, were the delays which took place in passing accounts at the Legacy Duty Office. A memorial to the Commissioners of Stamps having been signed by many members of the Society, the council addressed the commissioners on the subject, and an interview was appointed with the chief commissioner, which was attended by the president; and the council have the pleasure of reporting that the chief commissioner expressed on the part of the board the strongest desire to accommodate the Profession in every respect, and to carry into effect a suggestion that the transaction of business might be considerably facilitated by a more extensive subdivision of the alphabetical arrangement of the books.

The subject of the Gratuities of Counsel's Clerks has been renewed, in consequence of a larger amount than is specified in the scale approved by the judges having been peremptorily retained by a clerk as a matter of right. Mr. Samuel Cotton, the solicitor in that case, petitioned the court, and conducted his case in person; and, though the Master of the Rolls decided, as the council had anticipated, that he had no jurisdiction over a barrister's clerk, his lordship expressed an opinion which will be satisfactory to the Profession, viz: that "clerks' fees can only be considered as gratuities, which the solicitor or party consulting counsel may pay or not at his own option; that there is no legal demand; but clerks' fees are usually by custom paid, and are allowed on taxation to the amount mentioned in the scale approved by the Lord Chancellor and the other judges."

It appeared, on the hearing of Mr. Cotton's case, that a larger amount than that mentioned in the scale had been paid by some solicitors. The council therefore deem it advisable to send the fixed scale of gratuities, not only to all the members of the society, but to every London solicitor, at the same time urging them to give positive directions to their clerks not to exceed the scale in any case; and they trust that this resolution will be strictly adhered to, and thus prevent all future unpleasant disputes and discussions with counsel's clerks.

The tax on the Profession of the Annual Certificate Duty has not been lost sight of, but the council have had no opportunity during the present session of Parliament of bringing the subject prominently forward with any prospect of success. It will, however, still engage their attention, and they trust that ultimately this unjust burthen will be removed.

The council have continued their communications with the several provincial law societies, on such matters as seemed requisite for the general interest of the Profession.

Their attention having been called to a projected Company for executing Trusts, under wills and settlements, which was about to be chartered, the council directed a caveat to be entered, and a copy of the proposed charter to be obtained; but on ascertaining the terms of the charter, it was not deemed requisite to offer any opposition, and the caveat was withdrawn.

The examination of candidates for admission has been conducted in the usual manner; but a smaller number of candidates have presented themselves during the past than in any former year; 346 were examined, and of these, 37 were not passed, thus reducing the number in four terms to 309.

The business of the Annual Registration of Attorneys proceeds satisfactorily; and it affords great facilities in ascertaining who are entitled to practise, and in checking to a considerable extent the encroachment of unqualified persons.

Under the authority of the Charter and Bye-laws, the council proceeded to settle the Regulations for conducting the business of the Society in its various departments; and these regulations, with the Charter and Bye-laws, have been printed. They have also re-printed the rules and orders of Court, and the recent Acts relating to attorneys and solicitors; and the future rules and orders will be printed and circulated in the same form for the use of the members.

The lectures have been continued, as heretofore, on conveyancing; on common law and criminal law; and on equity and bankruptcy; and have been well attended.

Additional purchases have been made to the library to the amount of 311l. 19s. 6d.; and various donations of works have been received from their respective authors, and from several members of the Society, a list of whom is in the library.

The accounts for the past year have been examined by the auditors; and their report, which has been open for the inspection of the members since the 15th of April, will be submitted to the general meeting for approval.

Pursuant to the bye-laws under the New Charter, the council have agreed to let the rooms, cellars, and premises occupied by the club for the use of the members thereof, as tenants from year to year, subject to the rules and regulations submitted to and approved by the council, it being agreed that the council shall have power to determine the tenancy by giving six months' notice.

Since the annual meeting on the 24th of June last, sixty-three new members have been elected, and after deducting the number retired, the Society now consists of 1,363 members.

(Signed) MICHAEL CLAYTON,
President.

The following resolutions were passed at the annual general meeting:—

Resolved,—That Samuel Amory, Thomas Clarke, Richard Harrison, Bryan Holme, Edward Lawford, Robert Wheatley Lumley, Thomas Metcalfe, Charles Ranken, Charles Shadwell, and Richard White, be and they are hereby deemed and declared to be elected Members of the Council, in lieu of those who go out of office by rotation.

That Germaine Lavie be and he is hereby deemed and declared to be elected a Member of the Council, in lieu of John Teedales deceased.

That Edward Rowland Pickering be and he is hereby deemed and declared to be elected President of the Society.

That Charles Ranken be and he is hereby deemed and declared to be elected Vice-president of the Society.

That James Leman, William Sharp, and William Woodrooffe, be and they are hereby deemed and declared to be elected Auditors of the accounts of the Society.

Read the report of the council.

Resolved,—That the report be received and entered on the minutes.

That such parts of the report as the council think fit be printed for the use of the members.

Read the auditors' report of the accounts of the Society from the 31st December, 1844, to 31st December, 1845.

Resolved,—That the auditors' report be approved and signed by the chairman.

Resolved,—That the best thanks of this meeting be offered to those members of the Society who have so handsomely presented gratuitously their shares in the property of the Society, under the late charter.

(Signed) MICHAEL CLAYTON,
President.

And Resolved,—That the cordial thanks of this meeting be presented to Mr. Clayton for his able conduct in the chair.

(Signed) R. MAUGHAM, Secretary.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

General Meeting, July 15, 1846.

Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE in the chair. The minutes of the last meeting (the 1st inst.) were read and confirmed. The following members were ballotted for and elected:—William Marratt, esq. solicitor, Thomas Metcalfe, esq. solicitor, John Lewis Prevost, esq. John Abel Smith, Esq. M.P. Samuel Jones Lloyd, esq. as representing Jones, Lloyd, and Co.; Bazett David Colvin, esq. and the Rev. Charlton Lane, M.A.

It was resolved, "That a committee be appointed to consider the best means of extending the range of the Society's operations, to consist of the following members:—The Earl of Devon, Lord Nugent, Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque, Mr. Commissioner Fane, Mr. Ewart, M.P. the Hon. E. P. Bouverie, M.P. Mr. Pitt Taylor, Mr. Symonds, Mr. Neale, Mr. Edward Cooke, Mr. Webster, Mr. Thomas Parker, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Ashton Yates, Mr. Ingram Travers, Mr. Vizard, and Mr. James Stewart.

The report of the Committee on the Law of Property on the following reference: "To consider whether, in connexion with a General Register, the principles of insurance of titles might not be introduced," was referred back to the committee to consider whether any and what alterations in the law were necessary, in order to carry the proposed plan into effect.

General Meeting, July 29, 1846.

WILLIAM EWART, Esq. M.P. in the chair. The minutes of the last meeting (the 15th inst.) were read and confirmed. The following members were ballotted for and elected:—Arthur Kett Barclay, esq.; W. G. Prescott, esq. banker; and Joseph Travers, esq. A communication from Mr. Gerrard, solicitor, as to the state of the Court of Chancery, was read.

Adjourned till Wednesday, the 12th of August, at half-past four o'clock precisely.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Your columns being always open to all instances of professional malpractices, I venture to forward to you the enclosed—one of a numerous class of offenders, including in its ranks two members of the Bar—who have, in the most polite and gentlemanly manner, forwarded a statement of their peculiar advantages for carrying on the system of cramming for the examination of articulated clerks. No sooner does the list make its appearance, than these harpies flock down, and carefully take each new name, and forthwith they forward their circulars; all are, if you may believe them, very respectable and experienced; in some the fees are "very moderate, and can be made contingent on the student's success, if required." (A form strongly to be recommended to the "no cure, no pay" doctors, mutatis mutandis.) Others have "prepared upwards of three hundred and ten gentlemen," and "continue to receive pupils." This form is very suitable for schoolmasters and others of that elementary branch of education. Others, again, "confidentially communicate," that they "systematically read (both privately and in class) with gentlemen both before their examination and after, &c.;" and "their method of study fully justify them in offering assistance for as moderate a remuneration as the custom of the Bar will admit." This last is particularly recommended to advertising barristers, i.e. such of that branch of the Bar as are desirous of whitewashing their consciences with an appeal "to the customs of the Bar," at the same time that they proclaim, by the heading "confidential communication," that they are fully aware of the dangerous position in which they would stand were their circulars to be published, as they deserve. Surely a barrister—quid barrister—can do no wrong! Then why, with such cowardice, do you acts under a veil?—which, by appealing to the generosity of the party addressed, prevents that exposure of the actual party committing such flagrant breaches of professional etiquette which their conduct clearly merits. For myself, I feel that no terms are to be kept with such parties, and therefore, while I may not declare the name, I feel I am quite justified in showing up the conduct. What is the difference between this and advertising for briefs or applying for hire? Nothing but this—that the latter is general, whilst the circular applies directly to the party addressed; the one may pass over unnoticed by those interested in the matter—the other comes directly home to them. I doubt not these immaculate "confiders" would be duly horror-struck at the idea of the advertisement—"Wanted, a few briefs, by a barrister having a little spare time on his hands, and who thoroughly understands his business. Those who may entrust him with their commands may depend on a careful attention being bestowed, and every effort consistent with 'the customs of the Bar' will be made to ensure success. References to several Queens's counsel, judges, attorneys, solicitors, &c. &c. It may be said that the advertiser has taken his degrees at one of our Universities, and has been called several years;" or at the plying, as Punch some time back depicted it—"Want a barrister, Sir?—Barrister, Sir? here you are—now's your time!" and yet such men as these are actually playing dirtier tricks than any of these—quietly and treacherously undermining their brethren of the Bar. Surely, Sir, hugging attorneys is nothing to this; for that does not go the length of begging business as this does. I need not endeavour to prove it unprofessional, the covert way in which it is done clearly demonstrates the consequences are very clear; the benchers of the Inner Temple have already summoned one gentleman, who has figured in this style, before them, and disbarment is expected to be the effect of a repetition of the offence, when laid before the Bench. But now for a touch at the members of that branch of the Profession with which I am more immediately connected, who carry on this improper plan: the one I forward herewith is a specimen—a more perfect insult to any one of the slightest degree of gentlemanly feeling cannot well be devised. Does Z think that, if I have a particle of honesty about me, I would confide the interests of my clients and of myself to such a respectable practitioner as himself? Does he think I would barter those interests for my own instruction? Or does he think that I should look out the most proper man for the purpose, without regard to personal advantage? These questions carry their own answer, I shall not therefore attempt one; but merely add, that, if this be wrong in barristers, it clearly is the same in attorneys; they are covertly interfering with others, and playing equally dirty tricks. In a barrister, hedged in as he is with etiquette, it certainly stands forth more prominently; but, in an attorney, is it not teaching the young articulated clerk the way he should not go? Is it not at once bringing him into contact with the lowest of his Profession? And can we be afterwards astonished if he does not hesitate at taking the lowest and meanest advantages, both of his client and of his opponents? I must add, in fairness, that the one I inclose is the worst of the kind; but for that reason I venture to make it known, as showing the lengths to which the system leads. One of them, lithographed (showing the wholesale nature of the proceeding), refers me to a "Mr. J." at Saunders and Bennings, 43, Fleet-street; the letter bears a very suspicious resemblance to one in the third volume of the Law Times, p. 191, cc. 1 and 2; is it the same? I am, Sir, yours, &c.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I have lately been reading the first volume of "Lord Campbell's Lives of the Chancellors," and in the 275th page of that volume find the following paragraph:—"The qualifications of the Chancellor now became of great importance to the due administration of justice, not only from the increase of his separate jurisdiction, but from the practice for the common law judges, when any question of difficulty arose before them in their several Courts, to take the advice of Parliament upon it before giving judgment. In a case which occurred in the King's Bench, in the 39 Edw. 3, Thorpe, the chief justice, says, 'Go to the Parliament, and as they will have us do, we will, and otherwise not.' The following year Thorpe himself, accompanied by Sir Hugh Green, a brother judge, went to the House of Lords, where were assembled twenty-four earls, bishops, and barons, and asked them, as they had lately passed a statute of Jeoffails, what they intended thereby? Such questions, which were frequent in this reign, must have been answered by the Chancellor." To this paragraph the learned author has appended the following note:—"If the Lords were still liable to be so interrogated, they would not unfrequently be puzzled, and the revival of the practice might be a check to hasty legislation."

Now Sir, in my humble opinion, I really consider that in the last paragraph, Lord Campbell has applied the rod to his own back, and not merely lashed himself, but also given a cut to another Ex-Chancellor (equally fond with himself of legislation); for, if I err not, it is the pretty general opinion of the Profession that those two noble lords will ever be celebrated for the crudity and obscurity of the legislative measures introduced by them, or passed by their recommendation; measures which some of the judges have declared impossible to be understood. I hope Lord Campbell will bear his note (p. 275, Vol. 1, of the Lives of the Chancellors) in mind, whenever he brings forward any measure for the alteration of the law.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"G." thus complains of the apathy of the Profession:—

I most fully concur in the sentiments of your correspondent, "A Devonshire Attorney." The Profession is truly apathetic, spell-bound! Did the members of the Medical Profession take things so quietly when their interests were invaded? No; they rose to a man; called meetings in all quarters, petitioned, and adopted every legitimate means of defending and upholding their rights; and that, too, in a most systematic and business-like manner. The result is generally known. Let us follow their praiseworthy example, and promptly. Why should we, who are foremost in the fray when the interests of others are attacked, lie torpid as it were, and submit not only to wrongs but insult (for in no other light can I consider the certificate duty); and that, too, at the hands of clumsy craftsmen, to whose works we have but to refer to convince ourselves of their utter inaptitude to the task of conveying reform? One would really suppose the items "Attorneys" and "Solicitors" had been expunged from the social account, did we not know that their existence is essential to its arriving at a balance. I trust you will not cease to agitate until we evince some not-to-be-mistaken symptoms of returning animation.

"P. R. A." desires that something may be done with respect to the Certificate Duty. But what? and how? and by whom?

Allow me to ask, is it possible this Session to bring before the House of Commons the question of the Attorneys' Certificate Duty, so as to prevent the robbery of next November? Some of your fellow journalists seem to be congratulating themselves and the Profession on the very excellent sprinkling of lawyers in the new ministry, but, as you say, the attorneys have no representative to watch the ways and means.

"W. R." thus comments on the changes effected and threatened in the law and practice of conveying:—

A correspondent of the LAW TIMES, in one of its former numbers, has, I believe, answered the like inquiry now made by "an Old Subscriber," arising under Lord Brougham's Act "to facilitate the conveyance of real property," on the point raised with respect to the progressive duty; but not being able at this moment to refer to the number containing the answer, I venture to state my view of the Act in reference to the point in question.

The Act, whether framed by his lordship or not, carries sufficient marks on the face of it, and of its schedules, to show that it was prepared by a mind accustomed to analytical science, as the Satisfied Terms Act has been said to have been the lucubration of a metaphysician, affording an example of the saying that "nothing is but what is not." As the mathematical sciences proceed on surer grounds than mere speculative theory, so perhaps there is less reason for doubt in regard to the more important statute of the two. Its mathematical formation appears in the "directions" in the second schedule. There the author portrays his love of substitution, than which nothing is more frequent in the solution of algebraical questions; and by making Column No. 1 to represent or be the exponent of a larger number of fractional parts, the principle of induction becomes more apparent. A difficulty, therefore, is only like an unknown quantity in the latter science; and the following suggestions are offered by way of demonstration:—

Conveyances in the transfer of trust estates insert in the clause of reference where the trusts of them require confirmation that the property is to be held upon the same trusts as are in the deed by which they were originally created, as if the same were in such transfer repeated or re-enacted; yet it has never been considered that the progressive duty attached upon the words to which that reference applies, and for the obvious reason that by the Stamp Act no "matter" but such as is put or indorsed upon every deed is recognized in the ascertainment of that stamp duty. The Act under consideration states that the prescribed short forms are only to have the same effect and be construed as if the deed contained the longer forms; but, as far as regards the stamp duty, the Act regulating it enacts expressly that the progressive duty on every deed applies only to its internal written contents and its indorsements. The construction as surmised involves the absurdity that not only the long forms for which the short ones are substituted, but also the short ones themselves (and necessarily these, according to the Stamp Act) would require enumeration in regard to the progressive duty. However the 5th section contains a sovereign remedy for every defect of operation in a deed made under the Act, if in other respects it be valid. As the Act superseding the necessity of a lease for a year is still in operation, a short recital might be inserted in a deed made under the short form Act, referring to the former in the usual manner, so as to make it operate and take effect as a release to use; which reference, indeed, appears essential when made under the short form Act, when it is a conveyance to the usual uses to bar dower, or with any other limitations which are intended to take effect as legal estates. Thus made with a double aspect, the deed would have the benefit of the maxim "Utile per inutile non vitiatur." Nevertheless, where there is doubt, the legislature can alone, and ought to, apply a sufficient remedy as it did in 1813, to remove the defects of prior deeds conveying the equity of redemption in mortgaged estates without ad valorem duty.

We cannot insert, or notice in any way, any communication that is sent to us anonymously; but those who choose to address us in confidence will find their confidence respected. NEITHER CAN WE UNDERTAKE TO RETURN ANY MANUSCRIPTS WHATSOEVER.

W. R. (Norwich).—The subject is not of sufficient interest for the space the communication would occupy.

W. W. (Norwich).—A report of a meeting of the Profession to oppose the objectionable clauses in the Small Debts Bill will be found in another column. We would recommend the Norwich deputation to call on the committee, at that meeting appointed, and to co-operate with them.

M. D. (Greenwich).—We make our acknowledgments for the draft of the proposed Bill, which shall have early consideration.

Mr. Best advises us that his "Law Dictionary" will not extend to the length we calculated in our notice of the book, in No. 172, but that it will be completed in about nine parts, at less than half the cost we supposed it would come to.

The enclosure from Ashton-under-Lyne should have been accompanied with a private letter to secure attention.

ERRATA.—In the review of Stalman's "Scriven," in our last number, page 400, column 3, line 41, for "entrenchment" read "commutation."

For "client and his child," page 398, column 1, fourth, read "client as his child."

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 8, 1846.

CONTEMPT OF COURT.

AN incident is reported to have occurred at the recent Devon Assizes which involves questions of the highest moment to the liberty of the subject, and to the administration of justice.

At the close of the trial of a prisoner for a rape, the learned judge who presided (Mr. Baron PLATT) asked the jury whether they believed that two of the witnesses who had been called to prove an alibi had spoken the truth. The jury replied that they did not. Thereupon his Lordship said, "Neither do I. Not to speak the truth is a high contempt of this Court, and misdemeanour, and must be punished accordingly." And his Lordship immediately ordered the witnesses to be committed for this alleged contempt.

To make the matter more intelligible, it may, perhaps, be necessary to state, that the witnesses had agreed as to the main fact of the prisoner having been at his father's house on the day the crime was perpetrated, but on cross-examination they differed as to the company present at the dinner-table, and the order in which they sat.

The witnesses remained in custody until the close of the Assizes.

This, we believe, is not a solitary instance of a committal for contempt on a similar charge. We think it was Mr. Baron PARKER who some time since adopted the practice which Mr. Baron PLATT has now followed.

But, after anxious consideration of the subject in all its bearings, we are compelled to the conclusion that the practice is one of very questionable right, and very doubtful expediency. It seems to us fraught with danger to the subject, unconstitutional, and unjustifiable.

Of its legality we have some doubt, but the difficulty is to determine how it could be contested. The definition of contempt is lodged in the bosom of the judge. It is enough, in plea to an action for the imprisonment, or on the return to a habeas corpus, to allege that the prisoner was committed for contempt, and if no description of the nature of the contempt be introduced, the answer is complete. It is the privilege of every Court to have power to preserve order; committal for contempt is the mode of exercising this privilege; each Court must determine for itself what is a contempt.

But withal we cannot help thinking that there must be somewhere a remedy for an abuse of this privilege. If not, the boasted liberty of the subject is a shadow; if a judge can at any time, on his own construction of a contempt, commit to prison any witness brought before him, it is plain that liberty has no stronger safeguard than the honesty of judges, and as we have had bad ones before, who can say that we may not have them again?

But if it be that such a power really belongs to the judges—that they are invested with so despotic a privilege—is it one that ought to be left to them unrestricted? In truth, this question is of vastly more importance to the public than the great privilege questions of the House of Commons. The latter was likely to affect only a few; in the former, every man and woman in the land is interested, for all are liable at any moment to be called into the witness-box, and subjected to be sent to prison at the will of the judge, without cause assigned, without trial, without appeal, and without redress.

Undoubtedly the power belongs, and properly belongs, to a judge to commit for contempt the disorderly—the disobedient—those who refuse to submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the Court. Inasmuch as it is necessary that witnesses should answer the questions put to them, it is a contempt to stand mute or to prevaricate, because these impede the business of the Court. But does the same argument extend to the case of perjury, actual or assumed? Perjury is a crime upon which the law has imposed a penalty. It is to be strictly proved, according to the rules of law, before that penalty can be inflicted. But what is the effect of the summary proceeding taken by Mr. Baron PLATT? The party is condemned without trial, and punished without opportunity afforded for shewing his innocence. Whatever the judge chooses to consider perjury is visited with instant vengeance.

The Cadis of Persia are not vested with a power more despotic, more extravagant, or more incompatible with free institutions.

But there is a consideration which should make even the learned judge pause before he repeats the practice. The process is for contempt. The power of committal for contempt is not limited to the assize courts, it belongs to all courts legally constituted. Therefore what Mr. Baron PLATT can do, may be done, upon the same plea, by every Quarter Sessions Court, Small Debts Court, or Magistrate's Court in the land. Who would be safe, if the example set at Exeter be followed by tribunals less satisfactorily presided over? Would the judges, we ask, entrust the power they have claimed for themselves to the commissioners of a local court, or the justices of a county town? Yet the plea that justifies them would justify also their imitators.

These objections are urged on the assumption that in the particular case the learned Judge was right in his conclusion that the witnesses he committed for contempt had been guilty of perjury. But what, if it should turn out that they had been the witnesses of truth after all; that the main fact of their story, that which alone they came to prove, was strictly true; and that they were not guilty of wilful perjury? What, then, will be said of this arbitrary power? How, then, will it be justified? Yet is it more than probable that in this instance (we believe it is the second only), in which the Judge has taken upon himself to determine the question of guilty on his own view, the parties he has so severely punished will be proved to be innocent!

The very possibility of such an error of judgment is sufficient to condemn the practice. Its actual occurrence will so prove its danger to the liberties of the subject, that it will be suppressed by the unanimous verdict of public opinion.

Be it well understood that we have written this, not by way of complaint of the conduct of Mr. Baron PLATT in the particular instance, but in opposition to a practice which we believe to be fraught with wrong, based upon injustice, dangerous to the subject, and in violation of the principles of the constitution. It is a question of vast moment, not merely to the Profession, but to the public; and it is the duty of all the guardians of the liberties of the people, and especially of the lawyers, to enter their solemn protest against this practice of summarily committing for contempt a witness whom a judge or a jury may choose not to believe.

NOTES UPON CIRCUIT.

COMMITTALS—DUTIES OF MAGISTRATES.

THEY whom business or curiosity may have led to watch the proceedings of our Criminal Courts, must have remarked the frequency with which the counsel for prosecutions, and even the presiding judges, comment upon the omission of the prisoner to call witnesses in disproof of certain facts stated or inferred against him, urging such absence of contradiction as evidence of the truth of the fact so left unanswered. "Why is not JOHN SMITH put into the box?" is one of the stock phrases of the Bar and the Bench.

The argument in a civil cause is unanswerable. Where a man has the ability to refute, not to contradict is tacitly to admit. Very different is it in criminal cases. There the parties stand before the Court on very unequal terms. On the one side is the prosecutor, often wealthy, always backed by the public purse. On the other is the prisoner, usually a poor man, always thrown upon his own resources for his defence. In utter oblivion of what poverty means, the taunt is heartlessly, wrongfully insinuated, "why is not JOHN SMITH here?"

For what does the expression imply? Put into plain terms, it runs thus:—Why did not the prisoner, who earns seven shillings a week, and therewith supports seven children, employ an attorney, pay the cost of conveyance and maintenance of witnesses for a week at the assize town, with five shillings a day to each for his loss of time?

We have seen so many cases of grievous injustice resulting from the inability of prisoners to bring up witnesses in their defence, that any proposition for redress deserves attention. Manifestly there is moral if not legal wrong somewhere, and if the Law cannot provide a remedy, the Legislature should do so.

But is the law defective? or is there error in its administration? We suspect that in the latter lies the source of the mischief, and certainly by a small change in that the cause of complaint may be removed.

In the magistrates resides the power of correcting this wrong, and they may do so equally in accordance with law as with reason.

It is an opinion long entertained, and confirmed by daily experience, that magistrates misunderstand their duties in the investigations that precede the committal of a prisoner for trial on a charge of felony. The prevalent notion is, that they have only to see that a prima facie case is made out, and to bind over to appear only such witnesses as prove the case against the prisoner.

But we apprehend that their duty is properly by no means limited to this; that they ought to know nothing of "prosecution" or "defence," "prosecutor's witnesses" and "prisoner's witnesses." Their province is, as impartial judges, to hear all that belongs to the crime and its detection; to investigate the whole matter; to examine witnesses on both sides who speak to the transaction; and that it is their duty, as it certainly is the dictate of humanity and justice, to send before the superior Court every person who gives any testimony relevant to the crime, whether it be against or in favour of the prisoner, and so that the jury may be enabled fairly to decide upon the merits of the entire matter.

And in this view we are glad to have the sanction of Mr. Baron ALDERSON, from whom we once heard, on the Western Circuit, an observation in substance like the following. Prisoner's counsel having complained that a witness brought before the magistrates by the prisoner, to disprove the charge, had not been bound over to appear, and, consequently, that the prisoner was unable to produce him at his own cost, the magistrates' clerk remarked that he was not sent up because he was a witness for the defence. Whereupon the learned Baron, with generous indignation, exclaimed to this effect:—"What have the magistrates to do with the prosecution or defence? It is their duty to examine into the whole matter, and not to make out a case; and they are bound to send up here every witness who speaks to the transaction, whether his evidence tells for the prisoner or against him. It would be the height of injustice to compel poor men to bring up witnesses who can prove them innocent against a charge supported at the public cost."

We cannot pledge our memory to the very words, but that was the substance of his observations. And every day's experience shews the justice and propriety of the practice so alleged to be the law, by the repeated instances of grievous wrong resulting from the opposite practice.

Earnestly do we recommend the subject to the serious consideration of magistrates and their clerks.

REGISTRATION APPEALS, &c.

THE Appeals of the last year are now ready in Nos. 4, 5, and 6 of Cox and Atkinson's Registration Appeal Cases, or forming part 2. Parts 1 and 2, sewn in a double part, with index, contain all the appeals determined to the present time, price 10s.

Nos. 17 to 20 of Cox's Criminal Law Cases will be ready next Saturday, forming Part 5. The index to the first volume, now completed, is in the press. These reports have been cited throughout the new edition of Roscoe's Criminal Evidence.

The first part of the second volume (Part 7) of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases is in the press.

The sixth part of New Magistrates' Cases, completing the first volume, will be ready shortly. This volume will contain all the Magistrates' Cases decided during the last two years, price 3s. handsomely half-bound.

SHAM LAWYERS.

THE following is a curious specimen of Sham Lawyer correspondence from Bridlington Quay. This Mr. WM. PURDON affixes to his note a stamp, on which is inscribed "William Purdon, Stock and Share Broker, Auctioner, and Sheriff's officer." Now, whether he be or be not the latter we are not informed; but, if he be, the sheriff ought at once to remove him from his office; if he be not, the employment of the title for the manifest purpose of giving additional awe to his proceedings, would afford further evidence of false pretences, should it be deemed desirable to institute any prosecution.

Bridlington Quay, 18th April, 1846.

Mr. William Berriman, of Quay-road.

SIR,—I am directed by Mr. John Chambers to apply to you for the payment of the sum of 4l. 10s. 6d. due from you to James Potts, and to inform you, that unless the same be paid to me on or before Saturday, 25th inst. I shall without further notice order a process under the provisions of the Act for better securing the payment of small debts, to compel you to shew cause why the same has not been duly discharged.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

WM. PURDON,

Final Application. No. 316.

Kingston-upon-Hull, 1 June, 1846.

Mr. William Berriman, of Q. Road, labourer.

SIR,—Information having been forwarded to me of your omission to pay the sum of 9s. 0½d. due by you to the estate of Mr. James Garton, I am therefore directed to acquaint you that unless you cause the same to be paid at my Office, or assign a satisfactory reason for such omission, before the 6th of June inst. being the day appointed for the settlement of the above account, a summons will be issued for the peremptory discharge thereof with costs.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

WM. PURDON,

10, Junction-street, Hull.

Attendance will be given for the arrangement of accounts, as under, viz.:

Market Weighton.—Wednesdays, from 2 till 6 o'clock, at the house of Mrs. Craven, Southgate.

Great Driffield.—Thursdays, from 2 till 6 o'clock, at the house of Mr. Jefferson, silversmith, Market-place.

Bridlington Quay.—Saturdays, at the Offices, No. 2, New Buildings.

"And be it declared and enacted that no imprisonment under this Act shall in any wise operate as satisfaction or extinguishment of any debt or demand; but any person imprisoned under this Act who shall have paid or satisfied the debt or demand and all the costs incurred shall be discharged on application to the judge of the court in which the order of imprisonment was made."—*Small Debts Act, 7th Vic. JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

A PRACTICAL COMMENTARY ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS RELATING TO REAL PROPERTY.

By WILLIAM HUGHES, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

The fee will pass where a testator directs any thing to be done which a life estate may be insufficient to accomplish.—Another ground for holding the fee to pass where no words of limitation are employed, is when a testator directs any thing to be done which a mere life estate in the devisee might be insufficient to carry into effect; as a devise for the payment of debts and legacies (Beezley v. Westerhouse, 4 T. R. 89); or where trusts are to be exercised, in both of which cases the devisees or trustees would be held to take an estate of inheritance (Shaw v. Weigh, 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 184; Bateman v. Roach, 9 Mod. 104; Villiers v. Villiers, 2 Atk. 71; Gibson v. Montford, 1 Ves. 485; Challenger v. Sheppard, 8 T. R. 597); and not an estate merely commensurate with the existence of the purposes of the will, or the objects of the trusts, which in many instances might have been effected by an estate pur autre vie; and this construction has been confirmed by the late Will Act (1 Vict. c. 26), by which devises of real estates to trustees or executors, except for a term or a presentation to a church, without any express limitation of estate, shall be construed to pass the fee, or such other estate or interest as the testator had the power to dispose of by will, and not an estate determinable when the purposes of the trust are satisfied (secs. 30, 31). Yet where lands are simply directed to be sold, but were not directly devised to be sold by the trustees, or executors, an authority only, and no interest, will be held to pass those terms (9 Ed. 6, b 25 a; Litt. sect. 169; Latch, 43; Houell v. Barnes, Cro. Car. 382; Yates v. Compton, 2 P. Wms. 308; Lancaster v. Thornton, 2 Bur. 1028); and, subject to the power of sale, the land would descend upon the heir; nor does the law in this respect appear to have been altered by the new Will Act, which only mentions, "where any real estate shall be devised to any trustee or executor" (sect. 30), or, "where any real estate shall be devised to any trustee, &c." (sect. 31).

Whether a power of sale can be exercised where some of the donees refuse to concur.—Formerly, where a power was given to executors to sell, and one of them refused the trust, the others could not sell. But the statute 21 Hen. 8, c. 4, provided that where lands were willed to be sold by executors, and part of them refuse to be executors, and to accept the administration of the will, all sales by the executors that accept such administration shall be as valid as if all the executors had joined.

Whether a renouncing executor can purchase.—According to Lord Coke (Co. Litt. 113, a), a renouncing executor could not purchase, because, notwithstanding his renunciation, he was still privy to the will. This doctrine has, however, been overruled at law (Denne dem. Bowyer v. Judge, 11 East, 288; Mackintosh v. Barber, 1 Bing. 50); but whether a purchase of this kind would be supported in equity will depend in a great measure upon the particular circumstances of the case. If it could be shewn that the sale was to the prejudice of the cestui que trust, equity would undoubtedly set it aside. Although executors renounce the probate of the will as to personal estate, they are not by such renunciation disqualified to execute a power of sale over real estate. (Yates v. Compton, 2 P. Wms. 308; Keilw. 45.)

Whether a power of sale to executors will survive.—When property is devised to be sold by executors, so that a mere authority and no estate passes to them, questions sometimes arise, as to whether, in case any of them die, the power can be exercised by the survivors, which it seems it cannot be where the authority is given to them by name: as where a testator directs that his executors, A, B, and C, shall sell the land. (Co. Litt. 113; Peyton v. Bury, 2 P. Wms. 626; Attorney-General v. Gleg, 1 Atk. 356.) But when the direction is that the estate shall be sold by the executors generally, then, if there be three or more, and one or two die, provided a plurality of executors still remains, so as to satisfy the description, the power will still survive even at law (Co. Litt. 3 a.; Vincent v. Lee, Co. Litt. 113, a.; Dy. 117, pl. 32; Garbrand v. Mayot, 2 Vern. 105); but it seems at least doubtful whether it would where one only survives, for then the description of executors is no longer applicable (Dy. 219, side note, pl. 8); and although cases are not wanting to support the validity of the exercise of a power given to executors by a single survivor (Houell v. Barnes, Cro. Car. 3 S. C. nom Barnes' case, W. Jones, 352, pl. 2; Anon. 2 Leon, 220; Milward v. Moore, Sav. 72; Anon. Dy. 371, 6 pl. 3); still no purchaser would be warranted in accepting a simple conveyance from the surviving executor. In the case of trustees a still stricter rule prevails against the power surviving; which, unless directed to be exercised by the survivors, it seems it will not do where the instrument contains a power to appoint new trustees, notwithstanding the proceeds of the sale may be directed to be paid to the trustees or the survivor of them, his executors or administrators. (Townsend v. Wilson, 1 B. & Ald. 608; see also Hall v. Dewes, 1 Jac. 189; Bradford v. Belfield, 2 Sim. 264.)

Where property is directed to be sold, without stating by what persons the sale is to be made.—It occasionally happens that a testator directs property to be sold for certain purposes, without declaring by whom such sale is to be effected. Whenever this occurs, if the proceeds of the sale are to be distributable by the personal representatives, as where the purchase money is to be applied in payment of debts (Ram. on Assets, 105; Anon. 3 Dy. 371, C.; Anon. 2 Leon, 220; Blatch v. Wilder, 1 Atk. 420), or debts and legacies (Anon. 2 Leon, 220; Hughes v. Collis, 1 Ch. Cas. 179) or legacies only (Anon. Dalison, 106, ca. 56; Carroll v. Carroll, 2 Ch. Rep. 301), or by the terms of the will are to be confounded with the testator's personal property, and with it to form one fund for the payment of the legacies (Tylden v. Hyde, 2 Sim. and Sta. 238); then a power of sale will arise by implication in the executors, which power will be transmissible from them to their personal representatives. But no such implication will arise where the proceeds of the sale are not to be applied by the executors in the execution of their office. Hence, if a testator simply bequeaths the money to arise from the sale to certain persons named, this bequest does not cause the money to be applicable by the executors in the execution of their office, and, therefore, in this case, they are not, but the heir-at-law of the testator is, the party to sell and convey to the purchaser. (Ram. on Assets, 105; Bentham v. Wilshire, 4 Mad. 44; Patton v. Randall, 1 Jac. and Walk. 189.) But in any of the cases which have been alluded to, notwithstanding the power cannot be exercised at law, yet, certainly, a court of equity will, while the trust implied in it exists, enforce the execution of the trusts, by decreeing a sale pursuant to the testator's intention. (Ram. Assets, 101, referring to Gவில்리ams v. Rowell, Hard. 204; Garfoot v. Garfoot, 1 Ch. Cas. 35; Ashby v. Doyl, ib. 180; Amby v. Gower, 1 Ch. Cas. 283; S. C. 1 Lev. 304; Loc-ton v. Loc-ton, 2 Freem. 136; Yates v. Compton, 2 P. Wms. 308; Witchot v. Louch, Ch. Rep. 183.) Powers of this kind are defined to be powers in the nature of a trust, which differ from ordinary powers, because powers strictly as such are never imperative, but leave the act to be done at the will of the party to whom they are given (Wilm. 23); whereas trusts are always obligatory upon the conscience of the party entrusted. But in cases like those last alluded to, the trusts and powers are blended together. Until the power be exercised, the estate descends on the heir (Warneford v. Thompson, 3 Ves. 513; Hilton v. Kenworthy, 3 East, 553), who (if such power were extinguished by the death of parties to whom it was given without having executed it, or never arose on account of the testator not having appointed any person to execute it), would at law be entitled to hold it for his own benefit; but here equity, acting upon the trust, will compel the heir to concur in the sale, in order to carry out the purposes of the will. (Hyer v. Wordale, 2 Freem. 135, cited; Loc-ton v. Loc-ton, 2 Freem. 136; Pitt v. Pelham, 1 Ch. Cas. 176.)

When the legal estate is devised in fee, the party taking the beneficial interest will be entitled in fee also.—When the legal estate is devised in fee, and there is an apparent intent that all the beneficial interest in the estate should belong to a particular person, or to a class of persons (which will generally be inferred when the trust is declared directly in their favour without any restrictive terms), the fee in the trust has been held to pass without any words of limitation. (Bateman v. Roach, 9 Mod. 104; Newland v. Shephard, 2 P. Wms. 194, S. C. 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 329, pl. 4; Challenger v. Shep- ward, 8 T. R. 597.) So where there is a trust or direction to purchase land for another, it will be implied that the purchase is to be in fee-simple, unless the will expresses a different intention. (Green v. Armistead, Hob. 65.)

When a power of disposition will pass the fee.—It is also long been a fixed rule of law that where lands are devised to a man without words of limitation, but conferring on him an absolute power of disposition over the property, he will be construed to take the fee; but the construction will be otherwise where he has an express estate divided from the power. And the like doctrine prevails whenever the power is restricted to a particular mode of disposition, as by deed, or by will, or on the happening of a contingent event. Yet where an express estate for life is given in order to let in estates to strangers, and no specific mode is required to the disposition of the inheritance, then in the event of the mesne estates not taking effect, the devise will take the entire fee-simple. Goodtitle v. Otway, 2 Wills. 6, is a case of this description. There the devise was to the testator's heir-at-law for her life, and after her death to her lawful issue, and if she should have no issue, she should have power to dispose thereof at her will and pleasure. She died without issue, and the court were clearly of opinion that, as the contingent remainder to the children never vested, she had an estate in fee-simple. (See also Turner v. Hardie, 1 Leon. 283.)

Where the power of disposition is confined to particular objects.—But where an estate for life is not expressly given, but the property is devised generally to the devisee to such uses as he shall appoint, nevertheless, confining the power of disposition to particular objects, it seems difficult to decide whether the devise will take a fee-simple conditional, or an estate in fee upon trust, or an estate for life with power to dispose of the inheritance; but the more general opinion appears to be in favour of an estate for life, with a power of appointment over the fee, unless the will should contain sufficient words to negative such a construction.

The foregoing observations, it may be necessary for me again to remind my readers, are often applicable only to wills prior to the operation of the late Will Act (1 Vict. c. 26); for, as to wills made subsequently to the 1st of January, 1838, no words of limitation will be necessary to pass an absolute estate in fee-simple, when the subject-matter of the devise is sufficiently described to identify the property intended to pass by it. Still this does not render it the less necessary that a person in investigating a title should be thoroughly acquainted with the rules of law upon the construction of wills made previously to that period, as questions must continue to arise upon them for many years yet to come.

Public Sales.

By Messrs. DRIVER, at the Mart.

THE OATLANDS ESTATE, SURREY.—The remaining, and most eligible portion, containing 236 acres, of this celebrated Estate, the once favourite abode of his late Royal Highness the Duke of York, was, on Tuesday last, the 4th inst. submitted by Messrs. Driver, for public competition, at the Auction Mart, London. The Lots, from their possessing well known unrivalled capabilities as building sites, and this being the last opportunity afforded for obtaining such valuable spots for the erection of villas, a spirited competition was excited by those who were disappointed at the former sale and others. The lots, including the value of the timber, realised the following prices, viz.—Lot 1. A valuable building plot, and site of the stables, &c. containing 21a.—2,852l. 2. A ditto, with temple thereon, containing 12a. 2r.—1,247l. 3. A ditto, containing 11a. 2r.—1,481l. 4. A ditto, containing 17a. and the site of the house, 2,143l. 5. A ditto, containing 16a. 1,032l. 6. Oatlands farm, containing 27a. 20p.—1,973l. 7. The walled kitchen garden and land, containing 14a. 1r. 20p.—2,006l. 8. A valuable building site, containing 22a. 1r. 20p. including the far-famed grotto—2,598l. 9. A valuable parcel of land, containing 48a. 20p.—3,463l. 10. A valuable piece of land, containing 5a. 1r. 18p.—540l. 11. A building plot, containing 12a.—834l. 12. A ditto, containing 10a.—601l. 13. A valuable parcel of land, containing 5a. 3r. 13p.—710l. 14. A building plot, containing 8a.—602l. 15. A ditto, containing 2a. 2r.—317l. Total—22,998l.

By Messrs. SHUTTLEWORTH and SONS.

A freehold property, comprising the Garratt print works, two residences, with offices and pleasure grounds, containing together 11a. 3r. 6p. of land—2,450l.

A freehold meadow, consisting of 8a. 2r. 6p. adjoining the preceding lot—840l.

A freehold meadow adjoining, containing 5a. 3r.—400l. A residence, No. 17, Gloucester-place, New Peckham, held for 75 years, at 6l. 6s. per annum—530l.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

July 15 and 17.

WATSON G. PARKER.

Secondary evidence—Missing deed—Competency of witness—Voluntary deed—Entering evidence de bene esse—Inquiries which may be directed by decree—Practice—Form of decree.

Secondary evidence of the contents of a deed, of which performance is sought to be enforced, cannot be given until the existence and loss of such a deed have been proved by the best accessible evidence. A person taking an interest under a voluntary deed, assigned his interest without consideration, in order to become a competent witness to prove the contents of such deed, which had been lost; his competency was objected to, but it was held that until it had been shewn by the best evidence that such a deed had been executed, the question of the competency of the witness to prove its contents did not arise.

The Court below having held that an objection taken by the defendant that a lost deed must be proved before secondary evidence of its contents could be admitted, nevertheless allowed the secondary evidence to be read, and directed inquiries founded upon it: Held, on appeal, that such evidence was improperly received, and that when the decree is made, evidence received de bene esse ought to be expressly stated either as rejected or received.

This was an appeal by the defendants, the executors and trustees of Thos. Shipman, deceased, from a decree of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce.

The bill was filed in January 1843 by Thomas James Watson, on behalf of himself and all others the creditors of Shipman, and stated that in 1811 a marriage between Thomas Oswald and Sarah Simson was solemnized; that Oswald had from his youth been treated by Shipman as his adopted son; that Sarah Simson was the daughter of a very old friend of Shipman's, and that previously to such marriage Shipman agreed with Thomas Oswald and Sarah Simson to make such provision for them as was contained in an indenture of the 20th of August, 1811. That indenture was made between Shipman of the one part, and Oswald and Sarah his wife of the other part, which, after reciting the marriage, and the agreement before the marriage to make a provision for Sarah and the issue of the marriage, and in consideration of such marriage and performance of the agreement, Shipman, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, did promise and agree with Thomas Oswald and Sarah his wife, and the survivor of them his, and her executors and administrators, that he, Shipman, would, in his lifetime, or by his last will and testament, give and appoint unto Oswald and wife, and George Lee and Joseph Thorpe Shipman, or unto some other persons by the said Thomas Shipman in such will or settlement to be named, 3,000*l.* Navy 5*l.* per Cent. Annuities, upon trust that Sarah, the wife of the said Thomas Oswald, should, after Shipman's death, receive the dividends during her life to her separate use, independently of her husband; and after her death, that Thos. Oswald should receive the dividends during his life, so long as he should continue solvent; but in case he should become bankrupt or insolvent, upon trust that the dividends might be applied for the benefit of the children or child of the marriage who might be then living; and after the decease of the said Thomas Oswald and Sarah his wife, upon trust to divide the said 3,000*l.* stock amongst the children of the marriage; and if there should be no children of the marriage, in trust for the survivor of them, the said Thomas Oswald and Sarah his wife, or unto such person as the survivor of them should by will appoint. Sarah Oswald died in July 1813, having had one child, Jane, who died in her mother's lifetime, and thereby Thomas Oswald had become absolutely entitled to the said 3,000*l.* stock so covenanted to be paid by Shipman.

Thomas Shipman, by his will, dated the 4th of May, 1839, gave and devised certain real estates to the defendants, and bequeathed to them all his residuary personal estate equally, as tenants in common, and appointed the defendants his executors and trustees. Shipman died on the 5th of March, 1842, and his will was proved in April, 1842. The bill also stated that Shipman had died without having performed his covenant to settle or leave 3,000*l.* Navy 5 per Cent. stock, and that such stock having been converted into New 3*1*/₄ per Cent. stock, Thomas Oswald became and was a specialty creditor of Shipman for 3,150*l.* New 3*1*/₄ per Cent. Annuities. By indenture dated the 17th of December, 1842, Oswald assigned to the plaintiff the said sum of 3,150*l.* stock for his own benefit, but no consideration was given for such assignment. It was then stated that the deed of the 20th of August, 1811, was, some time after its execution, lent to Shipman, and remained in his possession at his death, and the deed, or some copy or abstract, thereof, had come into the possession of the defendants. The bill prayed an account of the estate, &c. of the testator, Shipman, and that the same might be applied in payment of what, on taking the accounts, should be found due to the plaintiff and the other creditors of the said Thomas Shipman, in a due course of administration, and if the personal estate should not be sufficient to answer such creditors, that the same might be raised out of the real estates.

The defendants, by their answer, insisted that Thomas Oswald did not become entitled to the 3,000*l.* stock, and that the said indenture of the 20th of August, 1811, did not exist, or if the same had ever existed, was no other than a voluntary deed without consideration, and that the covenants, if any, contained therein were executory only, and being voluntary and without consideration, the same could not be specifically enforced; and that it would only entitle the parties claiming thereunder, if they could sustain any claim, to nominal damages; and that Oswald, or his assignee, if the deed ever existed, would only be entitled to nominal damages. They insisted that Oswald had no sufficient claim on the testator's estate. Thomas Oswald was examined as a witness to give evidence of the contents of the deed. On the hearing of the cause, the Vice-Chancellor rejected the evidence of Oswald, and also the draft of the deed of 20th August, 1811, without prejudice to any question whether the same should, or should not, thereafter be admitted as evidence, and the rejection of the draft deed was not to prevent any party from tendering the same as evidence before the Master to whom the cause stood referred, or the said Master from receiving the same, if the same should, in the judgment of the said Master, be made evidence before him. And it was referred to the Master to inquire whether the deed, called a deed of gift to Mrs. Oswald, mentioned in the bill of costs of the testator's solicitor, which had been proved in evidence, was executed by Shipman, and under what circumstances, and whether the same was the testator's deed, and whether it was then in existence, and whether the same had been lost or mislaid, and further directions and costs were reserved.

From that decree the defendants appealed, insisting that the bill ought to have been dismissed with costs, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to have the depositions and exhibits entered and read as evidence on his behalf.

Jas. Russell and Chas. Hall, for the plaintiff, supported the decree, and contended that the settlement was properly proved by Oswald's evidence, after he had assigned his interest. The evidence had been rightly received de bene esse.

Wakefield and Steere, for the appeal, cited Evelyn v. Templar, 2 Bro. C.C. 148; Deale v. Hall, 3 Russ. 1, against the reception of the evidence.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In this case the witness was entitled to a chose in action, a right to recover it; and that right has been actually assigned to Watson, who claims the amount from the party owing the legal obligation. It was objected that such an assignment was void within the statute of Elizabeth. It is clear the party owing the obligation has notice, if not otherwise, at all events by this suit, and he objects to the competency of this witness. Deale v. Hall was cited, but that case has no application. The party who was prior in point of time lost his priority by not giving the notice necessary to complete his title—he had done nothing. Here the party must come into equity, and I am of opinion that there is no legal objection to the competency of this witness.

I take this opportunity of observing upon an irregularity in this decree, which I have also remarked in other cases. It says this Court doth reject certain of the evidence which is mentioned. That is no part of the decree; it is proper that the Court should notice the evidence which has been offered and rejected, but that is only preliminary; it is no part of the decree. In many cases which have come before me in the House of Lords, it has appeared that evidence had been received de bene esse, and then it is stated that the evidence had been read, no further notice being taken of the evidence, and after that the Court proceeds to adjudicate. That is very improper. If evidence is received de bene esse, the Court must determine before pronouncing a decree whether it is to be admitted to be read or not. It ought not to stand in the decree as read, and then nothing further stated as to what was done with it. The proper course, where evidence has been received de bene esse and afterwards rejected, is that the Court should decide first on the reception of the evidence, and then it may be mentioned as having been tendered and rejected. This is not always done. I will receive this evidence de bene esse.

Hall then proceeded to read the evidence of Oswald to prove the contents of the deed.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I cannot receive secondary evidence of the contents until you have shewn by the best evidence that the deed ever existed.

Hall.—The attesting witness is stated by his father and sister to have gone abroad many years ago, and they do not know whether he is living or dead.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I cannot receive this as evidence of his death unless you shew me that no better evidence can be obtained.

Russell.—The letter by Shipman is evidence that he had executed the settlement. That is expressly charged in the bill. That letter is proved.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What is the date?

Russell.—Wednesday morning, there is no other date; but the expression, "in consequence of the alteration in my family," must allude to the death of his wife, which fixes the date.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—He speaks of a will, but it is so very vague, it may or may not refer to this settlement. I look at this letter to see how far it will enable me to dispense with primary evidence, if it had clearly identified the deed, that might have been sufficient; but you have shewn that there were attesting witnesses, and you must shew what has become of them.

Russell.—He is only shewn to be a witness by the evidence of Oswald, and that they say is not admissible.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I can do no more than put this in course of inquiry.

Wakefield.—The plaintiff chose to bring the suit to a hearing with this defect, and must abide by the consequences. (Marten v. Whickelo, Cr. & Ph. 257.)

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The parties come here for administration. The peculiarity of the case is that the party entitled to sue at law has assigned his interest to another person for the purpose of enabling him to come here. The party who claims under the assignment may come to this Court. The question is, whether the party can claim a benefit obtained by a scheme for changing the jurisdiction. Creditors come here on account of the mode in which debts are paid. The first question is, whether there is a legal debt, and then there is an ulterior relief to be administered in the event of the debt being established. But the debt must be established at law to entitle the party to administration. The plaintiff alleges that he deed exists in the custody of the defendants; but when I look at the evidence which has been offered about the deed, I find no evidence given that the witness who attested the execution of the deed cannot be produced. That is the only question; it therefore only remains to consider whether to dismiss the bill or retain it for a year with liberty to bring an action. The plaintiff's case rests on a legal demand. In the view I take of it, before he can tender this witness, he must, as a preliminary step, prove the existence of the deed by the best evidence. The cause has never gone far enough to make it proper to tender such witness. Retain the bill for a year, with liberty for the plaintiff to bring such action as he may be advised.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

April 21 and 22.

DE BEAUVOIR v. DE BEAUVOIR.
Will—Construction—Designatio personarum—"To my own right heirs for ever," in reference to real and personal property.
P. B. by his will gave his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, and all his estates in the funds of England, to E. B. for life, remainder to the first and other sons of the said E. B. severally and successively in tail male; remainder in like manner to C. B. in strict settlement in tail male; and for default of such issue, the testator gave and devised the same to his own right heirs for ever. The testator also gave to his trustees and executors a power, with the consent of the person in possession, to lay out and invest the residue and surplus of his said personal estate in the purchase of freehold messuages, &c. in England, to settle the same when purchased to the same uses as the other estates so settled as aforesaid. E. B. and C. B. both died in the lifetime of the testator without issue; but R. B. the devisee for life and the testator's heir-at-law, survived him. Upon a bill filed by the representatives of the testator's sole next of kin, praying to be entitled to all the personal property which belonged to the testator at his death:—Held that the testator's heir-at-law, and not his next of kin, was entitled to the personal property under the bequest "to my own right heirs for ever."

The Rev. Peter Beauvoir, of Downham Hall, in the county of Essex, being seised in fee-simple of large estates, and also possessed of leasehold and copyhold estates, and a considerable amount of money in the funds, by his will, bearing date 27th July, 1800, after directing as therein mentioned, gave and devised "all his estates in the funds in England, and all his said manors or reputed manors, messuages, lands, tenements, tithes, rents, hereditaments, and premises, both freehold, leasehold, and copyhold, and of what other kind and nature soever and wheresoever situate in the kingdom of Great Britain, and whereof he had power to dispose, and all his estate, right, title, and interest therein, in possession, reversion, or otherwise howsoever, with their and every of their rights, members, and appurtenances, unto Edward Benyon, in his said will described, since deceased, and his assigns, for his life, without impeachment of waste; with remainder to the defendant, Richard Benyon de Beauvoir, in the will called Richard Benyon, and Martin Whish, and their heirs, during the life of the said Edward Benyon, upon trust, to preserve the contingent remainders in the usual manner, with remainder to the first and other sons of the body of the said Edward Benyon, lawfully to be begotten, severally and successively, one after another, in order and course as they should be in priority of birth and seniority of age in tail male; and for default of such issue the said testator gave and devised the same unto Charles Benyon, in the said will described, but since deceased, and the first and other sons of the said Charles Benyon, under the same limitations as those thereinbefore mentioned to have been made for the benefit of the said Edward Benyon and his first and other sons; and for default of such issue, the said testator gave and devised the same to the said defendant Richard Benyon de Beauvoir and the first and other sons of the said defendant, R. B. de Beauvoir, in the said will called Richard Benyon, under the same limitations as hereinbefore mentioned to have been made for the benefit of the said Edward and Charles Benyon, and their first and other sons respectively; and for default of such issue the said testator gave and devised the same to his own right heirs for ever, with a power for the tenant in possession to demise all or any part thereof for the number of years therein specified." The testator appointed the defendant, Richard B. de Beauvoir and the said Martin Whish executors of his will; and for their pains and trouble therein he gave to the said Richard B. de Beauvoir and the said Martin Whish 1,000l. each. The testator moreover gave a power to his said trustees, "with the consent of the person who might be in possession, and entitled to the profits thereof, to lay out and invest the residue and surplus of his said personal estate in the purchase or purchases of freehold messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments within that part of Great Britain called England, and to settle and convey the same, when purchased, to, for, upon and subject to such and so many of the uses, estates, trusts, powers, provisoes and limitations thereinbefore limited, created, and declared of and concerning his said manors, or reputed manors, messuages, lands, tenements, rents, hereditaments, and premises devised by that his will as should be then subsisting, or capable of taking effect, and to and for no other estate, use, trust, or purpose whatsoever."

The testator also made two codicils to his will, but without affecting in any manner the before-mentioned limitations therein contained.

The testator died in September, 1821, leaving Mary M'Dougall, afterwards wife of the plaintiff, his sole next of kin, and the defendant, Richard Benyon de Beauvoir, his heir-at-law him surviving. Edward Benyon and Charles Benyon both died in the lifetime of the testator, without issue; and thereupon the defendant became first tenant for life under the will, and never had any son.

The plaintiff, in the year 1825, intermarried with Mary M'Dougall, and by her will dated the 23rd of July, 1827, she gave, devised, appointed, and bequeathed all her interest which she took under the will of the testator, Peter Beauvoir, to her husband the plaintiff, and appointed him her sole executor. She died in February, 1831, and the plaintiff proved her will in the month of May following. The bill, among other things, prayed that the trusts of the testator's will might be carried out under the direction of the Court, and that it might be declared that under the limitations of all the said testator's leasehold estates in favour of the right heirs of the testator in case of the defendant dying without leaving any issue male, plaintiff, as executor of his deceased wife, who was sole next of kin of the testator, would be entitled to all the personal property which belonged to the testator at the time of his decease. No part of the personal estate had been invested in the purchase of real property, but remained in specie. To this bill the defendant demurred.

The only question argued before the Court (although another one was raised) was, whether, upon the true construction of the will, the ultimate limitation to the testator's own right heirs carried the personal estate along with the realty to the testator's heir-at-law, or whether it belonged to his next of kin.

James Parker, Lee, and R. Palmer in support of the demurrer, contended that in order that the plaintiff might sustain his case, it would be necessary for him to prove the proper construction of the will to be this, namely,—that upon a gift in a will of freehold, copyhold, leasehold, and money in the funds to different parties, in strict settlement, with a limitation over to the testator's own right heirs, these last words do not as it relates to the personality, mean right heirs, but next of kin. The case, however, of Boydell v. Golithly, 9 Jurist 2, entirely militated against such a construction. Several cases, it is admitted, go to shew that where in a will there is a bequest of personal estate to a man with an ultimate gift to his heirs, if at a particular time he should not be living there, the gift being substitutionary, the next of kin would take—a case totally different from the present one.

Cases cited:—Mounsey v. Blamire, 4 Russ. 384; Gwynne v. Muddock, 14 Ves. 488; Wright v. Atkyns, 19 Ves. 299; Swaine v. Burton, 15 Ves. 365; Danvers v. The Earl of Clarendon, 1 Vern. 35; Pleydell v. Pleydell, 1 P. Wms. 748; Foster v. Sierra, 4 Ves. 766.

Bethell, Hodgson, and Bagshawe, on the other side, contended that it was a case of succession, and that where persons are intended to take in the character of successors, the word "heirs" ought to be construed with reference to the nature and quality of the property given. It is not disputed that a testator may make the heir take as a purchaser; he may make him also take in the character of heir; yet he may make him take in the character of a successor, and in such a case the nature of the property is to be ascertained, and then the rule of law comes in to decide the question as to who the parties taking in succession shall be. If they thus take, and the heir is to take the real estate, not as a purchaser, but by descent by succession, why are not the next of kin by the same right of succession to take the personal property? In Gittings v. M'Dermott, 2 My. & K. p. 74, cited in support of the demurrer, Sir John Leach says, "With respect to the import of the word 'heirs,' its construction must be governed by the nature of the property; and the property being personal, those who succeed to it are not the heirs-at-law, but the next of kin." In the case of Monsey v. Blamire, the word "heir" was a mere word of description, and it is impossible to give to that word any other than its legal and technical signification.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I am of a different opinion, because it is perfectly true, as a mere proposition of law, that where freehold estates are devised to the heir-at-law (I am now speaking of what the law was before the late alterations), the heir-at-law, whether he be described only by the term "heir-at-law," or by his Christian and his surname, or by any description of the most whimsical adventitious character which fancy can devise, if he answer that description, he, I admit, takes by the description, but he takes according to the old rule by descent. Still, you must first consider whether there is a gift or not; and should you discover that the party does answer the terms of the gift, but happens to be heir-at-law, then I must admit the thing being intended to be given to him. The old law said, "You shall not take by devise, but you shall take by descent." About that doctrine there exists no doubt. Now, it is not my intention to enter into a criticism upon those cases, such as Vaux v. Henderson; that case shews upon the face of it to have been the language of a Scotch person who used the term "to him failing to his heirs." No one could read the will and not perceive that it was a mere substitution of the person entitled to the personal estate; but I cannot but think that if a testator has made use of an expression which shews that some individual is to take not merely freehold but also copyhold—though in the case before me I do not perceive any averment of seisin,—for notwithstanding the testator on the face of the will devises copyhold, yet there is no averment that he had any copyhold. It is stated that he was seised in fee-simple of divers manors, lands, and so on, and real estate; but the expression "seised in fee-simple of real estate" excludes copyhold, because no man is seised in fee of copyhold unless indeed it be the lord of the manor, who, for the time being, has in him that which was demised or demisable by copy of Court Roll. I admit in that case he may, in a certain sense, be seised in fee-simple of it, otherwise nobody can be seised in fee-simple of copyhold. However, that point is quite immaterial. Now, upon the face of the will, the testator was possessed of freeholds, copyholds, and leaseholds, and he had also what he calls "his estates in the funds of England." And by the clause to which I am adverting he devises collectively all his freehold manors, messuages, lands, tenements, tithes, rents, and hereditaments, &c. And then he says:—"Now I do hereby give and devise, after my just debts and funeral expenses and legacies are paid (which I order to be paid out of my personal estate), all my estates in the funds in England, and all my said manors or reputed manors, messuages, lands, tenements, tithes, rents, hereditaments, and premises, both freehold, leasehold, and copyhold." Then he gives them in the same manner, and uses the same words as if he were making a mere limitation of freehold estates in fee-simple. Then there comes this expression upon which the question is so much raised:—"And after default of such issue." That is after the cessation or never arising of the preceding estates, "I give and devise the same to my own right heirs for ever." Now it has been questioned whether the testator did really mean that the person or persons who might answer the description of the "right heirs for ever," should take collectively in a given event the corpus of all this freehold and copyhold, leasehold and personal estate which is so previously given. It really appears to me next to an impossibility, if you regard the words alone, to hold that the testator had any other intention but that the same person or set of persons should take; and it really seems to my mind that if there be no doubt, as I apprehend in point of law there is not, as to what is the true legal construction of the words "my own right heirs for ever," that the moment you have ascertained, by applying the rules of law, and have discovered that a given individual does answer the description of the "right heirs," it seems to me as a necessary consequence that that person must be the ultimate taker of all that has been previously given. Now, if any doubt existed as to the construction of those words, the power which is subsequently given to the trustees seems to me of necessity to remove every doubt; because just observe this in the last clause: "and I do give a power to my said trustees, with the consent of the person who may be in possession and entitled to the profits thereof, to lay out and invest the residue and surplus of my said personal estate"—(now it is plain he had not previously given the whole of his personal estate)—"to lay out and invest the residue and surplus of my said personal estate in the purchase or purchases of freehold messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments within that part of Great Britain called England; and to settle and convey the same, when purchased, to, for, upon, and subject to such and so many of the uses, estates, trusts, powers, provisoes, and limitations, hereinbefore limited, created, and declared of and concerning my said manors or reputed manors, messuages, lands, tenements, rents, and hereditaments." Now these are the expressions which he had used to describe the freehold estates in the part of his will where he devises the freehold estate and "premises." But what are the "premises?" Some of the premises are freehold estate, some of them copyhold estate, some of them personal estate. Now, I should like to know in what manner the freehold estates, if any were purchased with the surplus of the personal estate, could be limited to the uses and trusts devised concerning his freehold estates and premises. If part of the estate was considered as going under the first clause to the heir-at-law, part was considered as going, with regard to the copyhold estate, to the copyhold heir; and part was considered as going, according to the construction contended for, to the person who might be the testator's next of kin. This conclusively shews that this testator did contemplate that there should be but one set of limitations and one set of takers, and that this individual who was finally to take the ultimate estate of inheritance in the freehold, should be that person who should also take the ultimate estate which there might be in the copyhold, and the ultimate interest which there might be in the leasehold, and in what the testator describes as his funded estates in England. Now, I do admit that this clause is not in itself very happily conceived; but it belongs to those who have to expound a will if they are able ex furore dare lucem, and here we have this foolish clause luckily so foisted in as to put beyond dispute the testator's meaning, upon which I entertain no doubt.

Demurrer allowed.

ROLLS COURT.

Jan. 28, 29, and 30.

HARRIS P. FARWELL.

Order of the Court of Review to consolidate the estates of two firms—Receipt of dividends out of consolidated estates—Variation of contract—Proof afterwards against the separate estate of a deceased partner of one of two firms for the balance of a debt due from it. The Court of Review having ordered the consolidation of the estates of two firms, a creditor of one of them received a dividend on his debt out of the consolidated assets, but was nevertheless held entitled to payment of the balance of his debt out of the separate estate of a deceased partner of that firm; and the receipt of the dividends did not vary the original contract, or exonerate the estate of the deceased partner.

This was a suit instituted by James Harris, on behalf of himself and all other the creditors of Christopher Farwell, deceased (except the defendants, the creditors and official assignees of the bankrupts, Ashford Wise, William Searle Bental, and Robert Farwell,) against those defendants and against the executors and devisees under the will of Christopher Farwell, and against the creditors and official assignees of the bankrupts, Ashford Wise, Nicholas Baker, and William Searle Bental; and the relief prayed was (among other things) that the plaintiff and the other creditors of Christopher Farwell, deceased, other than such as were his partners, in respect of their partnership transactions, might be declared entitled to be paid their debts in priority to the debts due to his late partners. It appeared that previously to the year 1833 a banking firm had been established at Newton Bushell, in Devonshire, and another banking firm at Totnes, in the same county, and that the members of each firm were originally the same persons, viz. Ashford Wise, Christopher Farwell, Nicholas Baker, and William Searle Bental. On the 3rd of April, 1833, the Newton firm became indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of 200l. and interest thereon, on a promissory note, signed by William Searle Bental on behalf of the firm. In 1834 Baker retired from the Totnes firm, but continued a partner in the Newton firm. Interest was paid on the promissory note by the Newton firm up to the 7th of April, 1837, and in the following June Christopher Farwell died, having made his will, and thereby devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to George Farwell and Henry Richard Roe, defendants, on trust, after payment of debts, for his eldest son, Robert Farwell, and the other persons therein mentioned; and he appointed George Farwell and Henry Richard Roe his executors. Besides the 200l. and interest due to the plaintiff on the promissory note by him and his co-partners, the testator, at his decease, was indebted to the Totnes bank to a considerable amount. Subsequently, Robert Farwell, the son of Christopher Farwell, became a partner in the Totnes firm, which then and afterwards, till its becoming bankrupt, consisted of Wise, Bental, and Farwell, and in like manner the firm at Newton consisted of Wise, Baker, and Bental. After the decease of Christopher Farwell, the surviving partners of the Newton bank continued to pay interest to the plaintiff on the sum due on the promissory note till the year 1841, on the 20th of July, in which year a fiat of bankruptcy was issued against the Newton firm, and creditors' assignees were chosen, and an official assignee was appointed, who are all defendants in this suit. On the 23rd of the same month of July a fiat of bankruptcy issued against the Totnes firm, and creditors' assignees were chosen, and the same official assignee was appointed as in the case of the Newton firm, but the separate estate of Robert Farwell only vested in them, the joint and separate estate of the other partners having vested in the assignees of the Newton firm. The plaintiff duly proved his debt under the fiat issued against the Newton firm, and received from time to time in respect thereof such dividends as were declared. In May, 1842, petitions were presented by the separate creditors of both firms to the Court of Review, praying that the assets of the two firms should be kept separate; but the Court having referred the petitions to the commissioner, he, on the 1st June, 1842, certified that it was fit and proper that they should be consolidated, and an order was accordingly made to that effect. On the 30th of July, 1842, the plaintiff had received dividends amounting to 5s. in the pound on his debt, making in the whole 50l. 8s. 9d.; and on the 16th December, 1842, he presented the promissory note to the defendant, George Farwell, and demanded payment thereof, which was refused. It became necessary, therefore, to institute the present suit to obtain payment of the note out of the separate assets of Christopher Farwell. But, inasmuch as dividends had been paid to the plaintiff and the other creditors who had proved out of the general and consolidated fund, the defendants, the executors, and the other defendants interested under the testator's will, insisted that they had acquiesced in the order, and had therefore accepted the partners in the new partnership, and their estates, as the possessions and the fund liable for their debts, and this acceptance was a discharge of the old partnership firm and the assets of the testator from all liability in respect of their debts. The assignees of the Totnes firm also insisted that they were entitled to priority over the plaintiff in respect of the testator's debt to that firm.

Willcock and Beeson, for the plaintiff, contended that he had a right to go against the separate estate of Christopher Farwell, notwithstanding he had received dividends under the fiat. They cited Lane v. Williams, 2 Vern. 292; Rice v. Shute, 5 Burr. 2611; Devaynes v. Noble, 1 Mer. 539.

Turner (with him Whitebread), for the representatives of Christopher Farwell, contended that as the plaintiff had accepted dividends under the order of the Court of Review, pari passu, with other creditors out of the consolidated fund, he had varied the original contract, and had adopted the surviving partners as his creditors, and discharged the old firm in the same manner as if it was a dealing by a creditor which would vary the contract of the debtor, and thereby discharge his surety. (Ex parte Kendall, 17 Ves. 514.) They cited also David v. Ellice, 5 B. & Cr. 196; Hart v. Alexander, 2 Mee. & Wels. 484; Lodge v. Dicus, 3 B. & Ad. 611; Fisher v. Farrington, Seton, Decr. 239, n.

Webster, for the devisees under the will of Christopher Farwell, cited re Clarke, 1 Ph. 562, overruling Hall v. Smith, 1 B. & C. 407.

Kindersley (with him Mallins), for the assignees of the Totnes bank, argued that the Court could only declare that the plaintiff was entitled in respect of the deficiency of the joint estates to pay his debt to stand as a creditor upon the surplus of Christopher Farwell's estate after satisfaction of the debts due from his separate estate, and the debts due from his estate to the Totnes bank.

Rouppell and Terrell, for the assignees of the Newton bank.

Willcock, in reply.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The original partners in the concern were four, viz. Wise, Farwell, Baker, and Bental, and they carried on the banking business together as co-partners at Newton and Totnes till Baker's retirement from the Totnes firm, and, even after he retired, I am inclined to think, they continued co-partners as to strangers. But however that may be, while the four were partners in the Newton concern a promissory note was given by the firm to the plaintiff for 200l. This transaction took place on the 3rd of April, 1833, and interest was paid on the 200l. up to the 7th of April, 1837. In June, 1837, Christopher Farwell died, the debt of 200l. remaining unpaid. Now, I do not mean to enter into a discussion on the point, but shall merely state my opinion on the authorities. The plaintiff was a creditor of the surviving partners, and of the estate of the deceased partner; and the representatives of the deceased partner were liable to be sued by him. Now, the question is, how was the obligation due from the estate of the deceased partner satisfied? Those who deny the plaintiff's right to enforce payment of his debt in the present suit strove to shew that it was satisfied; how, then, does that appear? It is said that interest was paid by the surviving partners, but where there is a joint and several debt, as this is, and the creditor receives interest from some of his debtors without looking to the others, does that exonerate the latter? No; there is no evidence of any contract to exonerate them. Christopher Farwell's estate is not exonerated, but remains liable to the plaintiff's debt. Changes took place after the death of Christopher Farwell; the Newton bank consisted of only the three surviving partners, but Robert Farwell was introduced into the Totnes firm. A difficulty therefore arises in adjusting the equities between the parties, so as to place the whole on a proper footing; but, because there happens to be that difficulty in carrying out the plaintiff's rights, it is no reason why he should have no right at all. Well, after the bankruptcy, application was made to the Court of Review to administer the estates of the different partners, and that Court being competent, and having exclusive authority to do so, makes an order referring the consideration of the matter to the commissioner, who, notwithstanding the petitions, drew up his certificate recommending administration in a particular form. That is said to be a variation from the legal form of distributing bankrupts' estates. The order, however, was made, and the parties carried it into execution, and dividends were declared which were not the same as if that mode had not been adopted. This plaintiff, then, who has a right to proceed against the estate of the deceased partner, and also against the surviving partners, being informed that he may receive dividends on his debt, did receive them in the only way in which he could receive them; and this, it is said, therefore, amounts to a contract to forego his claim against the original debtor or his estate. But that is not so; he does not waive his right, nor is his acceptance of the dividend an exoneration of the estate of the deceased partner from his charge against it. If the objection raised to the plaintiff's claim were allowed to prevail, it would be unsafe for any one to act under the directions of a Court of competent jurisdiction, and the plaintiff could not in the present case, without having recourse to very expensive proceedings, obtain a variation of the order made in the bankruptcy by the Court of Review. The plaintiff, then, by the receipt of dividends payable out of the consolidated fund, in respect of his debt, did not vary the original contract or exonerate the estate of the deceased partner, although the payment was not primarily made in the same manner as it would have been if no order had been previously pronounced; but, notwithstanding that circumstance, I am of opinion that the plaintiff ought to be considered a creditor of the testator, and entitled to be paid what remained due to him out of the testator's separate estate. On the questions of directions for working out the equities, between the parties, Sir John Leach declined to make any order, but I don't feel satisfied as to that, and I will consider how I can assist in working them out between the defendants.

MASSEY v. CARVICK.

Practice—Enlarging publication—Delay.

Publication having been twice enlarged on the application of the plaintiff, and the time having expired for which it was the second time enlarged, the plaintiff applied to the Master to enlarge again, but he refused on the ground that he had no jurisdiction. The Court, however, granted the application, though there was neglect on the part of the plaintiff, and the interrogatories were prepared before the expiration of the second enlargement; but only on the condition that the plaintiff paid the costs.

This was an application on the part of the plaintiff to enlarge publication. It appeared that the plaintiff, Mrs. Massey, before her marriage with her present husband, Mr. Massey, had lent 5,000l. on mortgage of certain freeholds, to Carvick, the defendant; and Carvick being about to pay off the mortgage, proposed that she should take a judgment debt for 1,100l. due to him from one Moore, in part payment of the mortgage money. Mrs. Massey at first objected to this, and said she preferred the money; but being told the security was very good, she at last consented. Carvick's solicitor, Mr. Montrieu, was also Mrs. Massey's solicitor. In 1832 Mrs. Massey was married to her present husband, having previously settled her property to her separate use; and Montrieu, her solicitor, was the trustee of the settlement. It further appeared that though Moore never paid any interest on the 1,100l. Montrieu himself paid Mrs. Massey regularly up to the year 1840, when he left this country, and now lives at Caen, in Normandy. The judgment debt turned out to be of no value, for after the judgment had been entered up, and before the assignment of the debt to Mrs. Massey, Carvick had agreed to discharge from it the only available property belonging to Moore; and as Mrs. Massey had released the mortgaged estate from all claims, she found herself without any security. In this state of things she filed her bill with a view to make Carvick answerable for Moore's debt, and in default of payment by him, to recharge Moore's estate. The bill was filed on the 20th of March, 1844; the answer was put in on the 7th of August, 1845; and a replication was filed on the 6th of January, 1846. On the 3rd of March, 1846, publication was enlarged till the first day of Easter Term, and then it was enlarged again for six weeks from the 15th of April, which time expired on the 26th of May. It appeared that the plaintiff had, before the second application, discovered the existence of a correspondence by Montrieu, and she alleged that it would be useless to go into evidence without those documents, and what she sought now was, to enlarge publication till Michaelmas Term, to enable her to obtain the documents; application had been made to the Master to enlarge, but as the second period of time allowed by him had expired before the application was made, he refused on the ground that he had no jurisdiction. It appeared, also, that interrogatories were prepared before the second application.

Kindersley and Lewis for the motion.

Turner (with him Giffard).—Replication was filed on the 6th of January last, and there have been two orders already to enlarge publication, and now a third is asked. The ground of the application by the plaintiff is, that it is of no use to go into evidence without these documents; but was there any search made for them from January to June? The question is, has the plaintiff made out any case entitling her to the indulgence? She had from the 3rd of March till Easter Term to think of the matter; and she knew, before making the second application for enlargement, that the documents in question were in existence. She ought to shew that she has used due diligence, and should assign some good reason for the present application being necessary, but she has not done so. The correspondence of Montrieu itself only can be useful; for if they had it at the taking of the evidence, all they could do would be to cross-examine him on his own letters.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—After the interrogatories were prepared it was found that a certain correspondence existed, and the plaintiff having to examine Montrieu on matters on which he had corresponded, wanted to let him see what was written. I think there has been neglect on the part of the plaintiff, who has not used due diligence. The time having expired, the Master had no jurisdiction; and the question is, shall I allow this motion where there is want of diligence? It is material that the cause be not delayed, and the Court often sets down a cause to prevent this, and that might be done here. The evidence can't be said to be of no use; and, if possible, it is right to have it. I therefore grant the plaintiff's application on payment by her of the costs. Enlarge the time till the 6th of November next.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

April 24 and 25, and May 8.

TOMBS v. ROCH.

Distribution of assets.—Contribution between specific legatees and general devisees.

Where a testator by his will made a general devise of real estate, and gave specific and pecuniary legacies, and died leaving simple contract and specialty debts, for the payment of the whole of which the personal estate was insufficient, it was held that as between the specific legatees and the general devisees there should be contribution for the discharge of the specialty debts.

William Henry Scourfield, late of the Mote, in the county of Pembroke, esq. deceased, by his will, dated the 26th of September, 1840, devised his mansion, called the Mote, and all his real estate to trustees to certain uses, for the benefit of his wife for life, and after her decease, to the use of his sons successively in strict settlement: and the testator bequeathed certain pictures to his said trustees upon trust to permit the same to be held and enjoyed with his said mansion house, as far as the rules of law and equity would admit, by the persons for the time being entitled to the said mansion house by virtue of his will, &c. The testator then gave certain specific and pecuniary legacies, and appointed the said trustees executors of his will. The will was proved by the executors. The personal estate not specifically bequeathed, though sufficient for the payment of the testator's simple contract debts, was not sufficient for the payment of the testator's specialty debts. The suit was instituted by creditors against the executors for the administration of the estate, and the principal subject of discussion was as to the liability of the general devisees to contribute, with the specific legatees, towards the payment of the specialty debts.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The will in question in this cause, which was made in the year 1840, and therefore after the recent Act for altering the law relating to wills had come into operation, does not charge the testator's real estate, or any part of it, with his debts. The assets are wholly legal, and it does not appear, nor is it alleged, that any portion of his property was, when he made his will, or at his death, in mortgage, or charged specifically with any debt. The will devises a portion of his real estate to his wife during her widowhood, and, so subject, devises the whole of his real estate to various uses in strict settlement, in language sufficient, I suppose, to include (though not in terms pointing to) such real estate, if any, as he acquired between his will and his death. But it has not been stated that there was any such acquisition. I assume that there was not; and without intimating any opinion either way. Now if there had been any such acquisition, the case would have stood as to the real estate so after acquired, or whether for any purpose now under consideration, there is a difference between a residuary devise of real estate, and a devise of real estate not residuary, I may say that, in my judgment, not any portion of the real estate in the present case ought to be treated as otherwise than particularly devised. The will also gives specific and pecuniary legacies. The personal estate not specifically bequeathed has been admitted to be more than sufficient for the payment of the simple contract debts, but it has proved insufficient for the payment of the specialty debts, and the question for decision is, whether the amount necessary in addition to the personal estate not specifically bequeathed to pay the specialty debts, is to fall wholly on the specific legatees, or rateably on them and the devisees, for the specific legatees do not deny their liability to contribute. That in a country such as England, a question probably of so frequent occurrence should at this day be remaining an open and arguable question—that it should not long since have been settled conclusively—does seem a very remarkable circumstance, if the fact is so. Assuming the point to be open, I must decide it as well as I can. Viewed otherwise than in a manner merely technical, considered upon principles of abstract justice, the question is of course clear of difficulty, and must obviously be answered against the contention of the devisees. They, however, say that abstract justice has nothing to do with the matter, that the question is ruled by a branch of the positive law of the country, making, they say, the personal estate the first fund for paying the debts; an argument upon which it may not perhaps be improper to observe, that where the effect of pursuing a branch of law merely positive to its fullest extent and consequences, without exception or mitigation, must be a departure from natural equity, a desertion of all but the most artificial reason,—must for example be such as in the simple case of a testator giving a specific part of his property to one person, and another specific part of it to another, to throw as between them the debts upon either exclusively, but with solid and practical distinctions in this respect between a case of giving two perpetual annuities of 100l. per annum, part of the 3 per cent. Consolidated Annuities, and a case of giving two perpetual annuities of 100l. per annum, charged on a freehold estate; between a case of giving two horses, and a case of giving a horse and a stable owned absolutely by the testator; between immovable property belonging to him absolutely, and immovable property belonging to him for a term of 10,000 years; between immovable property limited to him and his heirs for their lives, and immovable property belonging to him for 99 years, if either of three lives shall last so long; distinctions which men, without our black letter reading, might perhaps find it difficult to state with gravity—it must surely be right not to submit, until thoroughly convinced of the necessity of submitting, to be driven to such an extremity. A great judge is represented by Mr. Ambler as saying of the rule of the Court in marshalling assets and funds, that "there is not a more useful power in this Court, for where there are creditors and legacies to children for their portions, if the law was to have its full force, though the reason of it was good when it was originally framed, yet in case the creditors were to exhaust the personal estate, it would be to the ruin of families." The civil law, too, says well, "Nulla juris ratio aut equitas benignitas patitur ut que subreptis pre utilitate hominum introducuntur ea nos duriore interpretatione contra ipsorum commodum produmsum ad severitatem." Now, it must be agreed that by our law the personal estate of a deceased debtor is primò facto, and generally the sole fund when sufficient; and when insufficient, the first fund for the payment of his debts. But it is equally true that this does not hold universally. The regulation is subject to exceptions founded on justice and reason. The familiar cases of marshalling in favour of legacies against freehold estates descended, against such devised freehold estate as the testator has by his will charged with his debts, and against a devised freehold estate which the testator has mortgaged for a debt of his own, occur to the mind at once as instances. Those cases in which a testator has in so many words actually said in what order his assets are to be arranged, have of course nothing to do with the present matter. The devisees, however, here assert that the instances of exception given are special cases; that special cases of such a kind do not, directly or in principle, affect or extend to the simple case now before the Court, which, as between a devisee and a general pecuniary legatee, has been directly decided, and is settled by authority against the legatee; and that for the present purpose there is no difference, no ground of distinction, between a specific and a general pecuniary legatee. In support of this argument the devisees rely very much on the statute of Fraudulent Devises and the statute of 1833, having been intended for the benefit of creditors only, and not intended to advance the rights or improve the condition of legatees; and I suppose it to be true that the Statute of Fraudulent Devises (a measure which it was not creditable to the English Legislature to have delayed until a period so late as the reign of William III. and which was so imperfect as to leave our law of debtor and creditor in that more than Millarian state in which the commencement of the 19th century found it)—that the statute of Fraudulent Devises, I say, and the statute of 1833, were passed with a view only to the payment of creditors. The force of that remark, however, against legatees for such a purpose as the present I have not been able to feel. I have not the capacity of seeing, for any purpose now under consideration, the materiality of the question how or why the creditors' rights became vested in them. A charge of debts on freehold estate by a will may be supposed generally to be intended, in fact, for the benefit of the creditors merely, but the consequences to others are admitted and obvious. A mortgagee's lien is generally intended only for the mortgagee's benefit, but has other ulterior effects. Why should I refer to a vendor's lien? Why mention the case of pecuniary legacies, where to one legatee only is given a right to revert to the real estate? That may seem justly intended, in fact, for the benefit of the single legatee only, but operates often farther. The equity of marshalling arises from a creditor's power to resort, not from the form or mode in which he accounts the power of resorting, to each or either of two funds belonging to the debtors whose rights, subject to the debts, have become divided; and though I do not forget the passages found in the reports of Gibbs v. Hancock and Forrester v. Lord Leigh, it seems to me impossible, consistently with the principles of decisions of the highest authority, or consistently with any legal principle, to take the view of the effect and consequences of a liability to creditors created merely by statute, that the devisees take in this case. Certainly the liability in general of personal estate, in the first instance, to the debts of a deceased debtor, the intent of the Statute of Fraudulent Devises, and the intent of the statute of 1833 do not in my judgment establish this proposition. I have dwelt the more upon their arguments grounded on the nature and effects of the statutory liability to debts, because, if it is well founded, it seems in substance not to stop short of asserting that, inasmuch as it is by statute that copyholds are assets for creditors, and freeholds for simple contract creditors, therefore there cannot be marshalling of legacies against descended copyholds, or, in respect of simple contract debts, against descended freeholds. It will surprise me exceedingly to hear such a doctrine having met or meeting with support or acceptance. I proceed, then, to deal with the point immediately before me, as one that, notwithstanding the general objection to which I have been referring, was reasonably and properly arguable on behalf of the specific legatees. The question, as I have said, is one of contribution, which, if it differs from marshalling, does so in species rather than generically—in form rather than in nature. Marshalling and contribution are, each of them, the adjustment between several persons of their rights respectively inter se in respect of a charge or claim which, affecting all of them, or properties belonging to all of them respectively, has been or may be enforced in a manner not unjust as far as the person is concerned by whom it was or may be enforced, but not just as between the persons or properties liable; a branch of jurisprudence known to the civil law, and which could not but be long, in some form more or less extensive, to an enlightened system of laws. In our's it is well established and familiar. The first inquiry then is, whether we have here a case in which properties belonging respectively to the persons who are the specific legatees, and to the persons who are the devisees, are affected by a charge or claim which may be enforced in a manner such as I have just mentioned. They are so, certainly, for the properties given to them respectively by the will of the testator in the cause are liable, that is, every part of them is liable, to the debts remaining unsatisfied, and there must be some rule or principle according to which, as between the specific legatees and the devisees, that charge or claim must be by apportionment or otherwise borne—a rule or principle by which the creditors are not bound. The next inquiry is as to the nature of that rule or principle, or, in other words, what are the rights respectively of the specific legatees and devisees inter se, in respect of the debts to which the properties of each are, as I have said, liable—an inquiry that, in this case, can only be answered by looking at the testator's will, of which these rights, whatever they may be, are merely the creatures. Every thing claimed by each party is claimed under the bounty of the testator. It was for him to prescribe what each should have. His intention must be the sole guide here, and that must be collected from his will. What then was his intention? Making to different persons various specific gifts of moveable and immovable chattels and real estate. Did he wish, did he mean that portion of them, consisting of real estate, should be wholly indemnified from his debts by the rest? That is the question. Now we do not need to refer to the doctrine of what is called by us election, to be satisfied of the proposition that a testator must be considered to desire the fulfilment of all the provisions of his will, according to their apparent purport. If so, then where one mode of arranging his assets for the payment of his creditors must wholly or partially disappoint those provisions according to their apparent purport, while by another they stand whole or are less invaded, it must surely be right to attribute to him a wish and meaning in favour of the latter course, so far as the objects of these provisions are concerned. Accordingly, as we know, the mere fact that a testator by his will makes gifts, though he does not mention his debts, or allude to a debt or a creditor, has the effect of changing the order and manner in which his assets bear the burthen of his debts. If a man dies intestate, owning freehold and personal estate, and indebted by specialty and simple contract, all his debts, whether by specialty or simple contract, whether secured or not secured by mortgage, fall, in the first instance, on his personal estate, and, if that be deficient, on the various portions of his freehold estate rateably, so that, should it devolve in different lines of descent, each heir suffers equally, or in proportion. But let him leave a will making gifts, though wholly silent on the subject of his debts, and not alluding to a debt or to a creditor, and the case is altered, for the portion, if any, of his freehold estate, which he has allowed to descend, though also not mentioned or alluded to, may, in relief of the personal estate, be practically subjected to debts with which, had there not been a will, it would not have been burdened, or would have been to a less extent burdened, and the portion of the freehold estate devised, if mortgaged by the testator for his own debt, may be made practically liable to that debt, in exoneration or relief also of the personal estate, though the will does not in any manner allude to the mortgage. All this, which is so trite and obvious as almost to render the mention, much more the repetition of it, mere waste of time, can, I apprehend, only be on the foundation of ascribing to the testator such an intention as I have stated, though the will is silent upon it. In truth, I consider it to be perfectly correct in principle to say that every will ought to be read as in effect embodying a declaration by the testator that the payment of his debts shall be as far as possible so arranged as not to disappoint any of the gifts made by it, unless the instrument discloses a different intention. And for authority, whether the cases upon election are for this purpose reckoned or omitted, I think it certain that the real ground, the true principle, of a set and series of decisions, bearing directly as well as indirectly on the present question, which are universally recognised as binding,—a principle not the less sound for being agreeable to natural equity,—is, that wills ought to be so read and construed. How, indeed, else is the bulk, not to say the whole, of the various cases in which marshalling clearly takes place under different circumstances, for general as well as specific legacies,—how else is the liability of descended freeholds to indemnify devised freeholds from debts, secured or not secured by mortgage, to be satisfactorily accounted for? I should thus express myself, had Albion v. Cooper, 5 Ves. 382, not existed; but I may add that, cautious and measured as was the language in which generally, and in that case especially, Lord Eldon spoke, he would not in my judgment have used the words "They shall not disappoint another person whom the testator intended should be satisfied," which are in page 398 of the Report, or in the next page, "as strong an inclination of the testator," and "that denotation of intention," had he taken a different view. It is equally unnecessary, I think, to refer to what Lord Hardwicke, in 1761, is reported as saying, "The Court will order it so that every body may have satisfaction, and the whole intention complied with." Such a declaration then being embodied, or considered as embodied, in a will must surely operate equally for the benefit of all upon whom the will professes to confer benefits; and, if the state of the assets does not allow complete effect to be given to it, ought surely to fail, so far as it does fail, to the equal prejudice of all, without any distinction between the gifts whether of moveable or immovable property, whether of real or personal estate. If a testator, giving specific legacies to A and B, and making particular devises to C and D, were to say "Neither A nor B, nor C nor D shall be called upon to pay any of my debts," could there be any doubt as to the equality? And what, substantially, is the difference? What good reason can the feudal lawgiver towards the feudal heir, can the more than unjust privilege, now no longer dishonouring our law, which was allowed to landed proprietors dying at once wealthy and insolvent, or can any other source supply, for giving any preference to a devisee over a legatee, in such circumstances as we are now considering? The general rule of construction, however, that I have stated, if I am right in supposing it to exist, is like most general rules, not wholly exempt from qualifications. The qualifications to which I consider it subject, and the reason on which I suppose them founded, I proceed to notice. The first is rather explanation than qualification, being that such an intention does not operate against or in favour of any of the creditors, their rights being regulated by law so far as the testator does not expressly exercise the power that he has now, less than formerly, of affecting them, though where simple contract debts and legacies are charged together on real estate, the former, from a presumed intention on a testator's part—a presumed intention, I say, on his part, to be just before being generous, were ultimately placed higher than the latter. Possibly also the doctrine on which Lord Rosslyn acted in the case of Pearce v. Loman, 3 Atk. 330, ought scarcely to be reckoned as a qualification. It does not perhaps interfere with the general rule that I believe to exist, but if it does, it is a qualification of a very particular and limited nature, resting on special and peculiar grounds. So is that as to charities created and established by a class of decisions which the policy of the statute, commonly called the Mortmain Act, was considered to render necessary, though I never felt any surprise that Mr. Justice Ashurst should have expressed himself on the subject as he did in the case of Macham v. Hooper, 4 Bro. Ch. Ca. 163. There may be noticed also the distinction, already to some extent referred to, which in particular circumstances has for certain purposes been introduced and established between general debts of a testator and his debts standing secured specifically at the time of his death, or any particular portion of his property. In general, as between those who take under his will if he is silent on the subject, his debts secured are paid in the same manner as debts of the same rank not secured; but there are particular cases of deficient assets where specific legatees or devisees of property on which debts of the testator stand specifically secured are held to take the property with the burden. The reasons given for this, though the cases are not, I agree, to be questioned, are perhaps, if I may venture with deference to say so, not entirely satisfactory, supposing the general rule as to the mode of providing for secured debts to be well founded in principle as probably it is. The distinction, however, seems itself to have been introduced in each of its forms under an impression that it was a distinction required by the intention of the testator. There remains substantially, unless I mistake or forget, but one mere qualification, so at least I call it—the devisees here term it the rule—I mean the exclusion in ordinary cases of a general pecuniary legatee from marshalling against a devise. In this respect, whether truth lay between Lord Harcourt's course and that of Lord Maclesfield, it is perhaps not now material to inquire, as Lord Maclesfield's course is, I conceive, established. Its explanation is, I suppose, to be found in the fixed doctrine of law, that as between specific and pecuniary legatees the burden of the debt belongs to the pecuniary legatees exclusively, where a contrary intention is not manifested. The law considering a testator when giving specific and pecuniary legacies as saying by the very act, unless he declares himself in effect not to mean to say, that if there is a deficiency of the personal estate to satisfy all the legacies, the loss is as between them to fall wholly on the pecuniary legatees—of course I am not referring to a case of ademption. Thus Lord Maclesfield (when in Clifton v. Burt, differing from Lord Harcourt) observed that "every devise of land is as a specific legacy," as a specific legacy—"and that if one gives a specific legacy of a house, of a horse, or diamond, and also a pecuniary legacy of 500*l.* to B. and there are not assets to pay both, still the specific legatee shall be preferred and have his whole legacy." It has, as I have stated, been argued for the devisees here that the principle of the decision against pecuniary legatees in Clifton v. Burt, and the cases that have followed it, applies against a specific legatee. I cannot so view the matter. Lord Maclesfield appears rather to have refused relief to the pecuniary legatee because he was inferior to a specific legatee. If a testator ought, as he is considered prima facie to intend a preference of a specific legatee to a pecuniary legatee, to intend for the former a higher rank than for the latter, it may be thought not an unreasonable or unfair consequence that a similar intention should prima facie be ascribed to him as between a pecuniary legatee and a particular devisee in whose favour as well as in favour of the specific legatee the testator pointing out a specific individual portion of the property directs that he shall have that very thing—a gift incapable of being satisfied by any other means than the very thing pointed out,—and Lord Maclesfield may have thought that a particular devisee contributing for a general legatee would be entitled to call on a specific legatee to share the burden which would make the latter contribute to the general legatee, which would be absurd. Taking the judgment in Clifton v. Burt altogether, I am unable to think that I ought to draw from such expressions as "much less," "a portion," "more to be favoured," and "with more difficulty," which, I agree, occur in the report of it, the inference that Mr. Swanson wished me to draw. Neither can I adopt his suggestion that Onal v. Mead contains something unfavourable, or was meant unfavourably to the case of a specific legatee upon a question such as the present. In Onal v. Mead the specific legatee was wholly preferred to the devisee on a ground already mentioned, namely, by reason of the mortgage. Again, I am not satisfied that the 5th resolution in Haslewood v. Pope ought to be understood as Mr. Swanson wished me to understand it. The Lord Chancellor there seems to me rather to state a case of equality than one of inequality between a devisee and a specific legatee. I am rather disposed to agree with Mr. Roper's construction of that resolution—a resolution deserving certainly great respect, however it ought to be construed, although, probably, it was extra-judicial. I have a copy of the decree, dated 18th August, 1734, from which it does not appear to me that there was any specific bequest in the case, or any point for decision, except that described in the report as the principal point. On the whole, though I believe myself to feel as much respect and deference as any man for the knowledge and capacity of Lord Talbot, I do not consider that the fifth resolution in Haslewood v. Pope binds me. In Middleton v. Seale there is noticed particularly a case, which I have read repeatedly in Ambler and in Dinkins; the case, viz. reported in one book as Handy v. Roberts, in the other as Hanley v. Fisher. The expressions of Lord Hardwicke are differently given by the two reporters, and, probably, with some inaccuracy in each. Whether, upon the whole, it would be safe to consider his lordship's manner of discussing that case as supporting the contention of the specific legatees here, I do not say, but I am satisfied that it would be wrong to draw from it a contrary inference. These remarks tend obviously to a conclusion, on my part, in favour of contribution between the devisees and the specific legatees in this case, and I should have made them probably had neither Long v. Short or Silk v. Pryme existed. But in Long v. Short, which was previous to Clifton v. Burt, as that preceded Tipping v. Tipping, 1 P. Wms. 729, and The Duke of Devonshire v. Atkins, 2 P. Wms. 383, and also preceded Onal v. Mead, which was followed by Haslewood v. Pope, it is well known that Lord Cowper expressly decided in favour of the contribution in such circumstances; nor was Long v. Short, in my opinion, I repeat, intended to be overruled or opposed in Clifton v. Burt, or in Onal v. Mead. The decree of Sir Thomas Sewell, at the Rolls, in Silk v. Pryme, was to the same effect, and, on this point, I believe, not appealed from. But having read a copy of that decree, sent to me from the registrar's office, I am not by any means convinced that the point was contested or called to the attention of Sir Thomas Sewell, though the decree may be thought perhaps at least to afford some evidence of the general sense of the profession at that time on the subject. I can add, if I may venture to speak of my own experience, that it having happened to me to become aware of the case of Long v. Short at a very early period of my professional life, and to have had occasion when at the Bar to consider it more than once, I do not recollect having at any time while at the Bar believed or suspected it not to be a governing decision upon the point now in question, or to have heard it mentioned as an overruled or a bad or doubtful authority on this point. These were my impressions before the case of Cornwall v. Cornwall. But in the summer of 1841 was decided that case, and so high is my respect for the legal knowledge and experience of the learned judge whose decision it is, that, notwithstanding all that I have said, if it had not been distinctly and strongly questioned by another learned judge, to whose legal knowledge and experience great weight also belongs, I should very possibly have followed it against all my former impressions. But the declared opinion of Sir Edward Sugden, in the case of Young v. Hassard, is pointedly and directly at variance with Cornwall v. Cornwall. That opinion has been described as extra-judicial, but certainly it is expressed in a very clear manner, and as, therefore, however satisfactory and agreeable it would be to me to place myself under the joint guidance of those two distinguished persons, that is for the present purpose impossible, as I cannot on this occasion become the disciple of one without deserting the other. I think that I must act independently of each of the two cases, that is to say, deal with this case as I should have dealt with it if Cornwall v. Cornwall and Young v. Hassard were not; consequently, as I continue to entertain an opinion conscientious upon the present point to that of Lord Cowper, I think I must follow Long v. Short, a course which, if not rendered more plainly right, is certainly, I conceive, not rendered less right by the statute of 1833 than it would have been before that statute. Therefore let there be contribution.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Jan. 19 and Feb. 11.

REG. v. THE CORPORATION OF MANCHESTER.
Clerk to magistrates—Compensation under 5 & 6 Vict.
c. 111, s. 1.

In the county of Lancaster, prior to 1839, petty sessions were held for the division of Manchester at Salford, and the general business of the division was there transacted; but petty sessions for limited purposes were also held at Worsley and Heaton Norris. The office of clerk to the magistrate at Salford had been filled for many years by Mr. Mylne. Under a local Act, a stipendiary magistrate for the division sat at Salford, to whom Mr. Mylne was also clerk under the Municipal Corporation Act; but Manchester and five other townships of the division were incorporated. In 1839, a separate commission of the peace was granted to the borough of Manchester. The borough magistrates appointed a Mr. Hickson their clerk. The business of the stipendiary magistrate, and also of the petty sessions, decreased, although their jurisdiction remained the same. By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 111, compensation was to be given to every officer of any borough, county, or division of a county in which such borough was situated, deprived of any fees and emoluments in consequence of the grant of incorporation and grants of separate courts: Held, that Mr. Mylne was not an officer of the division within the Act, and not entitled to compensation, either as clerk to the stipendiary magistrate or to the justices. A mandamus had issued commanding the town council of Manchester to award compensation to Mr. Oswald Mylne, for the diminution of the fees arising from his offices of clerk to the magistrates in petty sessions for the Manchester division of the county of Lancaster, sitting at Salford, and clerk to the stipendiary magistrate appointed to act for the same division under a local Act passed in the 55 Geo. 3. To the writ a return was made which was traversed, and the case went down for trial, when it appeared:—that from the year 1813 downwards, Mr. Mylne had invariably acted as clerk to the stipendiary magistrate appointed under the local Act, and also to the magistrates sitting in petty sessions at Salford, where also the stipendiary magistrate sat, and that, with the exception of petty sessions occasionally held at Worsley and Heaton Norris, at which Mr. Mylne did not act as clerk, no such sessions had been held within the division of Manchester except at Salford. In 1835, the Municipal Corporation Act passed, and incorporated the township of Manchester and five other of the fifty townships, which, under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 43, composed the division of Manchester, into a borough. In the year 1839, a separate commission of the peace was granted to the borough, and from that time forward the business arising within the borough was transacted by the borough magistrates, who appointed a gentleman named Hickson to be their clerk. The jurisdiction of the county justices and of the stipendiary magistrate was not prejudiced by the grant of the separate commission, but the business at Salford fell off. The validity of the charters of incorporation became the subject of litigation, and while the proceedings were pending in the House of Lords, the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 111, passed to confirm them. The 66th section of the 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 76, did not provide for the compensating an officer subject to loss of emoluments in the manner above described; but the 1st section of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 111, confirmed the charters of incorporation, "and all grants of separate courts of sessions of the peace," and the 2nd section enacted, "that every officer of any such borough, or of any county, or any such division of a county in which any such borough is situated . . . who shall have been deprived of any part of the fees and emoluments of his office, in consequence of any such grant, shall be entitled to have an adequate compensation," &c. The learned judge who tried the case told the jury, that if they thought that the sessions which had been held at Salford had been treated by all parties, magistrates as well as suitors, as the petty sessions for the division, and if they thought that Mr. Mylne had also been considered the clerk to the magistrates in such petty sessions, they ought to return a verdict for the Crown. A verdict was returned for the Crown, and subsequently a rule was obtained that called on the prosecutor to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside and a new trial had on the ground of misdirection, because the learned judge ought to have told the jury, first, that Mr. Mylne was not an officer of a division of a county within the meaning of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 111, s. 2; and, secondly, that if he were such an officer, still, as the jurisdiction of the county justices and of the stipendiary magistrate was still co-ordinate within the borough with that of the borough justices, the decrease of the business at Salford was the consequence of the preference given by the borough suitors to the borough magistrates, and therefore Mr. Mylne could not be held to have been "deprived" of any part of his fees and emoluments within the meaning of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 111. Against the rule cause was shewn (Jan. 19) by

In sittings after Trinity Term judgment was delivered as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—This was an application for a mandamus to adjudge compensation to Mr. Mylne for loss of the profits and emoluments of the several offices of clerk to the justices for the division of Manchester and clerk to the justices for the time being, appointed under the 55th of George 3rd, and the profits of prosecuting criminals, and other business connected with the said division. The case went down to a new trial, on the return to a mandamus, at Liverpool, before Mr. Justice Cresswell, and a verdict was taken under his direction for the Crown. We were moved to enter the verdict for the defendant, or for a new trial for misdirection. The claim for compensation was founded on the 2nd section of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 111, which was passed for removing doubts as to the validity of charters granted relating to certain boroughs in pursuance of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, and the Act subsequently passed to amend and confirm such charters, and amongst them was one that had been granted to the borough of Manchester. By the second section it was enacted that every officer of every such borough, or of any county, or any division of the county, in which any such borough is situated, who was in any office of profit at the time of granting any such charter, whose office shall be abolished or be removed from that office, or deprived of any part of the fees or emoluments of such office in consequence of such grant, shall be entitled to compensation under the statute. Mr. Mylne must have been an officer of the borough, or of the county, or of the division of the county in which the borough is situated. He claims, in the first place, as having held the office of clerk to the magistrates acting for the division of Manchester, in the county of Lancaster. It appeared there was a division called the division of Manchester, consisting of forty-three townships, and that the general business of the division was done at the New Bailey, at Salford, and that Mr. Mylne acted as clerk to the magistrates; but it also appeared that the New Bailey is also attended by some of the justices of the division without Manchester, others within Manchester, both being townships in the division of the county for the petty sessions business; and that such justices employed different clerks on some occasions. Mr. Mylne does not appear at any time to have been clerk to the justices of the division generally through any appointment as such, but only to have acted as such to such of the justices as attended the New Bailey, at Salford, there being other persons who attended as clerks to the justices who appointed their own clerks. Without considering the very uncertain nature of the office he appears to have held, it is clear he did not hold it for the whole division. He was not clerk to the justices for the division of Manchester, but only to such of them as attended the New Bailey, at Salford. If Mr. Mylne is entitled to compensation as clerk to the magistrates of the division of Salford, it would be difficult to refuse it to those who acted at other times for some of the other justices by whom they were appointed, and who might also claim to be clerks for the justices acting for the division of Manchester; and we therefore think Mr. Mylne is not entitled to compensation as clerk to the justices for the division of Manchester. We also think there is still less ground for claim to compensation for loss of the profits and emoluments of clerk to the stipendiary magistrates, appointed under the 5 & 6 Geo. 3, which office Mr. Mylne still holds, and the claim is, therefore, only in respect of a diminution of profits. We think it unnecessary to consider whether the diminution is from causes that would entitle him to compensation; as we are clearly of opinion that the clerk to the stipendiary magistrates is not an officer of the borough, county, or division of the county, within the meaning of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 111; he may be merely clerk; clerk to a single magistrate; and as such has no claim to compensation. The learned judge at the trial took a different view of the Act of Parliament and the evidence, and, under his direction, a verdict was found for the Crown. We are of opinion that verdict cannot be supported. We do not find any leave given to enter a verdict for the defendant. Therefore the rule for a new trial must be made absolute. We wish, however, to observe, that though the form of the issue made it necessary to take the opinion of a jury, the question being a clear matter of law on the facts themselves, they may suggest a statement of the case on the facts, as they appear on my learned brother's notes, which may be turned into a special case.

BRUNTON v. THOMPSON.

Sale-Agent—Broker.

Where an undisclosed principal sues upon a contract alleged to have been made with his agent, and which is proved by the agent, the proper question to be left to the jury is, whether it was really made by the agent for the principal, although in his, the agent's name, and not whether the defendant meant to contract, and did contract with the agent.

The declaration averred that the contract in respect of which the defendant ought to have indemnified the plaintiff, was a contract as usual among stock and sharebrokers, but did not aver that the person with whom it had been made was a stockbroker: Held, upon motion in arrest of judgment, that this sufficed as an averment as to the nature of the defendant's liability.

M. Chambers, Q.C. in Easter Term moved for a rule nisi, to set aside the verdict for misdirection, and in arrest of judgment. The facts are stated in the judgment, which was delivered at the end of the sittings after Term.

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—This was a rule for a new trial, moved for by Mr. Chambers. The plaintiff was a stock and sharebroker, and sued the defendant for indemnifying him in respect of a contract for certain railway shares which he had employed the plaintiff to buy. In order to prove the contract, the plaintiff's son was called, who swore he was not himself engaged in business, although a sworn broker and a member of the Stock Exchange, and that he was not in partnership with his father, but only clerk to him, and made the contract in his behalf. The defendant was not before the transaction in question personally acquainted with either the plaintiff or the witness; he was introduced by a mutual friend, saw the witness, and gave the order in question. A note of the contract was handed to the defendant; it was partly printed, and had the word "stockbroker" printed at the foot, and the name of the witness was written first above, and no notice of the plaintiff taken in it except the Christian name of the plaintiff and the witness being the same. The defendant called several times and never saw the plaintiff, nor does it seem that the plaintiff's name was ever mentioned. The learned judge put the question to the jury whether the contract was really made by the son as agent for the father although his own name was used, and they found it was, and the verdict passed for the plaintiff. A new trial was moved for on the ground of misdirection, it being contended that the learned judge ought to have put the question to the jury whether the defendant meant to contract, and did contract, with the son or the father. We are of opinion there was no misdirection. Assuming the plaintiff supposed himself to be contracting with the son, the father's name not being disclosed, still if the son was the agent only, it is clear the action may be brought by the father. The rule is general that where a contract not under seal is made with an agent in his own name on disclosing the principal, either the agent or the principal may sue on it, the defendant, in the latter case, being entitled to be placed in the same situation at the time of the disclosure as if the agent had been the contracting party. Sims v. Bond, 5 B. & Ad. There are many cases to the same effect; indeed, this being the undoubted rule of law, it was quite immaterial with whom the defendant supposed himself to be contracting, unless he shows any set-off which he might have, if the son had been the real contracting party. That was not contended. The only difference it was said to make was, that the son was called as a witness, which could not have been the case if he had sued as plaintiff. That is always the case where the question of agency arises. Another objection was, that the defendant had no notice from the plaintiff; this, in fact, depends on the question already discussed. It was further argued on that point, that there was no proof that Hitchcock, from whom the plaintiff bought the shares, was ready and willing to deliver them at the appointed time; the answer is, it was proved that they did deliver them to the plaintiff at that time; and, it was said, readiness and willingness included, having a title to the thing to be delivered. It was said that Hitchcock had not signed the Parliamentary contract or any deed respecting the shares. The answer is, they had the shares, and delivered them, and that they were what were contracted for. No point was made at the trial as to the law as laid down in Young v. Smith, in the Court of Exchequer. It was further argued in arrest of judgment that the declaration did not aver that Hitchcock was a broker, though it is averred the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant was that he should contract for shares in the manner usual among stock and sharebrokers. That averment does not mean that he should contract with sharebrokers, but that, as between him and the defendant, the contract he should make, and in respect of which the defendant was to indemnify him, should be made in the manner usual among sharebrokers; it is averred it was so. We think, therefore, on the whole no rule ought to be granted in this case. Rule refused.

LAWTON v. HICKMAN.

Railways—7 & 8 Vict. c. 110—Confirmation of Young v. Smith.

Declaration, for goods and chattels sold and delivered. Plea, that the said goods and chattels were shares in a joint-stock company (describing it) so as to bring it within 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, s. 2, and negating the exceptions, and alleging that no complete registration had been obtained. Replication, that it was a company for the purpose of making and maintaining a certain railway to be called the Grand Union, under the powers of an Act of Parliament, and that the said railway could not be carried into execution without the authority of Parliament. It then averred provisional registration according to the statute.

Held on demurrer. 1. That the description of the objects of the company was sufficient to bring it within the proviso at the end of the 2nd section relating to railway companies.

2. That it was not necessary to aver that these objects were the sole objects of the company.

3. That railway shares were goods and chattels; and, 4. That the 26th section of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, does not apply to railway companies, for the effect of the proviso in section 2 is to exclude the companies therein described from the operation of the Act, except where they are expressly mentioned and brought within any particular clause, and that therefore the decision in Young v. Smith is correct.

This was a demurrer to a replication, which, together with the three following cases, raise the question decided in Young v. Smith, and also various points upon pleading the statute.

This was argued by Cowling, for the demurrer, and Martin, contra.

The argument against the decision of Young v. Smith was founded upon a minute analysis of the Act, and the comparison of the different sections, much in the same way as that adopted in the article upon the subject (supra, 6 Law T. 247). It is not thought necessary to give it at length.

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—To a declaration for goods and chattels sold and delivered, and money due on an account stated, the plea is, that the goods and chattels are shares in the capital stock of a joint-stock company, illegally sold and delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant, by the delivery of scrip certificates after the 1st of November, 1844, contrary to the form of the statute; and that the account stated relates to the same illegal sale and delivery. The plea further states, that the said company was, before and at the time of such sale and delivery, a joint-stock company established in England, for the purpose of profit to the shareholders, proprietors, and subscribers agreeing thereto, and not as a banking company, school, scientific or literary institution, friendly society, or building society, and that it was a partnership whereof the capital was allotted and divided into shares, so as to be transferable without the express consent of the copartners; but it was not incorporated by charter or statute; and that it was commenced after November, 1844; and had not, at any time before the said sale and delivery, obtained a certificate of complete registration; and the plaintiff, before and at the time of the sale and delivery, claimed to be entitled to the said shares, and sold and delivered them to the defendant as being so entitled. The replication then seeks to bring the company within the proviso of the second section, alleging that it was established for the purpose of making and maintaining a certain railway, to be called the Grand Union Railway, under the powers of an Act of Parliament to be obtained for the purpose, the said railway to take certain powers usually given by Parliament to railway companies; and that the purposes of the said company, and of the said railway, could not be carried into execution, without first obtaining the authority of Parliament; and that the company was a company for executing the railway within the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, containing the said proviso; and it was averred that within twelve months after the said sale and delivery, the said company was provisionally registered, and obtained a certificate of provisional registration, pursuant to the statute. The special demurrer assigns for causes, first, the circumstance of the company being established for the purposes in the replication mentioned, will not make the sale legal; the second cause of demurrer is, that, consistently with the replication, the railway might be carried into execution without the authority of Parliament; that the powers requisite for its execution were not illegitimate, but that the description of the company in this respect is too general, and puts in issue matter of law. To this the answer is, that the description following the words of the Act appears to us perfectly sufficient. It seems that the objects of the railway company, for which the authority of Parliament is requisite, are set out in the defendant's replication; and furthermore, that we, like the Court of Exchequer, are so familiar with the nature of railway companies, that it would be impossible to decline taking judicial notice of them, and of the necessity of their obtaining an Act of Parliament. The third cause of demurrer is, that the execution of the railway was not said to be the sole purpose of the company. We think this is not necessary. The proviso in terms does not require it to be for the sole purpose, and the Court will not presume it to be authorised for any other. This, indeed, is not impossible, but if the railway company is charged with illegitimate objects, which were never contemplated under its Act, this ought to be averred. We think there is nothing in the last objection that railway shares are not goods and chattels. We revert now to the first cause of demurrer, which fairly raises the question whether the circumstance of the company being established for the execution of a railway, requiring authority of Parliament, prevents the 26th section from rendering the sale of shares illegal. Now that proviso is most remarkable in its terms, and it directly prevents the Act from operating on any railway company, which cannot be carried into execution without the authority of Parliament, except as the said Act has specially provided. The Act, therefore, does not operate on such company at all, unless there is a special provision, and then only as may be specially provided. This is not a proviso in the ordinary sense—something engrafted on the preceding enactment; but it is something that prevents every enactment of the statute from operating on such companies, except in a particular case, and that case is not the occurrence of any extrinsic fact which must depend altogether on the particular case, but it depends entirely on the contents of the Act itself, which the Court is bound to notice, to examine, and construe; and decide for itself whether a special provision is to be found in it; so that if such special provision applies to the matter in hand, the proviso must have the same force in reference to every enactment as if it were repeated at the close of each clause, and is in effect a proviso that ought to be specially pleaded; and it is in the light of an exception, or rather an enactment, over-riding the whole, that to such companies the express enactment shall not extend, unless we discover in the Act a special provision which shall make it apply. We have carefully gone through the sections in which special provisions are made with respect to railway companies, several of which, the 4th, 7th, and 9th, were brought under the notice of the Court of Exchequer in the argument in the case of Young v. Smith; but the result of our investigation is, that they are not special provisions, which by necessary implication apply to the 26th section. The 25th section was fully commented upon, and was said to prove that the 26th must have been intended to apply to railway companies as well as others; and there is some weight in the argument for this intention, though Mr. Baron Alderson thought that different classes of companies are contemplated by this section. But if we consider the 26th section making the company to deal in shares before complete registration to be subject to the proviso in the second section, that it shall extend to no railway company except as by the said Act specially provided, we are driven to search for this special provision, and finding none, to say that the section does not extend to them. Whether this was intended by the Legislature, we do not propose to give any opinion. That they intended to deal with railway companies differently to others there can be no doubt; and the special provision respecting the sale of shares before registration may have been omitted inadvertently or by positive design; it is enough for a court of law to say it is omitted, and consequently the plaintiff is entitled to our judgment. Judgment for the plaintiff.

LOONIE V. OLDFIELD.

Plea under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110—Railway companies. Where upon the pleadings it appears that the company is a railway company, a general averment that it cannot be carried into execution without the authority of an Act of Parliament is sufficient without a more particular specification of the objects and purposes of the company.

Demurrer to pleas.—This decided the general question as to the preceding case, but the pleadings were somewhat different. It was argued on the same day.

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—The declaration was for money paid and for work and labour as brokers in purchasing shares and scrip certificates in a certain railway undertaking, and an account stated. Plea, that after the 2 & 3 Vict. and after the 1st of November, 1844, the plaintiff, broker and agent to the defendant, purchased on his account certain shares in a certain joint-stock company called the London, Worcester, and Rugby Railway Company, the formation of which was commenced after the 1st of November, 1844, and in England, but that it was a joint-stock company within the provisions and true intent and meaning of the said Act, setting out the particulars, and negating the exception in the second section, and that the money was advanced and the commission charged in the account stated, in and about the purchase of such shares before complete registration of the said company, and without any certificate of complete registration, or authority of Parliament having been obtained for carrying into execution any works of the said railway, of all which the plaintiff had notice, and which purchase was contrary to the statute. The replication is, that the said company was a company for executing works which could not be carried into execution without obtaining the authority of Parliament. This replication is demurred to, because it does not show the works cannot be carried on without the authority of Parliament. We are of opinion it sufficiently appears on the whole record to be a railway company, and we may properly take notice that a railway company cannot be carried into execution without the authority of Parliament, and, as we have stated in the former case, judgment in this case must be for the plaintiff.

FISHER V. AINS.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—This was a similar replication to a similar plea in the same form, and our judgment will also be for the plaintiff.

O'NEIL V. BRINDLE.

A plea under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, must show how it is intended to be registered.

Demurrer to plea. This case was argued by Cowling, for the demurrer.

Barnie, contra.

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—There will be the same judgment, because, though the plea avers the company was such a one as requires to be registered under the Act, it does not show why that is so.

RAY-C. HIRST.

7 & 8 Vict. c. 110.

A plea under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, must negative the exceptions in sec. 2.

Plea similar to the preceding, but omitting to negative the exceptions.

Sir John Bayley, in support of the demurrer.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—The plaintiff clearly is entitled to judgment, because the exception in the 2nd section was not negated in the plea.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

May 7, and July 6.

GAMBLE V. KURTZ.

In an action for the infringement of a patent for the manufacture of sulphate of soda, it appeared that the plaintiff's patent consisted of two retorts, connected by an inclined plane, and also connected with the rest of an extensive apparatus, consisting of receivers, &c. The plaintiff's claim, after describing by drawings the apparatus to be employed, proceeded—"I do not claim the exclusive use of iron retorts, but I do claim as my invention iron retorts worked in connection with each other, as above described." The jury found "that the invention of two separate chambers and furnaces was not new, but that the plaintiff's mode of connecting the same was new."

Held, that this amounted to a verdict for the defendant, upon the pleas, denying that the plaintiff was the first inventor, and the novelty of the invention. Held, also, that the material employed was no part of the essence of the invention, and that the defendant having used a contrivance similar to that patented by the plaintiff, except that one of the retorts was made of brick instead of iron, the plaintiff was entitled to retain his verdict upon the plea of not guilty.

This was an action on the case for the infringement of a patent, tried before Colman, J. at the sittings in London after Hilary Term, 1846. The jury found a special verdict, and cross-rules were obtained in the following Easter Term. Upon the argument, Chamwell and Byles, Serjts. (with them Cowling), appeared for the plaintiff; and Talfourd, Serjt. (with him Webster), for the defendant. The questions, as is nearly always the case in patent causes, were mainly questions of fact and mechanical science, and it would be quite impossible to set out the argument so as to make it intelligible, without drawings of the models to which reference was made throughout the discussion. All that is material appears in the judgment of the Court, which was now delivered by COLTMAN, J. (a).—This was an action on the case for infringing the plaintiff's patent, granted for improvements in apparatus for the manufacture of sulphate of soda, muriatic acid, chlorine, and chlorides. The defendant pleaded, 1, not guilty; 2, that the plaintiff was not the first inventor; 3, that the alleged invention was not new, and several other pleas which it is not necessary to mention. At the trial before me it was proved by the plaintiff that the apparatus formerly used for making sulphate of soda was a brick reverberating furnace, consisting of a single chamber, with a fire at one end of it, the fire striking against the roof of the chamber reflected down to the floor, and the smoke and gas passed out at one end of the chamber. It also appeared that there was Lutwyche's patent, which was also a single chamber, one part of the floor of which was iron, the other brick, the whole of which was heated by the same furnace, and when the materials had been decomposed in the lower part of the chamber they were removed to the raised part, where the heat of the fire was greater than that at the other end of the chamber, and there dried or roasted. The plaintiff in his specification stated "instead of the brick furnaces hitherto employed for the decomposition of common salt and for its conversion into sulphate of soda, I have found that iron retorts constantly employed at an elevated temperature may be advantageously substituted for that purpose, the muriatic acid disengaged therefrom effectually, and condensed by the receiver hereafter described." He then by words and drawings describes his apparatus as consisting of two iron retorts, each having a separate furnace, one for decomposing the salt, the other for roasting or finishing the sulphate of soda. The materials, when decomposed, were to be pushed from one retort into the other along an inclined plane into which they were collected together. The specification then proceeded as follows:—"As the above operation proceeds, the muriatic gas, as expelled from the sulphate, passes off from the inner chamber and into the main pipe, and from that pipe into the first receiver." These parts of the apparatus were also explained by drawings, and at the end of the explanation the plaintiff thus describes his claim:—"I do not claim the exclusive use of iron retorts, but I do claim as my invention iron retorts worked in connection with each other as above described; nor do I claim the exclusive use of receivers, as the bulk of the acid can pass from one to the other, or can be cut off at pleasure, when strong acids are required." The defendant had used for making sulphate of soda two chambers, one of iron and one of brick, both connected by an opening, through which the materials when decomposed in one could be pushed into the other for roasting, the finishing chamber being heated by a separate furnace. For the plaintiff a good deal of evidence was given to show that the object for which his patent was obtained was the use of two chambers with separate furnaces, which was not known before. But the defendant proved that a person of the name of Beswick had previously used two chambers connected by a spout ten or twelve feet long, through which the materials, when partially decomposed, ran from one to the other, in which state they were roasted or finished; and the original process was proved to have been carried on by the manufacturers of muriatic acid in a similar way. The jury found for the plaintiff on the issue of not guilty. As to the issue on the second and third pleas, they thought the alleged invention of these two chambers, with separate furnaces, was not new, but that the plaintiff's mode of connecting them was new. Each party had leave to move to have the verdict entered in his favour on this special finding, and the defendant had leave to move to have the verdict entered in his favour on the first issue also, if the use of two chambers, one of iron and the other of brick, would not be an infringement of the plaintiff's patent right. In Easter Term cross rules were accordingly granted. The latter question was very well argued, and we are clearly of opinion that the verdict for the plaintiff on the issue of not guilty must stand for the establishment of the plaintiff's improvement in making sulphate of soda, by the use of two chambers with separate furnaces for the two stages of the process, so that both could be kept in action at the same time, and at the different temperatures required for the different stages. That principle is equally acted upon, and the same advantage given whether both chambers are of iron, or one of iron and the other of brick. The materials of which the chambers are composed not being the essence of the invention claimed, the patent right might be invaded, though the chambers used by the defendant were not of the materials mentioned in the plaintiff's specification. The other question turns upon what is the true nature of the actual claim of the plaintiff as the inventor. If he claims the use of two chambers with separate furnaces as part of his invention, the jury said it was not new, and the verdict should be entered for the defendant, otherwise for the plaintiff. It seems to us that no reasonable doubt can be entertained as to the claim made by the plaintiff. After describing by the words and drawings the apparatus which he used, he claimed, as his invention, "iron retorts worked in connection with each other, as above described." It was contended, on behalf of the plaintiff, that the meaning was, that he claimed the use of two retorts, worked in connection with the whole of the apparatus for condensing the muriatic gas; although the words of the specification are "in connection with each other," not in connection with the whole apparatus; and he afterwards goes on to claim as his, that particular arrangement of the receiver which he had previously described. We can give no other meaning to this than that the plaintiff claimed, as part of his invention, the use of two chambers with separate fittings, worked in connection with each other, so that the metals might be decomposed in one; and removed to be roasted and finished in the other, and that the plaintiff understood such to be the nature of his claim appears to be clear from the disclaimer he has entered in this case, in which, after describing certain words as the description of his claim, he says; "I further declare that I do not intend the words to extend to any other retorts than iron retorts, described in my specification; as the words 'iron retorts, worked in connection with each other, in which the process of condensation is carried on in the retort, and the materials are finished in the other,' might be construed to extend to any other retorts, for which reason I am desirous to disclaim." This was the nature of the claim which the plaintiff endeavored at the trial to establish, and the jury having found the evidence did not establish that, the verdict on the special finding must be entered for the defendant. The effect will be, that the rule will be discharged in part (the defendant's rule), and made absolute as to so much as relates to the second and third issues. The rule obtained for the plaintiff will be discharged.

(a) Tindal, C.J. was absent from indisposition.

Rule accordingly.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, BASINGHALL-STREET.

Tuesday, Aug. 11.

Re HENRY COWPER.

A petition for protection from process under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, must state at the head thereof, not only the name, but also the address and quality of the petitioner, as directed by the form in the schedule of the Act; and it is not sufficient that those particulars, if omitted in the heading, appear from any other part of the petition. The petition must in all respects, as well in form as in substance, be as prescribed by the schedule. If the petition is not in such form, it will be dismissed.

This was a petition under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, the Insolvency Amendment Act, for protection from process, presented by Henry Cowper, late paymaster of her Majesty's German legion, and a non-trader.

Aspinall, who appeared for Miss E. King, an opposing creditor, objected that the petition was not in the form prescribed by the Act. It was headed only "The humble petition of Henry Cowper," and did not in that part of it set out his address or quality, trade or business. In other respects the petition was in the form given by the Act, and the residence of the petitioner did appear in subsequent parts of the petition. The form in the schedule of the Act runs thus: "The humble petition of and then follow, between brackets, these words:—[Insert at full length the name, address, and quality of the petitioner, and also the description of the trade or business (or, if more than one), trades or businesses, which he carries or has carried on during his twelve months' residence within the district of the Court.]

The second section of the Act enacts that every petition shall be in the form specified in the schedule, and that if such petition shall not be in the form prescribed, it shall be dismissed. It was contended that, upon the ground above stated, the petition could not be held to be in the form prescribed, and must be dismissed.

Macduff, solicitor to the insolvent, contended that if the residence and quality appeared in any part of the petition it was sufficient; the trade and business are not applicable to this case, the insolvent not being a trader, and the residence and quality appear elsewhere. The petition is substantially in compliance with the Act.

The COMMISSIONER gave judgment without calling for a reply.—There may be some confusion in consequence of the forms given by this Act being more applicable to the former ones, but I am persuaded that the object of the Act was to avoid these questions of whether a petition was substantially sufficient, by giving a form to be adhered to in all cases. The 2nd section of the Act says, that unless the petition be in the form prescribed, it shall be dismissed. Even supposing, of which I am not convinced, that the residence and quality of this petitioner do appear in other parts of his petition, how can I say that the petition is in the form given by the Act? It may be the same in substance, but the Act says expressly it shall be the same in form. If I were to decide against this objection, I must hold that if the information required to be given by the Act at the beginning of the petition were placed at the end, that would be sufficient; and I should come to the conclusion, in direct contradiction to the Act, that any alteration might be made in the shape and form of the petition, provided the substance were retained.

Petition dismissed.

DEVON SUMMER ASSIZES, 1846.

Exeter, July 31.

(Before Mr. Baron PLATT.)

REG. v. MARY ANN AUSTIN.

Plea of autrefois acquit.

Prisoner was indicted for stealing the goods of William Carr. It appeared in evidence that the proper name of the owner was John Wilson, and an acquittal was directed. The prisoner was again indicted for stealing the goods of "John Wilson, otherwise called William Carr."

The prisoner pleaded "autrefois acquit," with an averment that "the said William Carr was known as well by the name of William Carr as John Wilson."

Held, a good plea.

The prisoner was indicted for stealing a gold pin of the "goods and chattels of William Carr."

Elizabeth Carr, for the prosecution, proved that her husband, William Carr, was a private in one of her Majesty's regiments; that they had been married four years previously at Plymouth; they were not living together, the gold pin was taken from her by the prisoner. On her cross-examination, it appeared that the real name of her husband was John Wilson; by that name he was known in the regiment, and to his friends; but that he had married her in the name of William Carr.

Cox, for the prisoner, submitted that the property having been laid in the wrong name, the prisoner must be acquitted upon that indictment.

His lordship directed an acquittal accordingly.

The prisoner was on the following day again indicted for stealing a gold pin "of the goods and chattels of John Wilson, otherwise called William Carr."

Upon her arraignment,

Cox, for the prisoner, put in the following plea of autrefois acquit:—

"Devon to wit.—And the said Mary Ann Austin, in her own proper person, cometh into court here, and having heard the said indictment read, with that our said lady the Queen ought not further to prosecute the said indictment against the said M. A. Austin, because she saith that heretofore, to wit, at this present assizes for the county of Devon, held on the 25th day of this present July, in the year of our Lord 1846, the jurors of our lady the Queen did, upon their oath, present that Mary Ann Austin, late of the parish of East Stonehouse, in the county of Devon, spinster, in the year of our Lord 1846, with force and arms, at the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, one gold pin of the value of two shillings, of the goods and chattels of William Carr, then and there being found, then and there feloniously did steal, take, and carry away, against the peace of our said lady the Queen, her crown and dignity; and that she, the said M. A. Austin, was tried upon the said indictment at the present assizes, and was acquitted of the charge therein contained, as by reference to the record will more fully and at large appear; which said judgment still remains in full force and effect, and set in the least reserved or made void; and the said M. A. Austin, in fact saith, that she, the said M. A. Austin, and the said M. A. Austin so indicted and acquitted as last aforesaid are one and the same, and not other and different persons; and that the felony and larceny of which she, the said Mary Ann Austin, was so indicted and acquitted as aforesaid, and the felony and larceny of which she is now indicted, are one and the same felony and larceny, and not other and different felonies and larcenies; and that the said William Carr was known as well by the name of William Carr as John Wilson; and as to the felony and larceny of which the said M. A. Austin now stands indicted, she, the said M. A. Austin, saith that she is not guilty thereof, and of this she, the said M. A. Austin, puts herself upon the country."

PLATT, B.—You should have concluded with a verification, for your plea introduces new matter. But the Court will give you permission to amend, as it is only an informality. Now, it is for the counsel for the Crown to say whether he demurs, or upon which or all of the averments in this plea he takes issue.

Peard, for the prosecution, said that he had considered the plea, the draft of which had been shown him by his friend, but he could discover no grounds for demurrer. He should take issue.

PLATT, B.—My present impression is, that this plea cannot be supported; but I should wish to hear counsel upon it.

Cox, in support of the plea.—The test by which we try whether the plea of autrefois acquit is sufficient is this: would the evidence necessary to support the second indictment have been sufficient to procure a legal conviction upon the first? (R. v. Clark, 1 B. & B. 473; R. v. Emden, 9 East, 437; R. v. Stoen, 2 C. & P. 634.) Now, to apply this test to the present case. What evidence would be sufficient to support the second indictment? The property being laid in John Wilson, otherwise called William Carr, it would clearly be sufficient to prove that the owner's name was either John Wilson or William Carr; thus it would be enough to show that he was known by the name of William Carr. But proof that he was called William Carr would also have supported the first indictment. Therefore the test is strictly applicable in this case.

PLATT, B.—Can you shew any case at all like the present one?

Cox.—I cannot. The point has not been raised before. I put it upon the principle upon which the plea of autrefois acquit is based, and the test by which its sufficiency is tried. This plea endures that test in every particular.

PLATT, B.—My difficulty is this. Property must be strictly laid. You cannot lay it with an alias, as you may the name of the prisoner. I cannot recognise the alias as two names. I am bound to read it as if the name of the owner was "John Wilson, otherwise called William Carr"—one name of one person; and even if it were otherwise, upon the face of the indictment there is nothing to shew that John Wilson and William Carr are the same person. You cannot support your plea.

Cox.—The difficulty is removed by the averment in the plea, that John Wilson and William Carr are the same person. Even if the name of William Carr did not appear upon both indictments—and it has been only William Carr in the one and John Wilson in the other, without the alias—it is confidently submitted to your lordship that the averment in the plea is sufficient, "that the said William Carr was known as well by the name of William Carr as John Wilson," which at once raises the issue for the jury whether in fact they are the same person; and if found that they are identical, the prisoner upon this plea is entitled to an acquittal. In 2 Hawkins, c. 35, s. 2, this is expressly stated. I take it as cited in Chitty's Archbold, Crim. Plea, p. 89, which runs thus: "Where the offence is alleged in the two indictments to have been committed at different times or places, they are nevertheless sufficiently identified by the above general averment that they are one and the same offence. But if one of the indictments appears to be for the murder of a person unknown, or for larceny of the goods of a person unknown, and the other for the murder of J. N. or for larceny of the goods of J. N. the plea should also aver that the person so described as a person unknown and J. N. are one and the same person, and not different persons. So if one indictment be for the murder of J. N. or for larceny of the goods of J. N. and the other indictment be for the murder of J. G. or for larceny of the goods of J. G. the two offences may be identified by an averment that the said J. G. was known as well by the name of J. N. as J. G."

PLATT, B.—Certainly, that dictum of Hawkins materially affects my impressions. But I will consult my brother Erle.

His lordship then retired. On his return, PLATT, B.—I have consulted my brother Erle upon this plea, and we are of opinion that it is a good plea. The next step is to proceed to trial upon it. Upon what does the prosecutor tender issue, as to the record or as to the identity?

PEARCE.—As to the identity. The jury were then sworn to try the issue thus raised.

PLATT, B.—The proof lies upon the defendant. COS.—The first trial having been had at the present Assize, no record is made up; the Court will, I presume, take judicial notice of the two indictments.

PLATT, B.—You must prove the acquittal, and the grounds of that acquittal. You may do so by any person present at the trial.

COS then called Mr. Herring, the prisoner's attorney, who proved that he was present at the trial of the first indictment, and that it appeared in evidence that the owner of the property was called John Wilson, and not William Carr, and that for this the Court had directed an acquittal.

PLATT, B.—That is sufficient. (To the jury)—The question you have now to try is, whether the prisoner has been in fact already tried for this offence. She has in her plea averred that the William Carr, for stealing whose goods she was yesterday tried and acquitted, is the same person with John Wilson, otherwise called William Carr, named as the owner in this indictment, and that the larceny charged in both indictments is in fact the same larceny. You will say upon the evidence whether you are satisfied that William Carr and John Wilson are two names assumed by the same person.

The jury found that they were the same person, and the prisoner was ordered to be discharged.

PEARCE for the prosecutor, COS for the prisoner.

ATTORNEYS.—Beer and Bundell, pros. Herring, contra.

[NOTE.—With deference to the learned judge, it is suggested that the evidence should have proceeded a step further, and that instead of proof of the grounds of the first acquittal, proof should have been required of the identity of John Wilson with William Carr. The evidence should support the averments of the plea, and nothing more is necessary. These averments are, 1st, the former trial and acquittal of the prisoner; 2nd, the identity of the prisoner; 3rd, the identity of the larceny; 4th, the identity of John Wilson with William Carr. The grounds of the acquittal are not in issue. Whatever they had been, the plea of autrefois acquit would be equally sustained by proof of the four averments above stated.—EDITOR.]

REG. v. SKEATS AND BILES.

Coroner's inquisition.

In an indictment against the seconds in a prize-fight, they may be indicted as principals, although neither of the principals is included in the indictment.

An inquisition, to which is affixed a printed stamp opposite the signatures of the coroner and juryman respectively, and concluding with the usual averment that it was given under their hands and seals, is sufficient.

An inquisition was stated to have been held on the 15th of June, and, by adjournment, on several successive days; but it purported to have been signed and sealed on the day first aforesaid.—Held sufficient.

The principal was described in the inquisition as Thomas Williams, otherwise John Williams, omitting the word called.

Quære (per Erle, J. and Platt, B.) whether the inquisition was bad for uncertainty.

Manlaughter. The prisoners were indicted for feloniously killing and slaying George Travers. The deceased had died from injuries received in a prize-fight. The prisoners were the seconds, the principal not being in custody. It was objected, for the defence, that, when the principal was not included in the indictment, the seconds should be described as accessories. For the prosecution the Stillingmort House case was cited, from the last edit. of Russell on Crimes, vol. i. p. 537. Objection overruled.

The prisoners were also arraigned on the coroner's inquisition.

Missing for Skeats, and Sewell for Biles, objected. —To the inquisition three objections:—

1. That the inquisition was not under seal, there being only a printed stamp opposite the signatures of the coroner and juryman respectively.

2. The inquisition was stated to have been held on the 15th of June, and by adjournment on three succeeding days, but purported to have been signed and sealed on the day first aforesaid, so that it appeared to have been executed before the termination of the inquiry, viz. on the 15th of June.

3. The principal was described as Thomas Williams, otherwise John Williams, omitting the word "called."

Massey, for the prosecution, to the first objection answered that it was not competent to say that the impressions opposite the signatures of the coroner and jury were not their seals, against the averment in the inquisition that it was given under their hands and seals. To the second objection, the inquisition, though, in fact, holden on different days, was, in law, holden on one day. The allegation of adjournments might be objected as surplusage, at all events not sufficient to raise an intendment that a judicial officer and a court of justice had committed a breach of duty; that the allegation of the Court having arrived at certain conclusions after hearing the evidence was repugnant to the averment that they had executed an inquisition on the first day of a sessions which lasted several days, and therefore, in accordance with the established rule of law, the averment which was consistent with the presumption of public officers having discharged their duty would prevail. To the third objection, alias dictus is no doubt agreeable to precedent, but it is not indispensable. The description of the principal is still certain to a common extent. The omission of "called" is at most a misprision of the clerk.

PLATT, B. after consulting ERLE, J. overruled the two former objections, but reserved the last for the opinion of the fifteen judges.

The prisoners were afterwards tried and acquitted.

HOME CIRCUIT.

SURREY SUMMER ASSIZES.

NTSI PRIUS.

Wednesday, August 5.

WRIGHT AND OTHERS, Assignees, &c. v. WEBB.

Where two parts of an agreement are executed, one by each of the contracting parties, the two parts make up one agreement, and it is sufficient if the proper stamp be upon one part.

Quære, if the number of words in either part be more than two, but less than 1,000, will a stamp of 1l. be sufficient, or will a stamp of 1l. 15s. be requisite?

An agreement by the assignees of a bankrupt to refer to arbitration certain disputes connected with a building contract entered into by the bankrupt before his bankruptcy, is exempt from stamp duty under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 98.

This was an action brought by the assignees of a bankrupt to enforce the payment of a sum of 1,200l. due under an award made by an arbitrator, to whom certain matters in dispute had been referred. The agreement of reference recited that a contract had been entered into between the defendant and the bankrupt, whose assignees the plaintiffs were, for the building of certain premises for the defendant by the bankrupt; that the premises had been built, and that disputes had arisen with reference to the amount due to the bankrupt, or his assignees, in respect thereof, and that thereupon it had been agreed between the plaintiffs and the defendant, that all matters in dispute should be referred, &c. and that the arbitrator should award and determine what was due and payable. The declaration set out the agreement of reference, and that the arbitrator had found that the sum of 1,200l. was due from and payable by the defendant to the plaintiffs, and that thereupon, in consideration of the premises, the defendant promised to pay the amount. The declaration contained also a count upon an account stated. The defendant pleaded, first, non-assumpsit, and secondly, a traverse of the agreement to refer, upon which pleas issue was joined.

In support of the second issue, Shee, Serjt. and Bovill, for the plaintiffs, proved an agreement corresponding with that alleged in the declaration, signed by the defendant only, and duly stamped with a stamp of 1l. In order to prove that this agreement was also executed at the same time by the plaintiffs themselves, they tendered another part of the same agreement produced by the defendant under a notice to produce, and signed by the plaintiffs only, but not stamped.

Lush, for the defendant, objected that this was an agreement under 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, Sched. Part 1, Agreements, and therefore required a stamp.

Bovill.—In a case precisely similar, Turner v. Hardey, Carr. & Marsh. 449, Lord Abinger, C. B. held, that if the plaintiffs put in one part of a written agreement, which is signed by the defendant only and is duly stamped, the defendant may put in the other part signed by the plaintiffs, although not stamped. That was on the ground that there was nothing in the Stamp Act to require that a counterpart must be stamped.

Lush.—It is put in not merely as a counterpart, but as an agreement binding upon the parties.

PARKER, B.—It seems to me to be like the case of a number of letters together forming but one contract, and one of which only need be stamped. As there is a case in point, I shall receive it in evidence.

Lush.—Then there is a second objection. The words in the two documents have been counted, and the agreement and counterpart together contain more than 1,080 words. The stamp of 1l. which would be sufficient for either document separately, will not suffice for the two. There should have been a stamp for 1l. 15s.

PARKER, B.—By statute 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 98, all deeds, conveyances, &c. relating solely to any lands or tenements, being the estate of any bankrupts, and "all other instruments and writings whatsoever relating solely to the estates or effects of any bankrupt, or any part thereof, or any proceedings under any commission of bankrupt, are exempted from any stamp duty or any other government duty whatsoever." And it was held, upon the construction of this section, in Flaith v. Stubbs, 2 G. & D. 290, that a contract for the sale of real estate by the assignees of a bankrupt was exempt from stamp duty. I think that an agreement to refer matters in dispute relating to the bankrupt's estate is also exempted by this enactment. I shall not, therefore, reserve the point; for I do not much favour objections raised upon the Stamp Acts.

Lush declined addressing the jury.

Bovill submitted that the plaintiffs were entitled to a verdict not only for the sum of 1,200l. but also for interest upon that sum, at the rate of four per cent. from the date of the award until final judgment could be signed. In this case the money was payable by virtue of a written instrument.

PARKER, B.—The Act 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 28, applies only to cases where the debt is payable at a certain time by virtue of a written instrument, or if payable otherwise, where a demand has been made. Has either of those conditions been complied with?

Lush.—No; there has been no demand; and the arbitrator not only has not ordered payment at a certain time, but he has not ordered payment at all. He had only the power to find as he has found, that a particular sum was due and payable.

PARKER, B.—Then the plaintiffs are not entitled to interest.

Verdict for the plaintiffs for the amount of the award.

Thursday, August 6.

SHERIDAN v. WHITTINGTON.

Provisional committee-man—Surveyor's expenses. In an action by a surveyor against a provisional committee-man, it appeared that upon the day before the prospectus of a railway company issued, the defendant consented to his name appearing in the list of the provisional committee: it did not appear that the defendant ever saw the prospectus, or took any part in the management of the company: the plaintiff did not procure a prospectus until he was anxious to know whom to sue. Held, that the defendant's liability was not made out.

This was an action for work and labour done and performed by the plaintiff for the defendant as a surveyor in and about surveying a certain line of railway. The defendant pleaded that he was never indebted.

It appeared that the plaintiff was a surveyor, and had been employed by a railway company to survey the line of a projected railway. There was no question that he had done a certain amount of work as a surveyor upon the line in question. The defendant's name appeared in a prospectus issued by the company as one of the provisional committee, but it did not appear that the defendant had attended any meetings, given any orders, or taken any part in the management of the affairs. It was proved, however, that application had been made to the defendant, by the solicitor of the company, for leave to insert his name in the list of the provisional committee; and that the defendant had written a letter, authorising its publication, which was received by the solicitor the day before that upon which the prospectus was issued. There was no evidence that a copy of the prospectus was sent to or was ever seen by the defendant. It appeared further, that there was no reason to suppose that the prospectus was seen by the plaintiff, until it was handed to him by the secretary of the company, to enable him to bring his action against the party whom he might deem liable.

Peacock, for the defendant, submitted, that the plaintiff had made out no case. No doubt, the orders were given by the managing committee with whom the defendant was not shown in any way to be connected. He said also that there had been a case on the Northern Circuit, very similar to this, in which Cresswell, J. had nonsuited the plaintiff. (a)

(a) Semble.—Webb v. Watts, Durham, July 23. 7 Law T. 409.

PARKE, B.—The question is, whether, by allowing his name to appear as one of the provisional committee, he authorises that committee to appoint another, the managing committee, and so empowers the managing committee to bind him by their acts? My impression is very strongly in your favour, that the case has not been made out. I think the plaintiff had better be called, and try if he can make out a better case hereafter.

M. Chambers, Q.C. and Petersdorff, for the plaintiff, submitted to be nonsuited.

Nonsuit accordingly.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

ROYAL ASSENT.

FRIDAY, Aug. 7.—The royal assent was given by commission to the following Bills:—The Militia Ballot Suspension; the Ordnance Survey; the Newfoundland; the Cheshire Returning Officers'; the Stamford and Spalding Railway; the Llynvi Valley and South Wales Junction Railway; the Sheffield, Rotherham, Barnsley, Wakefield, Huddersfield, and Goole Railway; the Wisbeach, St. Ives, and Cambridge Junction Railway; the Taw Vale Railway Extension; the Enfield and Edmonton Railway; the Manchester and Lincoln Union Railway, and Chesterfield and Gainsborough Canal; the London and Birmingham Railway (Birmingham Extension); the Galway and Kilkenny Railway; the Argyll Canal; the Sligo Ship Canal; the Campbeltown Harbour Waterworks and Paving; the Edinburgh Paving (No. 2); the Dublin Cemetery; the Agricultural Companies; Lord Kinnaird's Estate; the Yeovil Borough Estate Bills.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR moved the third reading of the Small Debts Bill.—Lord LYTTELTON presented a petition from the Chamber of Commerce of Worcester in favour of the Bill.—The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

LAW OF ARREST.

THURSDAY, Aug. 13.—Lord DENMAN presented several petitions in favour of a measure for the abolition of unnecessary oaths.—Lord BROUGHAM said that he wished, in reference to that subject, to direct the attention of their lordships to a considerable grievance to which foreigners were liable, under the present mode of receiving oaths relating to debts alleged to be due by foreigners. A foreign gentleman of very great respectability, the intimate friend of a noble and gallant duke who was not then in his place, as well as of Lord Ashburton and the Earl of Lonsdale, was lately, on his return from Strathfieldsaye, arrested on the affidavit of a person whose occupation was making of pewter, but who called himself a civil engineer, as any one might call himself, and who swore that this foreign gentleman (Mr Ouverard), who was engaged in transactions involving between thirty millions and forty millions, owed him 1,050*l.* for work and labour done as engineer and surveyor; and that Mr. Ouverard had said he intended to leave the country. The individual who caused the arrest of this gentleman offered to let him off and abandon his claim upon him if he received forty guineas, but he stated in his affidavits that the debt was 1,050*l.* and the Chief Baron endorsed the writ for the whole sum. Mr. Ouverard was thus arrested, and remained in custody from Wednesday until Monday. He made an affidavit that he had not the slightest idea of leaving the country; and his niece, who, it had been alleged, had said that her uncle and herself were about to leave the country, stated in an affidavit that she never said any such thing. After a full consideration of the affidavits in reply, and of all the circumstances, the Chief Baron ordered the gentleman subsequently to be discharged. He (Lord Brougham) complained of the grievance which that foreigner had suffered; a grievance which might affect British subjects in France, for the law in France was, that whatever law of England was directed against a French subject in this country might be put in operation against a British subject in France, although such a law might not exist in France. In that case he (Lord Brougham), having a dispute with his agent, might be arrested on an affidavit for a debt of 1,000 guineas, and where he could not plead his privilege as a peer of Parliament. He would remark, that in a case where an application was made to Justice Wightman to endorse a writ on the ground that an individual was going to France, he asked the person if he had applied at the French passport-office to know if the individual had applied for his passport, and, being answered in the negative, refused to endorse the writ, as he said the person applying ought to have taken proper means to ascertain if the individual against whom he sought for the writ was really about to leave the country.—Lord CAMPBELL sincerely lamented the misfortune which had befallen Mr. Ouverard, but he should say that he considered the law upon this subject, as recently altered, had been placed upon a just, equitable, and satisfactory basis. The alteration was made in imitation of the Scotch law as regarded persons intending to leave the kingdom, and he had no doubt that the Chief Baron had acted in the case with the most perfect propriety.—Lord DENMAN said that whatever difficulty might be found as to the judge entering into the question of whether an alleged sum, say 500*l.* was really due for work or labour, there could be no doubt as to the capacity to enter into the question of whether an individual intended to quit the country or not.—The LORD CHANCELLOR asked his noble and learned friend what opportunity the judge had of ascertaining whether the amount claimed was really due.—The subject then dropped.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

DEATHS COMPENSATION BILL.

TUESDAY, Aug. 11.—This Bill was read a third time and passed.

DEODANDS ABOLITION BILL.

Sir G. GREY moved the third reading of the Deodands' Abolition (No. 2.) Bill.—Lord G. SOMERSET called attention to the fact, that this Bill would not only affect the rights of many individuals and corporations, but would also materially affect the private interests of the Sovereign. He, therefore, thought that the House ought not to accede to it until it had received her Majesty's assent.—Sir G. GREY informed the House that the measure had already received that assent. The Bill was then read a third time, but on the question that it do now pass,—

Mr. HENLEY and Mr. S. WORTLEY both objected to the measure. The latter gentleman, after calling on the House to adopt the law of deadends to the present state of things, moved as an amendment, that a select committee be appointed to consider the present state of the law on the subject, and also that of actions for injuries to the person by accident or otherwise.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL could not accede to the amendment, as the subject had already been carefully considered; and after a short discussion, in which Mr. WAKLEY, the LORD ADVOCATE, and Mr. HENLEY joined, the House divided, when the numbers for the motion were—Ayes, 51, Noes, 6; majority, 45. The Bill was then passed.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

Sir G. GREY, in moving the second reading of this Bill, said the subject was not a new one to the House, having been brought before Parliament on many previous occasions by successive Governments; but circumstances had always prevented its receiving the sanction of the Legislature. It was known to the House, that the Law Commissioners of 1833, in their report, recommended that the whole country should be divided into districts in which courts should be placed, and competent magistrates appointed, and that the jurisdiction of these courts should extend to all cases of debt not exceeding 20*l.* except in some special cases. Now the present Bill was framed in strict conformity with the recommendation of the commissioners. It was drawn up by the late Government; and when the present administration succeeded to office, careful consideration was given to the question whether or no they would be able to proceed with a Bill having so many clauses during the present session of Parliament. A doubt was expressed on that point, and in consequence of that doubt most earnest representations were received from Manchester, Birmingham, and other large towns, urging Government not to delay the measure, but to proceed with it this session. The Bill was accordingly proceeded with. It had passed the House of Lords, and was now before that House, but was necessarily in an imperfect state, owing to the money clauses having been omitted by the Lords. If the House should on the present occasion agree to the second reading of the Bill, he would then propose that it be committed pro forma to-morrow, in order that the money clauses might be inserted. The Bill might be printed on Thursday, and on Monday next he proposed that it be re-committed.—Mr. WILLIAMS thought this was a most important Bill, and was glad that there was now some prospect of getting it carried. He begged to suggest to the Secretary of State that the machinery of the Bill might be used for effecting a most important improvement in another branch. It was proposed to divide counties into districts, with competent judges in each to preside over the local courts. Now, he suggested that the criminal jurisdiction of quarter sessions should be placed under the care of these local competent judges. The administration of the criminal powers of the quarter sessions was in a most unsatisfactory position, and the public had little confidence in them, the persons acting being very frequently entirely ignorant of the legal profession. There was no appeal from their proceedings, though an appeal was allowed from the decisions of the judges of the land. Most anomalous judgments were often given at these quarter sessions, and he thought the present Bill afforded an excellent opportunity of improving the system.—Mr. GREY was happy that there was some prospect of carrying the present measure; but he earnestly hoped the House would confine itself entirely to the Bill before them. The object of the Bill was in itself a matter of considerable difficulty; and if they added to it other questions of a different nature, those difficulties would be immeasurably increased. He simply rose to implore the House to confine itself to the subject before it.—Sir W. CLAY hoped the advice now given would be strictly adhered to. He must say that, so far as he had heard, the Bill had met with very general concurrence throughout the country.—Lord G. SOMERSET protested against the statement that the public had not the most perfect confidence in the equity and justice of the decisions given by the quarter sessions. So far as his experience went, there was as much confidence in the judgments of quarter sessions as in those of any other courts.—Mr. HENLEY defended the quarter sessions from the attack of the hon. member for Coventry.—Mr. SPOONER hoped no delay would take place in passing this measure, which was justly demanded by the trading community. Since the Act for the abolition of arrests had passed, the utmost difficulty had been experienced in the recovery of debts; and if the House knew the immense amount of debts of 5*l.* 7*l.* and 10*l.* which could not at present be recovered, he was satisfied that no delay would take place in passing the Bill. The present state of things was, in fact, a denial of justice to the small tradesmen, and the working classes suffered severely in consequence of the present unsatisfactory state of matters.—Sir G. GREY thought that if the House agreed to the second reading of the Bill, perhaps it would be better that it should be committed pro forma that very day, in order to receive the money clauses.—Mr. WAKLEY could not help feeling alarmed when he heard that the hon. member for Birmingham (Mr. Spooner) spoke in favour of the Bill. When he recollected the opinions which he held on the subject of the abolition of arrests, he could not but feel alarmed when he heard that he was in favour of this measure. If this Bill would increase the facilities of getting into debt for the poor, it would only increase their dependence and the other evils of their position.—Mr. B. ESCOTT expressed his high approval of the Bill.—Mr. MUNTZ thought it was absolutely necessary that such a measure should pass, and that with the least possible delay.—The Bill was then read a second time, the House went into committee pro forma. The Bill was reported and ordered to be re-committed on Monday next.

RAILWAY ACTS.

The following is the report from the select committee appointed to inquire whether, without discouraging legitimate enterprise, conditions may not be embodied in Railway Acts better fitted than those hitherto inserted in them to promote and secure the interests of the public:—

"1. That it is expedient that a department of the executive government, so constituted as to obtain public confidence, be established for the superintendence of railway business.

"2. That all proposals for the construction of new lines of railway, or for extensions or branches of existing lines, or for the amalgamation of lines already authorized with other lines or with canals, or for leasing railways or canals to railway companies, or for any other purposes relating to railways for which the sanction of Parliament is required, together with plans, sections, books of reference, and other papers required by the standing orders, should be laid before such department.

"3. That the department should test these plans, sections, &c. through its own engineers and officers, by means of local examination or otherwise, as it may think fit, and should inquire into and report to Parliament upon the particulars required by the standing orders to be specially reported upon by committees on Railway Bills; and that no committee on any Railway Bill should inquire further into such particulars, unless by the special order of the House.

"4. That this department should also inquire into the compliance with the standing orders, and how far the same, if not complied with in any particular case, ought to be dispensed with, and should report thereupon to Parliament.

"5. That the department should receive representations from local bodies, or from individuals, for or against any proposed line, whether such representations have reference to matters of public or private interests, and should hear the parties, and should make such inquiries on the spot, or otherwise, as they may think necessary, and should report the facts, and their opinion thereupon, to Parliament.

"6. That the department should report in each case what in its judgment would be a proper tariff of fares and charges.

"7. That all Bills for effecting any of the objects enumerated in the foregoing resolutions should be submitted to the department for examination and approval; and that it should be part of the duty of the department to enforce uniformity in the preparation of such Bills, as far as circumstances will allow.

"8. That no Bill for carrying any such proposal into effect should be introduced into Parliament without having the previous sanction of such department.

"9. That the department should be charged with a general supervision of all railways, and canals in any way connected with railways; and that for this purpose it should possess all the powers and execute all the duties now possessed and exercised by the Board of Trade, and such additional powers as may be necessary to enforce any regulations made from time to time for the accommodation and interests of the public.

"10. That the department should require from every railway company periodical returns, according to an uniform plan, approved from time to time by the department, and that it should annually lay before Parliament a report, giving the above returns, or abstracts thereof, together with such details and observations upon the state and progress of the railway system as it may deem useful.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

WE present below the report of the Select Committee on the Game Laws. The suggestions are numerous, but very unimportant. We have not leisure to comment upon them now; we shall probably review them in detail hereafter. The Poor Removal Bill is to pass, but avowedly only as a temporary measure till there can be a general revision of the law of settlement.

REVIEW OF MAGISTRATES' CASES, Decided during Easter Term and Vacation, and Trinity Term and Vacation.

HIRING AND SERVICE—SETTLEMENT.

WHERE there has been a continuous service for several years, a hiring has always been implied so as to give a settlement under 3 & 4 Wm. & M. c. 11; but the decision in Reg. v. St. Anne's, Westminster, 7 Law T. 225, shows that even then the examination must show that at the beginning of the year, residence during which is relied upon for the settlement, the servant was in the position required by the statute, viz. "unmarried, and not having child or children." The examination there stated a good hiring and service in 1827, but no residence in that year. It continued thus:—

I served the said Mr. Stroud, at his residence, which was in Crown-street, in the aforesaid parish of St. Anne, in the liberty of Westminster, under such yearly hiring, for about four years or more, and lived and lodged in the house of my master, the said Mr. Stroud, at his residence in Crown-street aforesaid, in the parish of St. Anne, in the liberty of Westminster, for more than forty days next preceding the termination of the said service.

This was held insufficient, as it did not show that the pauper was in a condition to gain a settlement by such service under the continuous hiring.

"In or about."—The examinations in the same case contained the statement of a hiring and service settlement, describing the hiring to have been "in or about the year 1832," and the service to have been for one year and five months. This was held bad for uncertainty, as it did not appear that the settlement was perfected before the 16th of August, 1834, when the settlement by hiring and service was abolished. This was in strict accordance with the principle to be deduced from Reg. v. St. Paul's, Covent Garden, 14 L. J. 135, M. C.; 1 New Mag. Cas. 327, that wherever a date is material with reference to the state of the law at or about the time when a settlement is alleged to have been gained, such date must be stated with precision.

JURISDICTION.

The perusal of the reports of cases upon settlements, and the number of orders that are upset for not shewing affirmatively the jurisdiction of the magistrates, coupled with the knowledge that, in fact, not hardly one of these orders was really made without jurisdiction, is, to our minds, one of the strongest arguments that can be used against the system which allows the waste of so much money in litigation. During the last Term several questions of this kind have been before the Court, and with varying success. The two most important have already been noticed in these pages, supra, 326; but attention may well be drawn to them again. We allude to Reg. v. Radcliffe Culey, 7 Law T. 182; and Reg. v. Molesworth, 7 Law T. 339. Each of these will be best understood by presenting the examinations which were held to be bad:—

County of Leicester, to wit.—The examination of James Deeming, now inhabiting in the parish of Melton Mowbray, touching the last legal place of settlement of himself and Mary his wife, and Arthur their son, aged eighteen months, taken upon oath before us the undersigned, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county, the 3rd day of December, 1844, at Melton Mowbray aforesaid, who saith, &c.

Taken and sworn before us,
W. E. HARTOFF,
ROGER MANNERS.

The second and remaining examinations were as follows:—

County of Leicester, to wit.—The examination of Anne Deeming, of Melton Mowbray aforesaid, widow, touching the above-named settlement, taken upon oath before us the said justices, the 3rd day of December, 1844, at Melton Mowbray aforesaid, who saith, &c.

Taken and sworn before us,
W. E. HARTOFF,
ROGER MANNERS.

It will be seen at once that none but the first examination, if taken by itself, appeared to be taken before justices having jurisdiction. The Court laid down the broad principle, that each examination should be perfect in itself, and held, therefore, all the examinations but the first to be bad. It has been objected to this principle being applied to the copies of examinations sent with the order of removal, because the statute requires only "a copy of the examination." But we think there is nothing in this objection, as the Court has always held that examination in the statute means all the examinations, the word being used as nomen collectivum. (Reg. v. Outwell, 9 Ad. & El. 836.) And further, the object being that the appellants may know whether the pauper has been removed upon sufficient legal evidence, it is necessary, as it seems to us, that each distinct portion of that evidence should appear to be legal, i. e. to have been taken by justices having jurisdiction. If this be the correct principle, then Reg. v. Moleworth, 7 Law T. 339; 2 New Sess. Cas. 356, n., is quite in accordance with Reg. v. Radcliffe Culey, and probably the very brief and summary way in which it was decided arose from the recent occurrence of that case. It was there decided that each examination should shew that it was taken upon a complaint made by the parish officers. This complaint is as essential to legal removal as that the justices, who act upon it, should so act, within their jurisdiction, and shew that they do so according to the general principles of law, which protect the subject from any unauthorized infringement of his liberty. In the case in question the examination was headed as follows:—

Huntingdonshire, to wit.—The examination of Isabella Mantle, at present residing in the parish of Bythorn, in the said county, widow, &c. taken on oath, &c. before us, &c. touching the place of the last legal settlement of her the said Isabella Mantle, and her four children, naming them.

This is to be particularly observed, because in the useful works both of Mr. Archbold and that of Mr. Symons, the same omission occurs in the general form of examination there given. (See Archb. p. 551; Symons, 22.) But it does not occur in the late edition of Burns, title Poor, p. 1378.

Place of making the order.—The rule as to shewing affirmatively the jurisdiction of the justices was sought to be strained in Reg. v. King's Lynn, 7 Law T. 117; 2 New Sess. Cas. 334, so far as to upset an order, which shewed that the complaint was duly made to justices within the jurisdiction, but did not expressly state that the order was made by them within the jurisdiction, which very few orders until recently ever did state. Mr. Justice Coleridge thus disposed of the objection. After referring to the unwillingness, even of the full Court, to upset a long established practice (see 3 Q. B. 776) he continued:—

Taking the order, therefore, thus—"The churchwardens and overseers having made a complaint to us, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said borough," (for I lay no stress on the word "upon"), and all the requisites necessary to making this order being stated, I say that no one can doubt that there is a sufficient averment of the complaint being made in the borough to justices acting in the borough. It is agreed, that, if we are to intend nothing for, we are to intend nothing against the order. Now let us make no intendment at all. The order then goes on to say "We, the said justices, upon due proof made thereof, &c. do adjudge the same to be true." Then, it is said, what was to prevent two justices going out of their jurisdiction to make the order? The answer is, that to suppose such a thing is to make an intendment against the order; and therefore we ought to adopt the more obvious meaning, and suppose that they made the order within their jurisdiction. As to the fact, that it is not stated at the foot of the order that it was given under the hands and seals of the justices within the borough, I think the fair inference is, as nothing is said as to the place, that the whole was done at the same time and place, and that the objection fails altogether. The rule, therefore, must be discharged, and with costs, as the order follows the usual form.

This doctrine of intendment may be illustrated by the case of Reg. v. Newton Ferrars, 7 Law T. 203. Where there is a manifest incongruity upon the face of the order, between the jurisdiction exercised and that which appears, then the order would be bad. Thus, an order made by the justices of Devonport, removing a pauper from Stoke Damarel, in the county of Devon, was held bad, because it did not shew in any way that Stoke Damarel was within their jurisdiction. A limit was expressly given to their jurisdiction by their description "as justices for the borough of Devonport," whereas Stoke Damarel was expressly stated to be within a county, and, as far as could be collected from the order, as little within their jurisdiction as if they had been described as justices of Dorsetshire or Yorkshire.

Police Magistrates.—Many orders of removal made by police magistrates have been objected to for want of shewing jurisdiction, and in Reg. v. St. Giles, 7 Law T. 206; 2 New Sess. Cas. 389, a discussion arose upon the sufficiency of the following:—"Whereas complaint has been made unto me, one of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the county of Middlesex (one of the police magistrates of the metropolis, sitting at the police court, Great Marlborough-street, in the parish of St. James, Westminster, within the metropolitan police district, by the churchwardens, &c." Patteson, J. certainly intimated a strong opinion that it was sufficient; but we did not understand that it was at all decided by that case, and it certainly was not necessary for the decision, as the order was clearly bad, upon the first objection, that it did not shew in the statement of the complaint that the paupers were actually chargeable.

LITERARY INSTITUTIONS.

Exemptions from rates under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36.—We have already so fully discussed these cases upon this statute (supra, 7 Law T. 68, 145, 214), that we need only now state the points decided. In Reg. v. Jones, 7 Law T. 64; 1 New Mag. Cas.; 2 New Sess. Cas. 382, it was held that a distinct rule prohibiting "any dividend, gift, division, or bonus in money unto or between any of its members," is a condition precedent to any society being entitled to the benefit of the Act. The Court also expressed their unanimous opinion, that the Religious Tract Society was not a Society within the meaning of the Act "instituted for the purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts exclusively." A similar decision was given as to the British and Foreign School Society, which claimed exemption with respect of the buildings used for a Normal School in connection with it. (Reg. v. Pocock, 7 Law T. 206; 1 New Mag. Cas.; 2 New Sess. Cas. 372.)

Time for appeal.—But in the last case a question of more general importance was also decided, viz. the time for appeal, under the 6th section of the Act. It was held to give two periods from which the four months for appeal might be counted. First, after the first assessment of such rate made after the certificate filed; and, second, after the first assessment of such rate after exemption claimed by the Society. We cannot forbear again expressing our regret, that a statute so confessedly needing amendment, and so pointedly condemned by all the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, should still remain upon the statute-book, in all its first obscurity and practical uselessness. Strange that, while crude, newfangled measures of doubtful utility are being hurried forward at this period of the session, with all the Government influence, no attempt is made to remedy the admitted defects of an Act well intended, but wholly ineffective.

MASTERS AND SERVANTS' ACT.

Conviction—Commitment.—Two important cases require notice upon the forms to be observed in drawing commitments or convictions under these Acts, which are so often put in requisition in some parts of the country. The words of the 3rd section of the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, which bear upon the first question, are,

That if any servant in husbandry, or any artificer, calico printer, handicraftsman, miner, collier, keelman, pitman, glassman, potter, labourer or other person, shall contract with any person or persons whomsoever, to serve him, her, or them, for any time or times whatsoever, or in any other manner, and shall not enter into or commence his or her service according to his or her contract (such contract being in writing, and signed by the contracting parties), or having entered into such service, shall absent himself or herself from his or her service before the term of his or her contract, whether such contract shall be in writing or not in writing, shall be completed, or neglect to fulfil the same, or be guilty of any other misconduct or misdemeanor in the execution thereof, or otherwise respecting the same, then and in every such case it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace of the county or place where such servant . . . shall have so contracted, or be employed or be found, and such justice is hereby empowered, upon complaint thereof made upon oath to him by the person or persons, or any of them, with whom such servant . . . shall have so contracted, or by his, her, or their steward, manager, or agent, which oath such justice is hereby empowered to administer, to issue his warrant for apprehending every such servant . . . and to examine into the nature of the complaint, and if it shall appear to such justice that any such servant . . . shall not have fulfilled such contract, or hath been guilty of any other misconduct or misdemeanor as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for such justice to commit every such person to the house of correction, there to remain and be held to hard labour for a reasonable time, not exceeding three months.

The instrument under which the defendant Hammond had been imprisoned was apparently a warrant of commitment, but still it purported to convict him of the offence. After reciting generally the complaint against him, it proceeded thus—

We, the undersigned, . . . have duly examined the proofs and allegations of both parties touching the matter of the said complaint, they having come before us for that purpose, and upon due consideration had thereof, have on the oath of the said E. B. taken in the presence and hearing of the said John Hammond, adjudged and determined and do hereby adjudge and determine the said complaint to be true, and we do therefore convict the said John Hammond of the said offence, in pursuance of the statute in that case made and provided. These are therefore to command you the said constable, &c.

The objection that was held fatal was that this was in substance a conviction, and bad therefore for not setting out the evidence against the defendant. Mr. Justice Patteson further intimated that it was bad for not adjudicating the imprisonment. In answer to the ingenious objection that it could not be a conviction because not on parchment, the Court said that it was not shewn not to be on parchment, and that if that were necessary they would presume that the party who says he convicts and has authority to do so, has put it upon parchment. In Turner's case, 7 Law J. 205, the evidence was set out, but the instrument was held bad because it did not appear in the information and complaint that the absence was without the consent of the master, or without lawful excuse known to the master. It was held further, that it was necessary to set out the terms of the contract in the information, as otherwise it might be that the servant was not amenable to the provisions of the Act, for it is not every contract which is within the Act. Both these propositions depend upon the general rule, which we discussed at some length in our summary of last Michaelmas Term, supra, 6 Law T. 243, viz. "that where a certain act is made punishable by summary conviction, which act may be lawful under certain circumstances, these circumstances ought to be negatived in the conviction."

PARISHES, UNION OF.

Settlement not lost by union of parishes.—The cases of Reg. v. Tipton, 3 Q. B. 215; and Reg. v. Hunsington, 5 Q. B. 273, having decided that where a parish has been divided into townships, for the purpose of maintaining their own poor separately, a person, who has gained a settlement in the parish previous to the division, cannot be removed subsequently to any of the townships into which the parish has been divided; and that the settlement is extinct; the converse was argued in Reg. v. St. Martin, 7 Law T. 227; 2 New Sess. Cas. 416; and it was there contended that where the parishes were united the previous settlements in the respective parishes were extinct. The Court, however, at once overruled this argument, and decided that a pauper who had been settled in either of the parishes when separate, might now be removed to the united parishes. The difference between the two cases is clear. In the former case, the district sought to be charged had never been a district in which a settlement could be gained, it was only a part of a parish; whereas here, the former parish continued to exist, with the addition of the other parish, and both having agreed to share the benefits to be derived from a union, both ought also to share the burdens. E. W.

ALLOWANCE OF CONSTABLES' FEES BY JUSTICES.

(OPINIONS OF SIR F. THESIGER, SIR F. KELLY, AND MR. SWAYNE.)

THE magistrates acting for the division of Swindon, in the county of Wilts, entertained a doubt whether they could allow fees for service of summonses, &c. to police officers belonging to the constabulary force, established in the county, and they refused to allow any such fees, on the ground that the police were regularly paid for their services by salary, from the county-rate, and that the power which was given to justices to allow fees to parish constables did not authorize the magistrates to allow fees to police officers when they performed the duties of parish constables, and that any sum of money for such service could not be legally inserted in an order for payment of costs. The subject was brought under the consideration of the justices in general quarter sessions, and they directed a case to be prepared for counsel. The questions which were submitted for the opinion of the counsel are stated below, and it will be seen that the then Solicitor and Attorney-General, and Mr. Swayne, were of opinion that such fees could not be allowed by the justices.

First. Whether, by the common law, or under the statute 18 Geo. 3, c. 19, or otherwise, justices were previously to the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, authorized to allow fees to constables for the service of summons and execution of warrants in proceedings between individuals and not on behalf of the parish, and to include such fees in the order for costs to be paid by either party?

Secondly. Whether as regards acts declared to be offences by statute, and cognizable before justices under their summary jurisdiction, and where the justices are empowered to award costs if they shall see fit, the justices could include in such costs a remuneration to constables for loss of time in serving preliminary process, and for attending before them to prove such services if necessary?

Thirdly. Whether, if police constables appointed under the provisions of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, perform the duties of parish constables appointed under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, and for performance of which such parish constables are entitled to fees and allowances, the same fees and allowances are not under the 8th section of the former Act and the prospective effect thereof payable to the police constables, subject to their accounting for the same to the treasurer of the county?

OPINION.

We are of opinion, that justices had under 18 Geo. 3, c. 19, the power of allowing fees to constables for the service of summons and execution of warrants in proceedings between individuals, and to include such fees in the order for costs; subject, however, to such rules or regulations as might have been laid down by the justices in quarter sessions, and approved of by a judge of assize. But we are of opinion, that the powers and privileges of any constable, &c. given to police constables, appointed under the provisions of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, by the 8th section of that Act, does not entitle them to receive fees and allowances for performing the duties of parish constables, appointed under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109.

COPYHOLDS.—The following is a copy of the fifth report of the Copyhold Commissioners to her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the Act 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, s. 3:—

"Copyhold Commission, Aug. 3.

"Sir.—We have the honour of presenting to you our fifth report. The number of enfranchisements have again considerably increased.

"For the details of the business done we beg to refer you to the list which is appended.

"Some of the transactions included in it are large and important.

"Enfranchisements in manors held by ecclesiastics are steadily increasing, and in those manors there is a fair prospect of copyhold tenures being ultimately extinguished voluntarily.

"In manors held by laymen the progress is slower. Terminal of railroads, and the increasing population of the towns, lead to building speculations. Builders find that they can rarely sell with a copyhold title, and the number of enfranchisements from those causes will almost necessarily increase steadily.

"We believe, however, that it would be a public benefit if the Legislature were to sanction a compulsory extinction of some of the copyhold incidents, more especially of heriots.

"We have the honour to be, Sir,

Your faithful and obedient servants,

PROPOSAL TO BUILD A NEW COURT IN MIDDLESEX.—The grand jury having finished their labours, came into court and presented the last bills they had found.—Mr. Serjeant Adair said he would detain them a few minutes, in order that they might view the court, and make personal observation of the inconvenience all parties were put to who attended the court. He was often obliged to give up his own private room for the use of females, who were sometimes compelled to attend the court while in a delicate situation, in order to preserve them from annoyances, consequent upon mixing with the crowd in the hall of the court. The ventilation of the court could not be worse; the temperature was, at the time he was speaking, so hot as scarcely to be borne. There was not a window in the court which could be opened without inconvenience to the judge, the jury, the barristers, or witnesses; that being the case, the heat was quite intolerable. Mr. Pownall said he would shew the grand jury over the court, as he wanted them to make a personal inspection of the deficiency of accommodation in this court, and to convince them of the necessity of a farthing rate, which would realise about 6,000l. to build a court. He could not help saying that this court was a disgrace to the county of Middlesex; there was no accommodation for barristers who wished to speak to their clients. In fact, no parties who visited the court could be properly accommodated. The reason he wished to shew them the inconvenience of the court was, that the Government might know that the money entrusted to them was not thoughtlessly squandered away. When the grand jury inspected the court, he was quite sure that they would concur with him in the belief that a new court was very much required.

A MINIATURE PENTONVILLE AT KIRKDALE GAOL.—A small experimental prison has been erected, at a cost of about 3,000l. within the boundary walls of Kirkdale Gaol, upon the plan adopted at Pentonville. The interior has been fitted up with every regard to comfort and cleanliness. It contains forty-two cells, which might with more propriety be called dormitories; for, except that there are iron bars to the windows and a sheet-iron casing to the doors, there are no other indications that liberty is denied to their occupants. There is no fire-place, but the prisoner, by an ingenious contrivance, can obtain hot or cold air at pleasure. He has, besides, other indulgences granted him, being permitted, in the company of a keeper, at certain hours, to roam up and down the beautifully gravelled walk which encircles the chapel and adjoining lake. None are admitted except felons who have been found guilty and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment; and upon these the effects of religious and moral training are being tried, in the hope that, when the time of their liberation arrives, they may leave the prison better than when they entered it. What the results may be it is, of course, impossible to foresee; for, as the system has only been in operation about a month, it cannot yet be said to have been fairly tested.

A PAUPER JUROR.—At the Cork Assizes on Saturday, previous to discharging the grand jury, his Lordship called their attention to the necessity of a due performance of the duties of the high constables in regard to making out the jury list. These officers ought to be visited with the legal consequence for a non-performance of these duties. As his Lordship was about to adjourn the Court, Mr. Crofts, one of the jurors, said there was one of his fellow jurors who had not the means of affording himself the ordinary subsistence of life. The juror to whom he alluded had eaten but one meal on the previous day, and nothing that day with the exception of some biscuits. He was an aged man, and it was really melancholy to think that he would be without sustenance on Sunday, and be obliged to walk home a distance of twenty miles when his Lordship should have discharged them on Monday. Court.—What is the gentleman's name? Mr. Crofts.—John Lyons, my Lord. Court.—Gentlemen, I do not know what I can do now. Is there any one here from the Crown Solicitor? The sheriff replied in the negative. Court.—Under the circumstances, gentlemen, I will allow Mr. Lyons to go home, and discharge him from further attendance in this court this assizes. Mr. Crofts.—Really, my Lord, it is very hard that this poor man, whose case I have made known to the Court just as he had told it to me, should be brought all the way from Malton to attend on a jury, while numbers of independent gentlemen are left at home. Court.—Gentlemen, I have said a good deal on the point myself. I release the juror in question from further attendance; but he does not seem, gentlemen, to be in such an abject state as has been represented. The jury then made up 8s. 6d. by subscription amongst themselves, to enable the poor man to return home. —Dublin paper.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

No legal incident of interest has occurred during the week. The judgments are now nearly completed, saving some half dozen in the Exchequer, which we hope to receive in a few days from the reporter, who is out of town. The coming vacation will be devoted to bringing up a large accumulation of arrears of New Statutes, Parliamentary Papers, Notes of Cases, Correspondence, Law Lectures, Notices of new Law Books, and other valuable material, which has been unavoidably omitted during the pressure of the reports of the late busy Terms.

Our readers will have perceived, from our Oxford Circuit report in a recent publication, that the new

Lord Chief Justice Wilde, who presided in the Civil Court at Hereford, sat on Tuesday until nearly twelve o'clock at night, disposing of causes; and that notwithstanding this effort on the part of the judge, and although five causes were referred, yet one was made a remanet. It is true that the list was heavy, there being sixteen causes to try, eight of which were special juries; but, notwithstanding this pressure of business, we have no doubt Sir C. Cresswell, Sir E. H. Alderson, Sir William Erie, Sir J. Parke, or Sir R. M. Balf, could have got through the work by Wednesday night, in time to open the commission at Monmouth. Far are we from saying any thing against the inexhaustible patience—the laborious and investigating spirit—the great learning and lucidity, the constant impartiality, the inflexible integrity, and great professional attainments of Sir Thomas Wilde; but consciousness is not one of the learned knight's virtues; and on the bench, as when an advocate, he errs—from all the accounts we have heard—by excess of elaboration. We have no doubt this fault arises from a sensitive, and, perhaps, over-anxious desire to do complete justice. But though the object be laudable, the end is sometimes, from this excess of precaution, defeated. Better, far better, were it that the new Chief Justice should seek to emulate his eminent predecessor, who, though abundantly diligent and profoundly learned, was never too elaborate in his investigation of a point or a cause. To do enough is all that is needed for judge or even advocate, and he is the best judge or advocate who contents himself with doing enough, and not in overdoing. No man has known Sir Thomas Wilde longer or better, or is more capable of appreciating, or more desirous of extolling his really great powers than Lord Brougham, and in an article, attributed to his pen, in the Law Review just published, and which indeed bears internal evidence of his authorship, he has deemed it his duty to address the late Chief Justice Tindal's successor in terms of respectful and well-meant admonition. "Our drift," says his lordship, "is to remind Sir T. Wilde that even an advocate may err by excess of elaboration, because he may undo what he has done; may raise up indisposition in those whom he is addressing, and may weaken the very point which his over-laboriousness is directed to strengthen. How much more should the judge guard himself against falling into the same error; not, indeed, because he may fall thereby to convince, for the purpose of judicial rhetoric is not to convince, but only to declare the opinion, and to show the grounds it rests on; but because he must needlessly consume the public time and waste his own strength, and because he peradventure may raise doubts, shake his own judicial authority, and expose parties to the delay and vexation and cost of appeals, or, even where no appeal lies, may bring the law into question, and raise up a crop of future litigation."

These are just and judicious remarks, and well deserving the attention of the able and eminent person to whom they are addressed. It is in a spirit of respectful friendliness, and because we desire to see Sir Thomas Wilde a perfect as well as a great judge, that we should wish to see that diffuseness and over-elaboration, which is a real blemish, corrected and repressed.

A letter in The Times prefers a complaint so justly founded, that we extract it for the purpose of returning to the subject on a future occasion.

BUSINESS AT ASSIZES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR,—The assizes are now drawing to a close. Any one whom necessity has obliged, either as principal or attorney, to be present at a trial on circuit, will have caught the phrase, current with the Bar, "getting through the business." In its ordinary sense this phrase would imply a laudable effort on the part of the Judge and the Bar to fulfil the whole of their duty, and it is not until the particular business which concerns himself has been so "got through" that the unhappy subject learns the full meaning of the expression. Having just been initiated, I am able to give a correct explanation of the term. I went down from London a few days ago as the attorney for the defendant in a cause of considerable importance about to be tried at the assizes. The case had occasioned me much anxiety for three months previously. In addition to the services of a local agent in collecting evidence, I considered it necessary to go down to the spot several days before the commission day to examine the witnesses myself and to complete and deliver the briefs. This I did, and having spared no pains, I felt a reasonable confidence as to the result. The cause was to be tried by a special jury, and was appointed for the last day of the assizes for the county. The morning broke—I had all my witnesses early in court, and took my station, quite prepared, in the rear of my leader. Before the case was called on, he turned round and asked me carelessly, "If—if they should make any proposals to refer, would you feel inclined to—?" "Decidedly not," I replied; "the case must go to the jury." The anticipated proposal was made and rejected, and the cause was opened in form.

After the lapse of an hour, some discussion on a point of evidence gave occasion for the judge to express an opinion. Up starts my leader again. "Don't you see," he whispers to me, "his Lordship is dead with us? We had better confine ourselves to the first issue. Go to the jury upon that, and refer the other five." I did not see, and shook my head to express my infirmity. "You're mad; don't you see, the judge will say so and so; the jury will be sure to give us a verdict upon the first issue, and you know you can examine the parties before the arbitrator." By this time my two junior counsel had come to the charge—"You really are throwing away the case—well, if you don't take our advice, the whole responsibility rests with you." What could I do? In an evil hour I was overpersuaded, and gave way. The experienced judge patiently witnessed the deliberation; he knew what was coming, and felt as sure that he would leave by the 12 o'clock train as if his place had been booked a week. My leader made a short address to the jury, closed his brief, indorsed the words "Verdict for," and waited pen in hand for the jury to supply the remainder of the sentence. They did not tax his patience long—"Verdict for the plaintiff on the first issue, reference as to the rest." The briefs were handed to me in court; I was left, with a host of witnesses, to dispose of all the heavy part of the case as I best could before an arbitrator, while the judge and counsel went off by the twelve o'clock train in the highest possible spirits; and this is termed "getting through the business."

A YOUNG ATTORNEY.

NOTES ON NEW CASES IN EQUITY AND CONVEYANCING. No. II.

MORRALL v. SUTTON.

Rule as to the construction of wills in cases of contradiction or repugnancy.

Edward Lloyd, by his will dated in 1789, "gave and bequeathed unto A. R. Waring, S. Calcott the elder, and M. Spencer, all his leasehold estate in Gloucestershire, for their joint natural lives and the life of the survivor, but charged with the following annuities: 20*l.* to Esther Jorginson for life; 20*l.* to Sarah, daughter of Esther Jorginson, for life; and 10*l.* to Mrs. Addenbrooke. And from the decease of the said A. R. Waring, S. Calcott, and M. Spencer, he devised and bequeathed his said leasehold estate in Gloucestershire (subject to the said annuities) to S. Calcott the younger, if then living, her executors, administrators, and assigns (subject to the said several annuities charged thereon), during the term of her natural life. And if the said S. Calcott the younger should die in the lifetime of the said A. R. Waring, S. Calcott the elder, and M. Spencer, leaving any lawful issue of her body living at the death of the survivor of them, the testator devised and bequeathed the said leasehold premises, from the several deceases of the above-named three persons, to such child or children of S. Calcott the younger as should then be living, to be divided equally, if more than one; provided that if any child of S. Calcott the younger should be then dead, leaving issue then living, such issue should be entitled to the parent's share; but if S. Calcott the younger should die in the lifetime of the above-named three persons, or either of them, without leaving issue living at the decease of the survivor of them, he then devised and bequeathed his said leasehold estate, after their several deceases (but subject to the annuities), to Thomas Jorginson and Charles Morrall, their administrators, executors, and assigns, for all the then residue of the said leasehold interest.

The question in the case was, whether S. Calcott the younger, who survived A. R. Waring, S. Calcott the elder, and M. Spencer, took an absolute estate in the leaseholds, or only an estate for life.

The case was twice argued before the Master of the Rolls, who on both occasions held that she was entitled only to an estate for life. (4 Beav. 480; 5 Beav. 100.) On an appeal to the Lord Chancellor, his lordship called to his assistance Mr. Baron Parke and Mr. Justice Coleridge, before whom the case was heard. The learned judges, differing in their opinion, delivered separate judgments, of which we annex a summary.

PARKE, B.—The case depended upon the following clause in the testator's will:—"From and after the decease of the said three persons" (previously named), "I give and bequeath my said leasehold estate in Gloucestershire (subject to the said several annuities as aforesaid) to Sarah Calcott the younger, if she shall be then living, her executors, administrators, and assigns (subject to the said annuities charged thereon)"—in a parenthesis

—"during the term of her natural life." Under this clause, did Sarah Calcott the younger, who survived the three tenants for life, take an absolute or only a life interest? The rules of construction applicable to the question were, that technical words were primâ facie to be understood in their strict technical sense; that the clause was, if possible, to receive a construction which would give to every expression some effect; that all the parts of the will were to be construed so as to form a consistent whole; that the construction was to be preferred which would prevent an intestacy; and that where two provisions were irreconcilable, and there was nothing in the context of the will leading to a different conclusion, the last should prevail. In the present case all attempts at reconciling the contradictory expressions had failed, and the main question was, whether the context of the will afforded such clear evidence of the testator's intention as to justify a construction which would give the legatee the absolute interest. The provision in favour of Sarah Calcott's children, in case of her death in the lifetime of the three tenants for life, was relied on as evidence of the testator's intention to provide for them, which in the event that had happened (viz. Sarah Calcott's survivorship of the tenants for life), only could be done by their mother's interest extending beyond her own life. And (the learned Baron admitted) any satisfactory evidence of an intention to provide for S. Calcott's children, either generally or in the event which had happened, would be a ground for rejecting the words which only gave her a life-estate. But he could find no indication of any such intention. There was certainly an express provision in their favour in one event (viz. the death of their mother during the lives of the three tenants for life), but in one event only; and in that event, upon failure of issue, the testator gave an interest in remainder to other parties, to whom also he gave no interest if that event should not happen. The testator, besides, had not given the estate absolutely to the mother, which a desire to provide for the children would render probable, but had only given it to her if she survived the tenants for life; and he had given it her whether she had issue or not. There was, therefore, no consistent intention to provide for the children by giving an absolute estate to the mother; and it was mere conjecture whether the testator meant a benefit to the children in the event which had happened. It was not an unreasonable conjecture that he did so mean, nor were other conjectures which had been suggested unreasonable, but they were all mere conjecture; and it was the province of judges to expound the actual wills of testators, and not, upon conjecture, to make wills for them. In the cases upon the subject, either the intention of the testator had been clear (Reece v. Steel, 2 Sim. 233), or senseless words had been rejected in favour of sensible (Smith v. Pybus, 9 Ves. 566); or interlined words, presumably the last written, had been rejected because they were repugnant to the whole disposition. (Boone v. Cornforth, 2 Ves. 277.) In other cases, all of which were collected in Jarman's edit. of Powel, (vol. 1, 380, note), the language of the will had been altered, as by the change of "or" into "and," or the reverse, to suit the testator's clear intention; but here the intention to benefit the issue was not clear—it was mere conjecture; and the argument in favour of an absolute gift, founded upon the improbability of an intestacy, was answered by the fact that the residuary clause disposed of the remainder. The meaning of the words, therefore, could only be decided by the clause itself, according to the established rules of construction; and the learned baron, so deciding, thought that the apparent repugnance was best explained by understanding the gift to the executors as a gift to them after S. Calcott's death, of a fruit fallen during life, or (and he preferred the latter explanation) that the two provisions were absolutely repugnant, and being irreconcilable and unexplained, the latter must prevail, by which Calcott could take only a life estate.

COLERIDGE, J. agreed that no interpretation had been, or probably could be, suggested, by which the two apparently repugnant sentences in the clause under consideration could be reconciled, and, therefore, to give any effect to the clause, one must be rejected. Which was it to be? In answering that question, it was to be remembered that the present was not an inquiry into the meaning of the testator's language; but what words the testator must be supposed to have deliberately written—which sentence contained his last will;—a case warranting a wider discretion in the Court than would a mere case of interpretation. The general rule in such an inquiry undoubtedly was, that the latter clause or phrase was to be preferred; but it must not clash with another paramount rule, that, before all things, they ought to look for the intention of the testator, expressed or clearly implied in the general tenor of the will. If, on satisfactory evidence, they found that intention, to it, without doubt, the inconsistent clause, whether it stood first or last, should be sacrificed; for, in a case of repugnant clauses, the latter was chosen, only because it was presumed to contain the last wish and intention of the testator, and if that presumption were overthrown by the better evidence of the whole scope of the will, the rule necessarily fell to the ground, and the first of the two inconsistent clauses or sentences was acted upon. This would be an where the repugnancy existed between two clauses, and à fortiori so, where, as in the present case, the repugnancy was between two sentences of the same clause, for a change of intention was more easily supposable between the penning of two separate clauses than of two sentences in one clause. The rule was well laid down by Mr. Jarman, in his book on Wills (chap. xv. vol. 1, p. 420), although in the opening of that chapter his language required qualification; and as to that rule there was no difference between himself (Coleridge, J.) and his learned brother. But as to the application of the rule they differed; and its application depended upon the evidence of intention furnished by the will. It was admitted that, if there were clear evidence of an intention to provide generally, or in the event which had happened, for the children of S. Calcott, the words, however placed, ought to be retained, by which alone that intention would effectuated; but it had been assumed that a clear intention to provide for them in certain events afforded no fair inference of an intention to provide for them in the event which had happened. This seemed to him unreasonable, and he, on the contrary, thought that a provision for children in three or four possible contingencies afforded a strong ground for inferring an intention to provide for them in a fifth; sufficiently strong, at least, to determine the choice between two inconsistent clauses, in one of which that intention was carried into effect without the necessity of adding or altering a word. Was conclusive evidence of intention, expressly embracing every contingency, necessary? No; because if there were sufficient evidence to negative one of the repugnant sentences, yet not sufficient absolutely to confirm the other, the latter, nevertheless, would stand, because the former must in such a case be rejected. The rule was a rule of evidence, and the reasons for its application or rejection should be cogent, but need not be conclusive. The degree of cogency could not be defined, but, from authorities in analogous cases, the Court would be warranted in rejecting the technical rule wherever it would be warranted in transposing clauses, altering words, or supplying devices unexpressed; to do which the Courts had not required evidence of necessary inevitable cogency, but only that which made the intention of the testator, and the alteration of the will, highly probable. (Soule v. Gerrard, Cro. Eliz. 525; White v. Barber, 5 Burr. 2703; Ambler, 701.) Was there not then strong evidence in the present case against the intention to limit S. Calcott's estate to an estate for life? Such limitation involved, in a certain event, an intestacy; at least in the contemplation of the testator; and the details of the will greatly strengthened the general presumption against intestacy. S. Calcott and her issue were near objects of the testator's bounty, and were to be provided for by the property in question; for if the mother were to die during the lifetime of the tenants for life, the children who survived them were to take absolutely; and if any child should die before the tenants for life, leaving issue who survived them, such issue was to take the parent's share absolutely. The ultimate remainder-men, too, were only to take if S. Calcott died before the tenants for life, leaving no issue. But if she survived them, what estate would she take? By rejecting the former of the two sets of words employed, her children were left unprotected for the ultimate remainders were defeated, and there was a virtual intestacy as to that part of the property, against the clear wishes of the testator. By rejecting the latter, the interests of the children were, as they safely might be, intrusted to the mother, and the supposition at once destroyed of the remainder-men. Could it be assumed that the testator intended to give all the property to the children or remainder-men, if S. Calcott never came to it, but nothing if she did? No such supposition could be entertained; and was it to be adopted and acted upon because the words involving it were last written? The whole details of the will rebutted the presumption that between the first and last set of repugnant words a change of intention had taken place in the testator's mind—the greater portion of the details, too, having been written after the last set of such repugnant words had been employed. For these reasons the learned judge thought that S. Calcott took an absolute interest in the leasehold estates.

The LORD CHANCELLOR expressed his intention of requesting the assistance of the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas and the Chief Baron of the Exchequer; but, it is believed, the case has since been compromised.

The length to which our summary of the judgment (occupying in Mr. Phillips's Reports no less than twenty-two pages) has run, must necessarily abridge the few remarks we proposed to offer on the interesting question involved in the above case. The rule by which effect is given to the last of two repugnant clauses in a will (though to the first in a deed) was for a time doubted and disputed by many able lawyers, but is now settled law. It may be traced from the time of Lord Coke, who states it in the First Institute (Co. Litt. 112, b); and "it is curious," says Lord Brougham, in Sherratt v. Bentley (2 My. & K. 161), "to observe how he deduces it from the text." Littleton (s. 168) simply says, "that if a man at divers times make divers testaments and divers devises, &c. the last devise and will shall stand." His learned and subtle commentator then adds—"Hereby, &c. is to be understood also that in one will where there be divers devises of one thing, the last devise taketh place; cum duo inter se pugnantia reperiuntur in testamento ultimum ratum est." And this doctrine (though not applied to the particular case mentioned) has received the sanction of all modern authorities. (See the opinion of Alvanley, C. in Sims v. Doughty, 5 Ves. 243, and in Constantine v. Constantine, 6 Ves. 100, and of Eldon, C. in Wykham v. Wykham, 18 Ves. 395; see also 2 Atk. 372; 3 Ves. 99; 1 Ball & Bea. 449; 4 T. R. 605; 2 My. & K. 161.) And in Doe dem. Leicester v. Biggs (2 Taunt. 109), the principle was extended by the Court of King's Bench to inconsistent expressions in the same clause, as well as to separate clauses of the same will.

But this rule, by which the latter of two repugnant clauses or phrases is preferred, can only be acted upon in cases of absolute and irreconcilable repugnancy. Where the words are only apparently repugnant, or where a construction can be put upon them by which effect will be given to all, the rule does not hold. Accordingly, where a consistent disposition can be deduced from the entire will, its clauses will be transposed for the purpose (Cro. El. 9; 15 East, 309; 1 B. & Ald. 137; 1 Atk. 419), or a later devise will be regarded as an exception out of a former, or the reverse (3 M. & S. 158; 16 Ves. 314; 7 Sim. 549; 7 Taunt. 105; 2 Bl. 979); or, in a devise of the same estate to different persons, the devises will take concurrently, either as tenants in common or as joint tenants. (2 Myl. & K. 165.) The last point was, for a time, doubted, and it was thought either that both the gifts were void, or that the latter must exclusively prevail—of which opinion was Lord Coke (as above stated); but subsequent authorities have applied to such a case the doctrine that all the gifts must (if they can in any way) be reconciled, and the devises (at least with regard to a divisible estate or chattel) now take concurrently, though whether as joint tenants or tenants in common seems doubtful. (See Mr. Butler's note to Co. Litt. 112, b, n. 1; Parson v. Yardley, Plowd. 539; Ridout v. Pein, 3 Atk. 486; Sherratt v. Bentley, ubi supra; 1 Jarman on Wills, 418.)

In these and in all the other variety of cases in which the Courts have endeavoured to reconcile the apparently repugnant devises of ill-drawn wills, the great object has been to ascertain and to give effect to the intention of the testator. It is naturally assumed that each clause and each sentence contains, in part, the expression of his wishes, and that those wishes are consistent with each other. And this assumption imposes upon the Courts the duty of giving effect, if possible, to every wish, and of attaching a meaning, if possible, to every sentence. In many cases, however, this is quite impossible. Not only inconsistent but directly contradictory clauses and phrases are often, per incuriam, inserted; and to render the instrument sensible or consistent, some change in its phraseology is indispensable. That change the Courts, in pursuit of, and in obedience to, the testator's intention, have not hesitated to make. They reject words at variance with the context. (2 Ves. sen. 576; 7 Sim. 56; 2 Cox, 340.) They reject ambiguous words inconsistent with a clear prior devise. (12 East, 515; 9 Ves. 566; 2 Bligh, 1; 2 Sim. 233; 1 My. & K. 148.) They supply words to effectuate the intention, as collected from the context. (Cro. El. 248; Cro. Car. 185; Amb. 122.) They affix a devise to a certain object where the testator has left it without an object (2 Dowl. & R. 398; 2 Moo. & Pay. 490); and they change one word or phrase for another. (3 Ad. & El. 340; Cro. El. 525; 2 Ves. sen. 243; 2 Kee. 255; 4 Bligh, N. S. 329.) But this license of dealing with the will of a testator, the Courts have not taken, except where the intention is clear and manifest. (18 Ves. 368; 16 Ves. 46; 16 Ves. 27.)

And this brings us to the important question discussed in Merrall v. Sutton, what amount of evidence is necessary or sufficient to indicate the intention of the testator? Must the context shew a probability of intention, or is a certainty of intention required to justify any alteration of the will? This we believe to be the sole question; for we cannot recognize the distinction drawn by Mr. Justice Coleridge, between an alteration of the will, by supplying words necessary to effectuate the testator's intention, and an alteration of the will, by rejecting, in defiance of the technical rule, the latter of two repugnant clauses. The principle applicable to every case of alteration is the same; viz. obedience to the testator's intention; and there seems no reason why you should ascertain that intention in a different method, or be satisfied with less stringent evidence with regard to it, in one instance than in another. The particular rule is, that the last repugnant clause is to be preferred, unless the testator's intention directs the contrary; as the general law is, that every sentence is to be construed as it stands, unless (again) the testator's intention directs the contrary; and, under the particular rule, how can you be justified in preferring the former repugnant clause if you know not what the intention is, any more than you can, under the general law, be justified in applying changing or words without knowing what the intention is? And this observation tends to shew, not only that the same amount of evidence is required in the selection of the prior repugnant clause as in any other alteration in a will, but that that amount must be of the highest and most conclusive kind. For, to alter the will or to take the first of two repugnant clauses, you must have ascertained the testator's intention; and you cannot ascertain it by any thing short of conclusive evidence. In the cases relied upon by Mr. Justice Coleridge in support of his view, the intention of the testator seems scarcely to have been disputed. In Soullie v. Gerrard (Cro. Elis. 525), Glanville, counsel for the plaintiff, did not adopt the argument suggested, that the intention was not clear—only probable; on the contrary, he is reported to have argued "that the disjunctive 'or' should not be taken for the conjunctive 'and,' for that were to construe the intent against the direct words of the deviser, which never shall be." And in White v. Barber (5 Barr. 2703; Amb. 701), although the evidence of intention was, necessarily, of a "moral" nature, and, consequently, "fell short of demonstration," yet it was as conclusive as it well could be, and the terms in which the Court of King's Bench worded their certificate to Chancery shew that to their minds at least the evidence had been quite conclusive. And probably the nearest approach to a rule of which the subject admits, may turn out to be this, that, whatever be the evidence, it must carry to the minds of the Court an irresistible conviction that the testator intended the construction in favour of which they make any alteration in his will. Demonstration is out of the question, but the mind of the judge must be convinced of the testator's intention before he would be justified in introducing any change in the wording, or in rejecting the latter of two repugnant clauses, of the will; and though cogent evidence may strengthen the probability of a conjecture, evidence little if any thing short of conclusive can alone carry with it absolute conviction. And, with regard to the particular rule under consideration, it may not be immaterial to remark that if either of two repugnant clauses could be preferred upon the strength of its superior probability, or upon evidence shewing merely that its selection was more likely to be in accordance with the testator's intention, no longer would any necessity exist for the continuance of the rule, for it is almost impossible to conceive a case in which a higher probability could not be shewn in favour of one, rather than of another, of two repugnant clauses.

THE PRACTICE OF WILLS.

By G. S. ALLNUTT, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.
BOOK II.

PROBATE OF WILLS.

CHAPTER I.—IN WHAT COURT A WILL MUST BE PROVED.

With the exception of some few cases of special prescription (2 Black. Com. 494,) the Ecclesiastical Court is the only court in which wills of personal estate may be proved; and a probate granted by the prerogative court is conclusive evidence, in courts of law and of equity, of the validity of the will, as to personal property. (Allen v. Dundas, 5 Term Reports, 125; Griffith v. Hamilton, 12 Ves. 298, and the cases cited in Mr. Hargrave's Law Tracts, p. 459.)

The will, in case the whole of the testator's goods be within the jurisdiction in which he dies, must be proved before the ordinary of the place; but if the deceased had bona movibilia or chattels to the value of a hundred shillings, in two distinct dioceses or jurisdictions, then the will must be proved before the metropolitan of the province, by way of special prerogative, whereas the courts where the validity of such wills is tried, and the offices where they are registered, are called the prerogative courts, and the prerogative offices of the provinces of Canterbury and York. (2 Black. Com. 509.)

The ordinary is usually the bishop of the diocese, but there are districts exempt from his jurisdiction, and called peculiars, the officers of which have the power to grant probates of wills. Mr. Williams, in his valuable Treatise on the Law of Executors, says (vol. 1, p. 180, n. e), "Peculiar is of several sorts. 1. Peculiar of the archbishops, exclusive of the bishops and archdeacons, which spring from a privilege; they had to enjoy jurisdiction in such places where their seats and possessions were. Within the province of Canterbury there are more than a hundred such peculiars; but the term curia episcopalis is applied to thirteen parishes within the city of London, and the several parishes composing the deaneries of Croydon in Surrey, and Shoreham in Kent; of these the Dean of the Archies is judge: in the other peculiars, the jurisdiction is exercised by commissaries; from whose sentence an appeal lies to the Archies; (2 Glba. Cod. 978, n. 3.; Aughtie v. Aughtie, 2 Phillim. 201, note by the learned reporter.) 2. Peculiar of bishops, exclusive of the jurisdiction of the bishop of the diocese in which they are situated: of which sort, the bishop of London has four parishes within the diocese of Lincoln. (2 Glba. Cod. ubi supra.) 3. Peculiar of archbishops, exclusive of archidiaconal jurisdiction. 4. Peculiar of deans, and of deans and chapters, prebendaries, and the like, who have power to appoint commissaries for probate of wills, &c. (2 Glba. Cod. ubi supra.) Archdeacons have no power to grant probates quatenus archidiaconi, although they may do so as the bishops' commissaries for their respective archidiaconates, or by reason of peculiars, belonging to the fourth class of those above enumerated. (See Adams v. Savage, 6 Mod. 184.) There is also another sort of peculiar, more highly exempt than those already enumerated, viz., Royal Peculiars, which are exempt from the jurisdiction, not only of the diocesan, but of the archbishop also, and which anciently were immediately subordinate to the see of Rome. A royal peculiar is in no degree subject to the archbishop; it is independent of him; it is as much out of his province in point of jurisdiction as the province of York or of Dublin; it is co-ordinate. (Smith v. Smith, 3 Hogg 769.) By the statute 36 Hen. 8, c. 19, these were placed immediately under the jurisdiction of the Crown; and all appeals from them transferred directly to his Majesty in the High Court of Delegates. (See Parkin v. Tupper, 3 Phillim. 246; Johnson v. Lee, 5 Binn. 589; 3 Hogg. 763.)

The ordinary may exercise his jurisdiction of granting probates either by himself or by deputy, and the power is not local, but annexed to the person of the ordinary (Barnes v. Mordaunt, Noy, 112.)

Upon the vacancy of a see, the dean and chapter have the power to grant probate.

The value of the goods of the deceased which were distinguished as bona notabilia, was, as we have before stated, formerly fixed at one hundred shillings, but different computations having been made of this amount, it was provided by the 63rd of the Canons, made in the first year of King James the 1st (A.D. 1603), that "no judge of the archbishop's prerogative shall henceforward cite or cause to be cited ex officio any person whatsoever to any of the aforesaid intents (viz., for the probate of wills or grant of administrations), unless he have knowledge that the party deceased was, at the time of his death, possessed of goods and chattels in some other diocese or dioceses, or peculiar jurisdiction within that province, than in that wherein he died, amounting to the value of 5*l.* at the least: decreeing and declaring that whoso hath not goods to the said sum or value shall not be accounted to have bona notabilia. Always provided that this clause here, and in the former constitution mentioned, shall not prejudice those dioceses where, by composition or custom, bona notabilia are rated at a greater sum." By this latter clause, the rating of bona notabilia in the diocese of London continues at 10*l.*, the sum at which they were there formerly fixed by composition. (2 Black. Com. 509.)

By the 92nd Canon, Jac. 1, it is provided "that if any man die in itinere, the goods that he hath about him at present shall not cause his testament or administration to be liable unto the prerogative court." (See Dec. dem. Allen v. Owens, 2 Barn. & Ad. 423.)

If a man, not being in itinere, die in one diocese, not having goods there, but has bona notabilia in another diocese, this will be sufficient for the Archbishop to grant probate or administration; because the ordinary where he dies, by the law, is to take as great care of the testator and of his goods as the other ordinary where his goods are. (11 Viner's Abridgment, Executors H, p. 80; citing from, though not referring to, 1 Roll. Abr. 909, tit. Executor, H, p. 7.)

Where a man dies out of the province, having no goods in divers dioceses, but in one only, probate in that diocese is sufficient. (Griffith v. Griffith, Beyer, 83; Scarth v. The Bishop of London, 1 Hagg. 625.)

Where a testator is, at the time of his death, possessed of goods in both the provinces of York and Canterbury, there must be probate in each province—or in the one province where the goods are in two of its dioceses, and in the diocese of the other province where the goods of the testator were in one of its dioceses only. (Allison v. Dickenson, Hard. 216; Shaw v. Storton, Freem. 101; S. C. 3 Keb. 163; 2 Lev. 86; and Burston v. Ridley, 1 Salk. 39.)

In Scarth v. The Bishop of London (1 Hagg. 625), it was decided that the Prerogative and the Diocesan Courts may, in some cases, have concurrent jurisdiction; as where the testator died out of the province, leaving goods in one diocese only, the probate might be granted by either Court.

Where there were bona notabilia in the diocese of an archbishop, and also in a peculiar within the same diocese, it was held that administration, durante itinere astat, of the executrix should be granted in both (Price v. Simpson, Cro. Eliz. 79); but in a recent case (Lysons v. Barrow, 2 Bing. N. C. 486), it was held that a metropolitan administration of goods within a peculiar, if not valid, is at least voidable only, and not void. It should, however, be stated that a probate granted by an inferior court, where the metropolitan has the right, is void.

If there be bona notabilia in several peculiars, or in a diocese, and in a peculiar within the diocese, the peculiars not being royal peculiars, probate shall be granted by the metropolitan. (Parham v. Templer, 3 Phill. 247.)

But where a testator was possessed of goods in two royal peculiars, in one of which he died, and also of goods in a diocese within the same province, the will was held to be properly proved in the royal peculiar in which he died. (Parham v. Templer, 3 Phill. 247.) The rule respecting bona notabilia lying within different jurisdictions does not apply to the several commissaries of the same bishop. (Rex v. Younge, 5 M. & S. 119.)

If A die in India, and B, one of his executors, prove his will there, and B's will be proved in England by C, his executor, C is not the personal representative of A. This was decided in Twynford v. Twail, 7 Sim. 92. But in Fowler v. Richards, 5 Russ. 39, Sir J. Leach, M.R. held that the chain of representation was complete, whether the will of the executor was proved in the same court with the will of the original testator, or in a different court. In that case, A appointed executors, who proved his will in the Prerogative Court; B, the surviving executor, died, having appointed C his executor, who proved B's will in the Consistory Court of Llandaff, and the Master of the Rolls, after taking the opinion of Dr. Lushington, which was opposed to the decision, held that C was the personal representative of A. (See also Jernegan v. Baxter, 5 Sim. 568.)

The probate of a bishop's will, on granting administration of his goods, always belongs to the archbishop. (4 Inst. 335.)

CHAP. II.—OF BONA NOTABILIA.

Debts due to the testator, whether on simple contract or specialty, are bona notabilia; in the former case, in the place or diocese where the debtor lived, and in the latter, in the place or diocese where the specialty was at the testator's death. (France v. Aubrey, 2 Cas. temp. Lee, 534; Byron v. Byron, Cro. Eliz. 472; and Loddington v. Draper, 3 Keb. 438, pl. 50.) Judgments, statutes, or recognizances are bona notabilia in the place where they are given or acknowledged.

Stock in the public funds appears to be bona notabilia within the diocese of London, as well as in the Archbishopric of Canterbury. (Scarth v. The Bishop of London, 1 Hagg. 625.)

A lease for years of lands will be bona notabilia where the lands lie. (Com. Dig. Administrator, B. 4.)

As to property vested in trustees being bona notabilia of them, it may be mentioned that in Crosley v. The Archdeacon of Sudbury, 3 Haggard, 197 (Trin. Term, 1815), Sir J. Nicholl granted a limited administration to assign a satisfied term, situate in a different diocese to that in which the deceased's will had been proved, and the following passage appears in the report of the judgment (p. 201):—"It is said that the property is of no value; but the legal property was in the deceased, and his act if living would be necessary to make a title; and though, as a trustee, a court of equity would compel him to do such act, yet in law he is the proprietor. Still I should be sorry to hold that these naked trusts, in all cases, create bona notabilia, which would make the grant of other jurisdictions null and void: and it might be an inconvenience to the parties beneficially interested in the property to be obliged to take a prerogative probate, when a local jurisdiction might otherwise be competent; yet I suppose no conveyancer would be satisfied with a conveyance of property, situate in one jurisdiction, under an administration granted by the authority of another jurisdiction; for, manifestly, it would not be any conveyance, because the Archdeacon of Sudbury could not make any person legal representative quoad hoc, to make a valid title to premises in another jurisdiction. However, as an administration, limited to this particular purpose, is only prayed—not a general administration—the former grant will not be revoked, nor the other property of the deceased, nor his representatives, be thereby disturbed." (See also, In the goods of Mary Powell, 3 Hagg. 195.)

Where a canal was situated in both provinces, but the office for transacting the business of it was in the province of Canterbury, the will of a shareholder was held to be sufficiently proved in the province of Canterbury. (Smith v. Strafford, 2 Wils. Chancery Reports, 166.) So, where an Act for making a navigable canal provided that the shares were to be deemed personal estate, and to be transmissible as such, and the canal passed through parishes in the diocese of Worcester, and other parishes in the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, but the transfers of shares in the canal were filed at the public office of the company in the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, where the dividends were also paid, and books of account kept, it was held that, for the purposes of probate, the right of a shareholder to a share of the profits, being personal property, might be considered as locally situate in the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and that a probate granted by the Consistorial Court of the bishop of that diocese was sufficient. (Ex parte Horne, 7 Barn. & Cres. 632.)

of James I. the goods which a man has with him, if he dies on his journey, are not to be considered bona notabilia in the place where he dies.

By the 4th of Anne, c. 16, s. 26, after reciting that great trouble and expense are frequently occasioned to the widows and orphans of persons dying intestate to moneys or wages due for work done in her Majesty's yards and docks, by disputes happening about the authority of granting probates of the wills and letters of administration of the goods and chattels of such persons, it is, for preventing such unnecessary trouble and expense, enacted "that the power of granting probates of the wills and letters of administration of the goods and chattels of such person and persons respectively is and is hereby declared to be in the ordinary of the diocese, or such other person to whom the ordinary power of probate of wills or granting letters of administration do belong, where such person or persons respectively die; and that the salary, wages, or pay, due to such person or persons from the Queen's Majesty, her heirs or successors, for work done in any of the yards or docks, shall not be taken or deemed to be bona notabilia, whereby to found the jurisdiction of the Prerogative Court."

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

The Queen has been pleased to confer the honor of Knighthood upon John Jervis, esq. her Majesty's Attorney-General.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed John William Cudworth, of Leeds, gent. to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE EXCISE.—By the promotion of Dr. Bateman, the chief clerk in the Excise Office, to the office of solicitor to that department, the chief clerkship has become vacant. Mr. Procter, for many years engaged as assistant to the late Mr. Mayow, and who frequently conducted his judicial business before the commissioners, has become the successor of Dr. Bateman; and Mr. Dwelly, second clerk, has been appointed in the room of Mr. Procter. Several other changes are in contemplation, but the arrangements will not be made known for a few days.

REVIEWING BARRISTERS on the South Wales Circuit, 1846:—Brecon and Carmarthen—Mr. Serjeant Jones, Mr. Davison; Radnor and Gloucerglan—Mr. Vaughan Williams, Mr. Lloyd Hall; Cardigan and Pembroke—Mr. Nicholl Carne, Mr. Grove.

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN THIS PRESENT PARLIAMENT.

Borough of St. Alban—Benjamin Bond Cabbell, of the Middle Temple, London, esq. in the room of the Right Hon. William Earl of Listerwell, who has accepted the office of one of the Lords in Waiting on her Majesty.

COURT PAPERS.

IMPORTANT ORDER IN CHANCERY.—Saturday, the 8th of August, in the tenth year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, 1846:—

"In the matter of the sutors of the Court of Chancery, his Lordship doth order that, notwithstanding the order of the 1st of July made in this matter, all orders for payment out of moneys, transfer of stock, or delivery out of exchequer bills, paid in or deposited at the Bank of England, in the name and with the privy of the Accountant-General of this Court, under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, passed in the 1st and 2nd years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to provide for the Custody of certain moneys paid in pursuance of the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament, by Subscribers to Works or Undertakings to be effected under the authority of Parliament;" or of another Act passed in the 9th year of the reign of her said Majesty, to amend the said Act, may be received at the said Accountant-General's Office up to six of the clock of the evening of Friday, the 14th day of August instant. And that the said Accountant-General may be at liberty to carry out such order.

(Signed) R. O. WALKER, Registrar."

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE CIRCUITS.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT.

WARWICK, August 5.—The commission for this division of the county was opened last night. The present assizes will be heavier on the whole than has been known the last few years. The calendar contains the names of sixty-three prisoners. Among them we find one charged with administering poison, with intent to murder; one with manslaughter; eight with burglary; two for bigamy; several for forgery, and uttering forged acceptances. Among the charges in the calendar we find one against a person of the name of Joseph Piercy Zeomans Welch, late treasurer to the guardians of the poor of the parish of Birmingham, for embezzlement. There were thirty causes entered, and among them are five special juries. Since the last assizes many improvements have been made in the two courts for the better accommodation of those whose professions compel their attendance. Mr. Justice Patteson presides in the Nisi Prius Court, and Mr. Justice Coleridge in the Criminal Court.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.

MONMOUTH, August 6.—Mr. Justice Maule having yesterday opened the commission for this county, attended divine service at St. Mary's church. There are eight causes, all for common juries, on the list. In the calendar there appear the names of 19 prisoners, who may be thus classified—burglary, 1; house-breaking, 1; sheep-stealing, 1; embezzlement, 1; robbery, with violence, 2; larceny, 13.

GLOUCESTER, August 9.—The commission was opened yesterday by the Lord Chief Justice Wilde. This morning his lordship attended divine service in the cathedral. Mr. Justice Maule has not yet arrived in the town. The calendar contains the names of 56 prisoners, who may be thus classified—murder, 1; infanticide, 1; manslaughter, 2; rape, 2; arson, 2; burglary, 1; house-breaking, 1; cutting and wounding, 2; assault with intent, &c. 5; assault, 1; robbery with violence, 2; stealing from the person, 2; embezzlement, 1; false pretences, 2; sheep-stealing, 1. There are 5 special and 15 common jury cases entered for trial, but as entries may be made up to 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, the list will no doubt be greater.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT.

CARLISLE, August 8.—The assizes for the county of Cumberland commenced here to-day. Mr. Justice Wightman sat on the Crown side, and Mr. Justice Cresswell in the Civil Court. The calendar contains the names of twenty-nine prisoners, the greater number of whom stand charged with petty thefts. There are two cases of rape, and four of burglary. On the Civil side eight causes are entered for trial; of these the greater number were disposed of in the course of the day. In several, verdicts by consent were taken; and in others the records were withdrawn. Of those tried, the principal were, an action for the value of some turnips, sold to the defendants; and another, in which the question was, whether a bill of sale of some farming stock was fraudulent or not: neither case presented any point of public interest.

APPELBY, August 10.—These assizes commenced to-day for the trial of both causes of a civil nature and prisoners committed within this county. The commission had been opened by the learned judges on Saturday evening, and, pursuant to arrangement, Mr. Justice Wightman presided in the civil court, and Mr. Justice Cresswell in the criminal court. The list of magistrates being read over, the Hon. Henry Cecil Lowther and twenty-one other magistrates were appointed grand jurors, to whom bills of indictment were, after an address from his lordship, referred. The prisoners to be tried are thirteen in number, and the causes are only four.

LANCASTER, August 12.—The commission was opened last night. To-day Mr. Justice Cresswell presides in the civil court; Mr. Justice Wightman in the criminal court. The cause list contains thirteen; the criminal cases are but eleven, and the calendar may be considered light.

WESTERN CIRCUIT.

WELLS, August 8.—The Assizes for the county of Somerset commenced here yesterday morning. Mr. Justice Erie presiding in the Crown court, and Mr. Baron Platt on the civil side. There are twenty-two causes entered for trial, but, with the exception of two, they are all common jury cases. The calendar contains the names of fifty-two prisoners, respectively charged with the following offences:—Murder, 1; maliciously wounding, 2; arson, 1; burglary, 4; house-breaking, 3; robbery, 2; larcenies, 35; endeavouring to conceal the birth of a child, 1; assault with intent, 3.

On Thursday, the Vice-Chancellor, Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, after having heard and disposed of a number of interlocutory applications in his private room at Lincoln's Inn, rose for the vacation; the Lord Chancellor, the Vice-Chancellor of England, and Vice-Chancellor Wigram, having also closed their sittings. Lord Langdale (the Master of the Rolls) will remain in town during the vacation, to hear applications for injunctions, and other cases of pressing emergency. From the books of causes entered for hearing before the Lord Chancellor, the three Vice-Chancellors, and the Master of the Rolls, there appears to be a large arrear of causes remaining undisposed of; the following are the numbers up to the present time, before each judge:—Lord Chancellor, judgments, 15; rehearings and appeals, 63; exclusive of seven causes heard, and waiting for judgment.

Vice-Chancellor of England, causes waiting for judgment, 5; pleas and demurrers, 4; causes, 179, including 4 heard and marked as waiting for judgment. Master of the Rolls—Causes standing for judgment, 6; causes not heard or undisposed of, 96. Vice-Chancellor Wigram—Causes for judgment, 4; objections for want of parties, only 1 (Hunter v. Macken, set down on the 23rd of July for hearing); causes for hearing, 76, including The East India Company v. The Coopers' Company, and several others marked for hearing in Michaelmas Term. The following causes are also marked as having been heard, and standing for judgment:—De Sola v. Menard; Hurst v. Kemp; Hutchinson v. Pickering; Jackson v. Pickering, Faulding, and Newton; and Faulding v. Sheriff. Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce—Causes standing for judgment, 3; pleas and demurrers, and objections for want of parties, 2; causes not heard, 62. There is also an arrear of 342 appeals and causes for rehearing, which are either abated for want of parties, or ordered to stand over generally, 40 of which number are appeals, and the remaining 302 causes for rehearing.

FRANCE.—The Minister of Justice has just made his report for 1844 of the administration of civil and commercial justice in France. We extract from it the following facts:—The number of appeals in civil and commercial cases submitted to the Court of Cassation was 685. In 1841 it was 582, in 1842, 589; and in 1843, 643. Of the 685 appeals, 505 were tried, and in 131 cases out of that number the judgments of the lower courts were quashed. The number of appeals to the 27 Cours Royales was 11,069. In 1841 the number was 10,437; in 1842, 10,834; and in 1843, 10,191. If we add to the 11,069 new appeals in 1844 which remained on the list from the preceding year, we have a total of 17,544. The number of appeals tried in 1844 was 9,092, and 2,284 cases were struck off the roll for various causes. The number of new cases of the civil tribunals of premiere instance in 1844 was 119,928. In 1841 it was 111,109; in 1842, 114,090; and in 1843, 117,124. To the 119,928 new cases in 1844 we must add 55,279, which remained over from 1843, making a total of 175,207, of which 128,529 were tried during the year. 32,313 were struck off the lists for various motives. In 1844 the number of applications for separation de corps to the civil tribunals was 4,108. In the year 1841 the number was 987; in 1842 it was 962; and in 1843, 1,077. Of the 1,108 applications in 1844, 989 were by wives, and 119 by husbands; 999 of the cases in which females were the applicants were founded on allegations of ill-treatment, 64 on adultery by the husband, and 27 on the ground that the husbands had received sentences in criminal cases, which had deprived them of civil rights. On the part of the husbands, 52 were founded on allegations of adultery by their wives, 56 of violence and ill-treatment, and one of condemnation by a criminal court on the wife; 906 of these applications were tried by the Courts; 794 of them were granted, and 111 rejected. The remainder were struck off the lists for various causes, but chiefly on account of reconciliation. They were brought before the 220 civil tribunals of commerce, and the 170 civil tribunals which take cognizance of commercial matters, 179,504 causes. In 1841 the number was 159,188; in 1842, 165,814; and in 1843, 176,450. The number of commercial failures legally declared in 1844 was 2,081, representing a total amount of debt of 121,202,409fr.; in 1841 the number of failures was 1,651, and the amount of the debts 89,179,361fr.; in 1842, 1,780, and 114,116,436fr.; and in 1843, 1,829, and 105,116,436fr.

WIFE BROKERAGE.—The following paragraph, taken from the New York Mirror, shews the way in which some parties manage matrimonial matters in America:—"At Philadelphia, on Monday, one German sued another for five dollars, the price of commission for procuring the latter a wife. The objection was that the charge was too high. The plaintiff proved that the defendant stated his wish for a wife—the former, in half an hour, brought a German, to whom the defendant was married in three days. The plaintiff was allowed his whole claim."

CRIMINAL LAW IN PRUSSIA.—A new criminal law has just been promulgated in Prussia, bearing the date of the 17th of July, 1846, by which trials are to be conducted in public, and the accused have the right of choosing a counsel for his defence. In trials where the punishment in case of condemnation would exceed three years, the accused, being unable to pay for an advocate, has the privilege of exacting the nomination of his counsel from the Court. On demand of the accused, or by order of the Court, persons not interested in the case are obliged to retire.

PARLIAMENTARY PETITIONS.—There have been 710 petitions presented to Parliament, during the present session, connected with Ecclesiastical affairs, signed by 121,700 persons. Of these, one petition complained of the distribution of the patronage of the Irish Church; three were for the alteration of the Irish Church Temporalities Act; two were for Encouragement to the Church Education Society (Ireland); 207 complained of the refusal, on the part of several landowners, to grant sites for free churches; 158 for the better observance of the Lord's day; two in favour of the establishment of the bishopric of Manchester; three for repeal of Maynooth College Act; three for abolishing minister's money (Ireland); one praying for an alteration of the Act affecting parish clerks; two for removing the disabilities affecting religious orders; four for alteration of the law affecting Catholic chapels; two against the Roman Catholic Relief Bill; 147 in favour of the Roman Catholic Relief Bill; two in favour of providing chaplains for Roman Catholic soldiers; 129 against the Union of the dioceses of St. Asaph and Bangor; one praying for an alteration of the Tithes Commutation Act; fourteen against the abolition of tests in the Scotch Universities; one in favour of the abolition of tests in Scotch Universities; and one complaining of the state of the church in Workingham parish.

CHARITABLE DONATIONS, IRELAND.—First Annual Report of the Commissioners for the year 1846. The commissioners state that they received from the late Board of Charitable Donations and Bequests, funded property as follows:—

Government Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent Stock	£91,458 7 11
Like in joint account with other trustees	7,386 16 0
Government Three per Cent Consols	75,344 18 2
Like in joint account	714 16 6

Also six debentures, value 400l. and a sum, unaccounted, in the hands of the treasurer; against which they had a debit, for costs due to the solicitors, of 5,926l. 18s. 9d. a claim for services rendered by the treasurer, and some other charges. The sum due from the treasurer was found to be 4,699l. 10s. 4d. of which 3,001l. 6s. 4d. had been paid. The report also states, that during the year thirty-one meetings had been held; and gives the names of the commissioners present at each. There is also a schedule of the rents, &c. under their guardianship—a return of the funds standing to their credit in the Court of Chancery (cash, 818l.; and stock, 12,998l.)—of the stock standing in their names at the Bank of Ireland (180,836l. 3s. three per cents.)—and of the sums received during the year; being cash, 15,631l. and stock, 8,379l. The report also states the registry of a deed, dated in May last, by the Hon. F. Ponsonby, conveying 3 roods and 11 perches of land for a residence for the parish priest of Gallica, in the King's county.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

UNITED LAW CLERKS' SOCIETY.

FOURTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

It has hitherto been the pleasing duty of the committee to report favourably of the progress of the society, and they are happy to state that the year just past has not been less prosperous than any which has preceded it. The claims made since the last anniversary have been numerous, and in meeting them a much larger sum than usual has been required, yet every demand has been fully satisfied, and a larger addition made to the capital of the principal fund than in any preceding year.

The chief expenditure of the society arises from the pecuniary assistance which it affords (out of the general fund) to its members in sickness, superannuation, and death. The number of claimants on the first account has been eighteen. Though this number is much less than the year preceding, a larger proportion than usual were cases of long-continued illness, whereby the expenditure has considerably exceeded that of the year before. The amount expended has been 228l. 16s. 6d. which added to the disbursements of previous years, makes the total sum thus expended 1,217l. 17s.

It is with regret that the committee report, that since the last meeting two members have, by severe indisposition, been rendered incapable of following any employment, and are now receiving the allowance granted on superannuation.

In one case the member has been incapacitated by long-continued nervous disease; in the other, by insanity; each of them is now in receipt of a weekly payment, amounting yearly to 31l. 4s. In almost all similar institutions, the right to receive this allowance is dependent on the age of the member, and rarely commences before sixty. The elder of these members is only forty, the other not yet thirty-two. The patronage of the Profession has enabled the society to grant this allowance irrespective of age, only requiring ample medical evidence that the member is permanently disabled from earning the means of livelihood. An allowance of this nature and amount, commencing at the customary period, is a great advantage, but the condition of these two afflicted members would be little improved by the assurance, that twenty or thirty years hence they would be in the receipt of sufficient pecuniary assistance to place them beyond the reach of absolute dependence, provided they so long paid their subscriptions.

The last branch of the society's expenditure out of the general fund, consists of a payment of 50l. made to the family of each member on his death, and of a payment of half that sum to each married member on the death of his wife.

The committee report with regret, that of the cases of sickness already referred to five terminated fatally. One other case has also occurred, and the families of these six members have received altogether a sum of 300l.; three cases of death have occurred amongst the members' wives, and a sum of 75l. has been expended in meeting the claims that have thus arisen. The sum disbursed by the society on these accounts (alone) amounts to 1,662l. 10s.

The claims upon the casual fund, which is appropriated to the assistance of distressed clerks belonging to all branches of the law, and to their widows who may be in distress, have been less numerous during the last year. All such clerks are eligible, whether members or not. The only qualifications required are, that the applicants shall truly need the assistance, and also be deserving of it. This fund is also employed in assisting with small loans members who may suffer from temporary pecuniary embarrassment. The committee have received thirty-six applications for relief, of which twenty-three, after careful inquiry, were found to be proper cases for assistance, and the applicants received such relief as the society was enabled to afford: with one exception, not one of these persons had ever contributed to the funds of the society. Many members have also been accommodated with small loans to meet pressing and unavoidable emergencies. In granting these loans, (which are repayable without interest or charge of any kind,) all due care is exercised, and generally they have been punctually repaid. In these gifts and loans a sum of 368l. 10s. has been expended. The total payments thus made now amount to 1,833l. 10s.

The committee are fully aware that the demands, which are gradually increasing every year, will before long render any considerable saving impracticable; and they have therefore sought by all proper means to increase the capital of that fund which is charged with the payment of the greater benefits. The general fund in April, 1846, amounted to 7,423l. 4s. 8d. During the year the sum of 1,831l. 9s. 1d. has been received, and 673l. 13s. 9d. expended. The surplus, 1,167l. 14s. 1d. has been added to the invested capital, which on the 20th of May last amounted to 8,564l. 3s. 7d. It must be remembered that the liabilities of this fund are very heavy. Each of the two members now on the superannuation fund requires the interest of a sum of 1,000l. in the payment of his allowance alone, and there are now 455 members.

The small amount of the casual fund prevents the investment of any part of it. In April, 1846, this fund amounted to 66l. 2s. 4d. which has been increased during the year by the donations of the Profession, the subscriptions of the members, and receipts from incidental sources, to 498l. 5s. 6d. In gifts, loans, and necessary disbursements, a sum of 368l. 17s. 9d. has been spent. The balance of cash in hand of this fund amounted at the last audit to 142l. 18s. 3d.

The contributions of the members alone to both funds have, during the year, amounted to 1,050l. 17s. The committee trusts that this general statement of the operations of the society will prove satisfactory to the patrons and members. Every just claim has been liquidated. No deserving applicant for assistance from the casual fund has been sent away unrelieved; and notwithstanding a year of more than ordinary pressure has occurred, a considerable sum has been added to the invested capital. To the kind support afforded by the Profession is mainly attributable the present favourable state of the society's affairs, and its ability to meet all claims in a spirit of liberality. Without a continuance of that patronage its efficiency and benevolence would be greatly diminished. The welfare of the members has now become identified with that of the Institution, and the committee hope that it will not fail to receive a renewal of that support which has so essentially contributed to its usefulness and present flourishing condition.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 15, 1846.

THE SMALL DEBTS BILL.

THIS dangerous measure is smoothly running its course through the Parliament, not merely without opposition, but with the approval of all parties. In the House of Commons are some seventy lawyers, and yet of them all not one is to be found lifting his voice in protest against a measure which will do more to degrade both the law and the lawyers than any act of legislation which the last half century has produced. Whence their silence at the moment when their active interference would be the most valuable it is difficult to conjecture. Probably it proceeds not so much from indifference to the subject as from their want of practical acquaintance with the abuses of local courts, and their entire ignorance of that which we may term the physiology of the Legal Profession,—its organization, and its functions. The Parliament lawyers are either amateur lawyers,—learned by courtesy,—barristers in name only, or successful advocates who enter it for the sole purpose of promotion, and who are too much burdened with private business to trouble themselves about public interests, beyond the giving of party votes, and, on special occasions, making a party speech. This removes the perplexity felt by everybody at the seeming anomaly of a multiplicity of lawyers in the Parliament with an entire neglect of the interests of the Profession. This has been obvious for many years, but never has it been so apparent as in the reception given to the Small Debts Bill, which has actually been applauded by the very men who ought to have led the opposition to it, not as a question of professional concern, but as one involving great public interests.

For, in truth, it is not for the advantage of the community that this Bill should pass. Bad law is even more noxious than dear law. It is not enough that the Courts should be easy of access; they are positive nuisances if they do not dispense both law and justice. Are the provisions of the impending measure such as to secure either the one or the other? Is there truth in the discovery it affects to have made that business is best conducted by the litigant parties in person? that justice is best secured by setting the clever against the stupid? that the endeavour to remove the inequality by the assistance of advocates is an antiquated absurdity? and that the notion of preserving decorum in a court, observing rules of evidence, and substituting the measured zeal of advocates for the passionate vituperation of the parties is a folly which it becomes this enlightened age to cast aside?

It is a great misfortune for the lawyers that up to this time they have been led by injudicious advisers. For years past they have been exhorted to resist all reform, instead of putting themselves forward to guide the changes which were inevitable. By the course pursued they have certainly impressed the public mind with an idea that the lawyers are, as a body, hostile to improvements in the law, and guided only by motives of self-interest. The fact is far otherwise. The Profession, as a body, are not opposed to changes in a right direction; they recognize a truth which cannot be too often and too loudly uttered, that the real interest both of the public and of the lawyers is identical. Lawyers do not live by the provisions of the law alone; they are a necessity recognised by the practice of society. There is compulsion in their employment. In the business of life, men find that they want an intelligent adviser; in quarrels they require a third party, with a head unheated by passion, to conduct their differences to a settlement; in all the great affairs of life, the lawyer is summoned to the conference, not because the law requires his presence, but because men feel the want of a second mind, whose business it shall be to think for them, and with them, and whose interest it is to consult theirs. It is essential to the welfare of the community, that these advisers of the community should be intelligent and educated men, filling a position in society which should at once guarantee capacity and honesty, and secure the confidence of those by whom they are consulted. The effect of the Small Debts Bill is to lower this important class in the estimation of the world. It must inevitably breed up a race of wretched pettifoggers, who will discredit the Profession much, but be still more noxious to society.

We are confident that if, two years since, or last year, or even at the beginning of the present session, the Profession had bestirred itself, and frankly admitting the necessity for a cheaper administration of justice in small matters, had come forward with a well-devised scheme of its own, based, as it would have been, on practical knowledge of the requirements of the public, and the best mode of meeting them, they would have been received with cordial approbation; the Government and the Parliament would have been delighted to adopt any suggestions proceeding from such a source; instead of a scheme fraught with mischief to all parties, they would now have been in possession of a practical plan that would prove a benefit to all.

But we fear that remonstrance will arrive too late. The meeting of Solicitors, reported last week, would have produced important results had it taken place when first we urged it two years since, or even when we exhorted the lawyers to action at the opening of the present session. The only guardian of the interests of the Profession, the Metropolitan and Provincial Association, was suffered to perish of inanition, wanting the needful support of those who will now severely feel the absence of such a protector. The Bill will pass, and with little modification: that is certain. The next care will be to make the best of it. We have not loaded our columns with a reprint of it, because it is continually undergoing small alterations, and when it has become law it will be necessary to present it entire. In the meanwhile the sketch of its main provisions will be sufficient to shew what is intended, and to prepare our readers for a change which we cannot but regard as most disastrous; but whatever may be the result it will be attended to us with this consolation, that we have never ceased, from the moment of its introduction until now, earnestly to protest against this Bill, nor to exhort our readers to the exertions necessary to avert the threatened mischief.

RAILWAY LITIGATION.

SINCE the last commentary on this interesting topic some decisions have been made which fully confirm the views we had ventured to submit in former papers.

The first, and most important, of these is the order reported last week as made by Chief Baron Pollock at Chambers. It will, perhaps, be remembered that on former occasions we had recommended an immediate application to stay proceedings in all actions but one, where many had been commenced against various members of a Provisional Committee for the same cause of action. Such an application has at length been made, and with the entire success we had anticipated. The order was made to stay proceedings in all save one.

The question as to the liability of Provisional Committee-men in cases where there was also a Managing Committee-men, has received further investigation, and the decision of Mr. Baron PARKE has been affirmed by Mr. Justice CRESSWELL, by Chief Justice WILDE, and by Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN. The principle has been explicitly laid down by all these able judges, that if there was a Managing Committee conducting the affairs and giving the orders without the intervention of the Provisional Committee, the credit may fairly be assumed to have been given to the former, and that the members of the latter could not be presumed to have given to the former authority to pledge their credit for debts contracted by them. Of course, whether in fact there was an intention on the part of the provisional committee-man to share the expenses, and to permit his credit to be pledged for them, is a question for the jury; but it may now be considered as settled, so far as the weight of authority goes, that the law presumes no liability from the mere fact that a man has given his consent to become a member of a provisional committee, where he has personally taken no part in the business, and there is a Managing Committee with whom the creditor's dealings were conducted. Accordingly, the defendant has obtained a verdict in almost all such cases.

This is so rational a decision, that it is surprising how the principle could have been overlooked by the judges, counsel, and juries, at the commencement of the late crusade of writs. The absurd verdicts that were at first given by juries, and sanctioned by judges, encouraged every pettifogging lawyer and rascally client to flood the land with writs, confident that, however monstrous their claims, it was enough that the defendant was a provisional Committee-man to secure a verdict. This wholesale litigation has received a wholesome check by the recent decisions, and if the attention which the LAW TIMES has devoted to the subject has been instrumental in bringing about the change, the research and thought bestowed upon the subject will not have been worthless. It is some gratification to observe that almost every proposition advanced in these papers, although hotly disputed at the moment, has been established by the subsequent decisions.

THE REPORTS.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

Feb. 7 and 20.

(Present, LORD BROUGHAM, MR. BARON PARKER, SIR H. JENNER FUAT, and the Right Hon. T. PEMBERTON LEIGH.)

BARNES v. VINCENT.

Jurisdiction.

The Prerogative Court is bound to admit to probate a will disputed upon the ground that the execution had not followed the power, and to leave the question of the execution to be dealt with by the Court which might have to deal with the property passed under the will.

LORD BROUGHAM gave judgment in this case.—His lordship said this was the case of a will made by a married woman, but professed to be under a power in her marriage settlement, and the execution being alleged to be defective (inasmuch as the power required the will to be not only signed, but published by her, in the presence of witnesses, and the attestation did not set forth the publication), the question was raised below whether or not this execution sufficiently followed the power? Before allowing this question to be argued, their lordships directed that counsel should confine themselves to the preliminary question, whether, supposing no other objection to the will had existed, except that raised on the execution of the power, the Prerogative Court ought not to have admitted it to probate, and left the question of the execution to be dealt with by the Court which might have to deal with the property passed under the will. The question was one of great importance, and it was not unconnected with difficulty, arising chiefly from the practice which had for a considerable length of time prevailed in the ecclesiastical courts. Those courts had been accustomed of later times to deal with the question of the due execution of the power before admitting to probate, and they had, according to their judgment on that question, granted a probate or refused it. It was obvious that nothing could be more unsatisfactory than the state in which such a course left the law. If probate were granted, the grant did not bind the courts which had to deal with the property; such courts might still reject the instrument altogether, upon the ground of the power not authorizing the act, or although authorizing it, yet the power having been insufficiently pursued in the execution. The sentence, therefore, of the Court of Probate was not conclusive, and nothing could be more unfortunate than that the sentence of that Court granting probate being inconclusive, the sentence refusing probate should be held conclusive; and yet that must be the inevitable consequence of that Court entertaining the question respecting the power, because, if probate be refused, the Courts of equity never could know any thing of the will at all. His lordship then went on to discuss the various principles and considerations applicable to the case, as well as the authorities bearing upon it, and stated that their lordships had come to the conclusion that the Court of Probate had not jurisdiction to deal with the question of the due execution of the power, but only to say whether, if the testatrix had the power, her paper was testamentary. In this decision Lord Cottenham and Lord Campbell, who heard the argument, concurred, and also the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, who had been consulted upon the point. His lordship concluded by saying, that in now deciding this question, it was naturally a satisfaction that their determination tended to narrow, and not to extend the range of cases in which a conflict arose between different jurisdictions dealing with the same subject-matter. It was no sufficient reason for deciding against any known principle, or any current of consistent authority, that they might thereby be enabled to establish a more exact harmony between different Courts or systems of jurisprudence; but where matters hung evenly balanced, and still more where both sound principle and the better practice authorized their determination, they could not avoid feeling that it was highly desirable to place the law as administered by the different tribunals touching the same subject-matter in a state of uniformity and consistency.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

July 15 and 22.

DIETRICHSEN v. CABBURN.

Demurrer—Positive and negative agreements—Mutuality—Specific performance—Injunction.

Where an agreement is so infirm that the Court can decree no substantial performance of it, there the parties will be left to their legal remedies. But where there is a clear negative agreement on the one side the Court will not refrain from enforcing that agreement by injunction, because there may be some positive stipulations which the Court cannot enforce against the plaintiff.

There is a different rule with respect to injunctions from that upon which the Court acts with respect to specific performance. Injunction will be granted in cases where there can be no specific performance.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England allowing a demurrer to the plaintiff's bill for want of equity. The defendant was the proprietor of a medicine called "Cabburn's Antidolorific Oil," used for the cure of gout and rheumatism, and the plaintiff was the proprietor of a cheap almanack of very great circulation, which therefore furnished a convenient medium for extensively advertising the medicine. An agreement was made between the parties, by which the plaintiff was to become wholesale agent for the sale of the defendant's medicine, which the plaintiff was to purchase at a discount of 40 per cent. from the selling price. The defendant on his part agreed not to sell or supply the medicine wholesale to any other person than the plaintiff at a greater discount than 25 per cent. The plaintiff was to pay the defendant every three months, and the agreement was to be continued for 21 years from its date. The bill set forth the agreement, charged that the defendant was in the constant habit of committing breaches of it by selling his medicine to various persons at greater discount than 25 per cent. and prayed that the defendant might account to the plaintiff for all the sums he had received from persons to whom he had sold medicine at a greater discount than 25 per cent. on such sales, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from further sales at any greater rate of discount than 25 per cent. The Vice-Chancellor had allowed the demurrer, on the ground that where an agreement contains positive stipulations on the one side, and negative stipulations on the other, the Court won't enforce the negative if it cannot likewise enforce the positive part of the agreement. Here, the Court could not enforce the positive stipulations into which the plaintiff had entered, and it would not therefore enforce the negative part of the agreement against the defendant. From that decision the plaintiff appealed.

James Parker and Glasse, in support of the appeal, contended that this doctrine was founded on no sound principle of equity, and that it rested on no authority except the cases of Kemble v. Kean, 6 Sim. 333, and Kimberley v. Jennings, 6 Sim. 340.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It is not an agreement for selling at all, but for employing the plaintiff as agent; the defendant is not to employ any other agent at more discount than 25 per cent. As you have read the allegation it would leave it open to the defendant to sell.

Parker.—The agreement is, that he will not supply or sell wholesale to any person at a greater discount than 25 per cent.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—How can you limit the use to which purchasers will apply it? Might not any person come into his shop and buy the medicine with the intention of selling it again?

Parker.—Not at a greater discount than 40 per cent. The injunction asked by the bill was to restrain the defendant from supplying or selling wholesale to any person at a greater discount than 40 per cent. The Vice-Chancellor, in Kemble v. Kean, said, "There is no method of arriving at that which is the substance of the contract between the parties, by means of any process which this Court is enabled to issue; and therefore (unless there is some positive authority to the contrary), my opinion is that, where the agreement is mainly and substantially of an active nature, and is so undetermined, that it is impossible to have performance of it in this Court, and it is only guarded by a negative provision, this Court will leave the parties altogether to a court of law, and will not give partial relief by enforcing only a negative stipulation. I think that was what Lord Eldon said in the case of Morris v. Colman, which bears upon this." And Lord Eldon, in Clarke v. Price, had said that Morris v. Colman, turned upon the partnership articles, and upon its being a case of partnership. The Vice-Chancellor had since followed the same course in other cases, but it had not been adopted by any other judge of this Court; that it was very important to the jurisdiction of this Court, that a doctrine so narrow should not prevail, as it would greatly limit the power of the Court in granting injunctions, and the principle would extend to cases not at all contemplated. For instance, the restrictive covenants in farm leases were constantly enforced by injunction. So in the case of a mill, where all the tenants of a certain district were bound to carry their corn to be ground at that mill. There the law implies a duty to keep the mill in a proper state to grind all the corn brought. The defendant, in all these cases, may have a defence that the plaintiff has not performed his part. This principle has been affirmed in several cases. Thus, in Morris v. Colman, 18 Ves. 438, the bill prayed an injunction to restrain Mr. Colman from writing dramatic pieces for any other theatre than the Haymarket; and Lord Eldon said, "I cannot perceive any violation of public policy in this provision. The case of trade, to which it has been referred, is perfectly distinct. If Mr. Garrick was now living, would it be unreasonable that he should contract with Mr. Colman to perform only at the Haymarket Theatre, and Mr. Colman with him to write for that theatre alone? Why should they not thus engage for the talents of each other?" The Vice-Chancellor had referred to Clark v. Price, but Lord Eldon had said there that there were no negative terms, and put it expressly upon this, that if the contract was one which the Court would not carry into execution, the Court could not indirectly enforce it by restraining the defendant from doing some other act.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—You say that is not an authority for the position that the Court will not interfere to enforce the negative, because it cannot enforce the positive?

Parker.—Yes. That is supported by Rankin v. Hankisson, 4 Sim. 13; Williams v. Williams, 2 Swanst. 253; Barnett v. Thacker, 5 Ves. 555.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There is also the case of the British Museum (The Duke of Bedford v. Trustees of British Museum, 2 Myl. & K. 554), and that of the Statute in Cockspur-street (Squire v. Campbell, 1 Myl. & Cr. 459).

Glasse.—The defendant is now seeking to escape from his agreement. It is not merely one of agency, but for the actual sale of the medicines, of which an account is to be rendered every three months. The whole of the law sought to be sustained depends on the Vice-Chancellor's own decision in Kemble v. Kean.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The ground it is put upon is, that the defendant could not compel the plaintiff to perform the agreement; that it was not mutual in that respect.

Glasse.—Here there is a clear contract not to do a certain act. (Ball v. Coggs, 1 Brown, P. C. 140.)

Walker and Bacon for the defendant, in support of the demurrer.—The bill asks for injunction; and an account of all oil sold at greater discount than 25 per cent.; also an account of all profit made by the defendant by violation of his agreement, and that the damages may be assessed. They cited and referred to Scott v. Macintosh, 1 Ves. & Bea. 503; Clarke v. Price, 2 J. Wilson's C. C. 157; Baldwin v. Useful Knowledge Society, 9 Sim. 393; Morris v. Colman (supra); Hills v. Croll, 9 Jurist, and 1 Ver. R. Prop. Rep. 541, where Lord Lyndhurst affirmed the principle of Kemble v. Kean; Gervoise v. Edwards, 2 Drur. & Warr. 80.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Do you contend that injunction is only co-extensive with specific performance? The rule with regard to injunctions is very different from the rule with regard to specific performance, though very generally confounded.

Walker.—Rankin v. Hankisson.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The tenants of the houses at the bottom of the Haymarket complained that the statue erected in the open space in Cockspur-street was a violation of the implied terms of their leases. So the case of the British Museum came before me, and I thought no case was made out. Both cases turned on the fact that there was no injury, but they came here on an implied contract, and there is no doubt that is an equity. There are cases in which the Court will interfere against one party by injunction without giving any relief to the other. If you can distinguish this case, do."

Walker.—What is asked for in this bill is solely matter for the consideration of a jury. Farming leases proceed on different grounds. (Smith v. Fromont, 2 Swanst. 330; Barrett v. Blagrove, 5 Ves. 555 and 6 Ves. 104.) There is no obligation on the plaintiff to order the medicine, and by abstaining from taking it he might stop the defendant's business altogether.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—He may sell any quantity, but not for the purpose of re-sale.

Bacon.—The defendant has no means of enforcing the terms of the agreement, and consequently there is no mutuality.

Parker, in reply.—Hills v. Croll was a very complicated agreement, extending over a number of years, and the bill was for specific performance.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Was the discussion on the motion for an injunction?

Parker.—Yes. The whole question of specific performance was before the Court. Geroise v. Edwards was for specific performance, and an indemnity against future acts, and no injunction was sought; a bill for injunction is often sustained without an account in cases like the present, which is analogous to a partnership. An examination of the authorities proves this doctrine to rest solely on the decisions of the Vice-Chancellor of England.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case raises an important point, and I will look at the authorities.

JUDGMENT.

Wednesday, July 22.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The plaintiff was only constituted the agent of the defendant, while, on the other hand, the defendant bound himself not only to employ the plaintiff, but to supply no other person with the patented medicine at a discount greater than 25 per cent. The bill alleges a due performance on the part of the plaintiff of his part of the agreement, and then states the violation of the agreement by the plaintiff in supplying other persons with the medicine at greater discount than that stipulated, and prays for an injunction and an account. The question is, whether the bill has stated a case which comes within the jurisdiction of this Court. Now, it has been stated at the bar that the Vice-Chancellor of England has expressly decided that this Court will not interfere by injunction to enforce the negative terms of an agreement where the positive terms of it could not be enforced. I cannot help thinking that the learned judge has been misunderstood, and that he only meant to say that the Court could not interpose where no part of the positive agreement could be performed, and not where the whole could not be enforced, which was the case of Kimberley v. Jennings, and to that proposition I subscribe. The rule respecting injunctions in this Court cannot be confined to cases where there is a positive agreement not enforced against the plaintiff. If there is such infirmity in the agreement that the Court cannot perform the whole, it may decline to interfere. But where there is a consideration paid for a negative agreement, or an agreement prohibiting certain acts, the Court will interfere by injunction. Thus, in the case of tenants, and many others, there was nothing to be done by the plaintiffs. In none of such cases was any equity administered against the plaintiff. So in suits to enforce legal rights, such as patents, copyrights, &c. With respect to the question of mutuality, the law has been clearly settled by Lord Eldon, in the cases of Morris v. Colman and Clark v. Price; for though it had been stated that Morris v. Colman proceeded upon the ground of a subsisting partnership, I cannot find such to have been the reason from the report. In Barret v. Blagrove, though the injunction was afterwards dissolved on the ground of acquiescence, I do not find any objection of want of mutuality was taken. It is clear that the Court will interfere in cases of partnership, which is an additional instance. Looking, therefore, at the whole range of cases respecting negative agreements, and seeing that the plaintiff is entitled to relief, there is no foundation for the reasoning that the Court will not interfere, as the plaintiff has stated by his bill, in a case which calls for the interposition of the Court. The agreement being distinct, and the defendant having violated it, I think that the plaintiff is entitled to the injunction asked by his bill, and that the demurrer must be overruled.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Saturday, July 4.

GILBERT v. COOPER.

Railway litigation—Breach of contract—Amalgamation of one line with another.

The directors of one projected railway company have no right, without the concurrence of the subscribers, to amalgamate themselves with another, notwithstanding there may be no mala fides in the arrangement, and from circumstances it would appear to the mutual benefit of both companies.

The provisional committee of directors for the time being of the South and Midland Junction Railway Company, under the parliamentary contract for that purpose, were to have "full power and authority to fix upon, and from time to time to alter and vary the points or places at which the said intended railway should commence and terminate, and the intermediate course, route, or line thereof," &c. Under the subscription contract of the same date, the provisional committee of directors were to have "ample power to carry all or any parts of the undertaking, as described in the said parliamentary contract, into effect; and for that purpose to cause such surveys and estimates, and also to make such contracts and arrangements with railway and canal proprietors, landowners, and other persons, and generally to adopt all such measures as any such board or meeting of the provisional committee or directors as aforesaid might in their judgment think necessary or expedient, and particularly to apply to Parliament for an Act for the establishment and promotion of the said undertaking, with such arrangements and provisions as they might think expedient. That the said provisional committee of management or directors should have full power to apply all or any part of the moneys which should have been paid by way of deposit in payment of all salaries, and in making deposits, as might be necessary, for the purpose of complying with the standing orders of Parliament, in such manner as they might think proper. That the said provisional committee of management, or directors, should have full power to make all such contracts and arrangements with railway and canal proprietors, landowners, and other persons, as they should think proper, concerning or relating to the said undertaking.

The printed prospectus stated that the proposed line of rail was to originate at Bicester, by a junction, by joining the Oxford and Cambridge line, and passing many principal towns, such as Bristol, Bath, and Cheltenham, Devizes, Marlborough, Andover, Salisbury, &c. and to be carried as far as Southampton and Poole.

The directors of the South and Midland Junction Railway were unable, on or before the 30th Nov. 1845, to deposit their plans, according to the standing orders of Parliament, and therefore the committee of management of the South and Midland Company made arrangements to amalgamate themselves with another company, called the "Manchester and Southampton Company." This fact was made known to the allottees of shares towards the end of January 1846, by means of printed circulars. This company was formed for the purpose of making a railway from Swindon to Southampton, with a branch line from Ludgershall to Poole, and entered into the necessary measures for that purpose. Afterwards the directors of the Manchester and Southampton Company gave notice of their intention of applying to Parliament for two bills; one from Swindon to Southampton, the other from Ludgershall to Poole.

At a meeting, held on the 23rd of May last, of the scripholders of the "Southern and Midland Junction Railway," the directors admitted that they had, without any authority from the shareholders, taken upon themselves to enter into some agreement with the Manchester and Southampton Company, the effect of which would be to bind the South and Midland Junction shareholders to become partners therein. And, moreover, in consideration of such shareholders being entitled to a number of shares to the extent of 300,000l. in the Manchester and Southampton and Manchester and Poole Companies, they the said directors, with a view to the benefit of the last-mentioned companies, and in order to enable the latter company to apply to Parliament for an Act of Incorporation, paid into court the sum of 55,000l. in the names of three of the directors of the South and Midland Counties, and two of the Ludgershall and Poole directors. It was also agreed that the sum of 8,000l. should be paid to the Manchester and Southampton Company for expenses incurred in promoting and preparing the Ludgershall and Poole line, which sum was to form an item to the credit of the South and Midland Company.

The plaintiff, a subscriber for eighty shares, and many of the shareholders, were present at the said meeting on the 23rd May, and expressed their disapprobation at what they considered to be a misappropriation of the deposit fund, and threatened to institute proceedings against the directors of the South and Midland Counties for a fraud upon the House of Commons. The bill was in consequence withdrawn on the 25th of May.

On the 17th of June an order was obtained upon a petition presented by three of the defendants, James Walkinshaw, Henry Tootal, and Leonard Morse Cooper (the two former only being directors of the Ludgershall and Poole line), for the payment out of Court to them of the said sum of 55,000l. with the privilege and sanction as it was alleged, of the directors of the South and Midland Junction Railway. Under these circumstances the plaintiff filed his bill on behalf of himself and all other the shareholders in the South and Midland Junction Railway Company, praying that the directors of the said company might be restrained from receiving or possessing themselves of the said sum of 55,000l. and that the said J. Walkinshaw, H. Tootal, and L. M. Cooper might be restrained from prosecuting the said order for payment of the said sum of 55,000l. and that the said three last-named defendants, with the two other defendants (in whose names the said fund was standing) might be restrained, either alone or in conjunction with any other persons, from proceeding to obtain payment of the said sum of 55,000l.; and that an account might be taken, and the funds of the company applied in satisfaction of their debts and liabilities, and for distributing the whole of the property among the shareholders rateably, and that the directors might pay the costs. The motion for the injunction was met by the joint affidavit of a Mr. G. N. Wright, the secretary, and W. B. James, the solicitor to the South and Midland Junction Company, stating, among other things, that the petition referred to by the plaintiff was to have the 55,000l. paid out of court for the purposes of the South and Midland Company. That in consequence of a breach of contract on the part of their engineer, they were unable to deposit their plans by the 30th of November, 1845, as required by Parliament. The directors of the South and Midland Company immediately directed their attention to some other company, to ascertain whether they could not, by some arrangement or amalgamation with such other company, effectually answer the objects of their own, and obtain with such other company an interest similar to that possessed by the South and Midland Railway Company. That the Manchester and Southampton Company was formed, of the highest credit and respectability, the shares of which were at a high premium. That the said last-mentioned company had changed the plan of their original scheme, and resolved to apply for two separate Acts of Parliament; one for the construction of the line from Swindon to Southampton, and the other for a branch from Ludgershall to Poole, the reasons for such alteration being lest they might not succeed in obtaining an Act for the whole scheme; and in order to prevent a failure in the principal scheme, the plans and sections of the Ludgershall and Poole line having already been deposited and approved of by Parliament; and as to the said plans and sections, it was also agreed that the sum of 8,000l. should be advanced to the said Manchester and Southampton Company, on account of the expenses incurred in promoting and preparing the Ludgershall and Poole line.

Bethell and Wickens, in support of the motion, contended that the misapplication of the funds of the company by the directors, without the sanction of the shareholders, amounted to such a breach of trust as would induce the Court to refuse the payment of the residue to them.

Stuart and Terrell opposed the motion, and contended that the powers entrusted to the Directors were sufficiently extensive to enable them to make such arrangements with other companies as they thought fit, and their right to amalgamate was virtually given them by the subscription contract. The directors were bound to get a bill in the present sessions of Parliament if possible; but that, through the bad faith of their engineer they were prevented from so doing, and adopted another line in a greater degree of advancement; and unless a case of fraud be made out, the Court will not interfere with the legal rights of parties. They contended, moreover, that the plaintiff was estopped by acquiescence, he having knowledge of the intended departure from the original intention in January of the present year, but did not signify his dissent until the month of May following.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Now the question really is, as it appears to me, whether substantially what these managers of the South and Midland Company did was authorized by the subscribers' agreement. I do not want to go through every word of it, because it has been so often discussed; but it is perfectly true, that these gentlemen, who were so named to manage, were authorized in general terms to carry on all or any part or parts of the undertaking, as described in the Parliamentary contract, into effect; and for that purpose to cause surveys to be made, and so on preliminary matters; and generally to adopt all such measures whatsoever as any such board or meeting of the said provisional committee, or directors as aforesaid, or any committee of committees of management to be constituted or appointed in manner hereinafter mentioned, may in their judgment think necessary or expedient, or may be advised to adopt, and particularly to apply for, and seek to obtain, as early as may be, an Act or Acts of Parliament for the establishment and promotion of the same undertaking." Then the second proviso directed that the majority of members at any board or meeting should bind the rest; and then it was directed that the provisional committee should have power from time to time to add to their number from the subscribers, and so on; and then there is a general power given to them to suspend and remove officers; and then, by the 6th clause, it was provided that the provisional committee shall have full power to make all such contracts and arrangements with railway and canal proprietors, land owners and other persons, as they shall think proper, concerning or relating to the said undertaking." Then that they shall have power to make by-laws, that is the 7th clause; and that they shall have power to invest such deposits as they may think fit in government or real securities. Now, it appears to me to be perfectly plain on this subscribers' contract, that it never was the intention of the parties who gave authority to this provisional committee that they should have power to take any such steps, as that, when taken, the original proprietors themselves of the South and Midland Company should no longer have in their own hands the dominion over the plan. In other words, it does appear to me that there was no power given here to these directors to surrender their power to any persons to take away the individuality of character which the South and Midland projectors of the scheme originally had, and to make them, as they might have been made in the progress of amalgamation sanctioned by Act of Parliament, altogether a distinct thing from what they originally contracted to be. They were to be a set of persons supplying themselves the capital necessary for the carrying into execution proposed purpose. They were to have the dominion over their own funds and over their own governors; and it does appear to me that, unless some express words can be found of larger import than any that I can see in this subscribers' agreement, the gentlemen who were entrusted with the provisional management had no power to do what they projected to do. Now, it is perfectly true that when an application is made to this Court for its interference in the transit of large sums of money in which several persons are interested, that a great deal of inconvenience may be produced by the interference of the Court, and I admit that there is great weight in Mr. Terrell's observations on that part of the case; but then it is to be considered, on the other hand, whether, if gentlemen contract to form themselves into a society to be governed by themselves, they are to be transferred, by a sort of Oriental despotism exercised by the provisional directors, into a company, a set of beings, I should rather say, of a totally different character. They contracted to be individuals, and spontaneously formed to govern themselves and their own affairs. The scheme which was aimed at by the directors was and I dare say very laudably. I am not speaking at all in any terms that can give the slightest offence to any human being; but mistaking their powers, meaning to act for the best, but, in my opinion, judging erroneously, they proceeded to destroy the original character, rights, and powers of the original proprietors of the South and Midland Company. My opinion is, that this Court ought not to allow such a thing, and I do not myself conceive that the party has applied too late. As long as the £5,000. was in Court, there it was safe; when an application is made to have it come out, then is the time to apply, and then the bill is filed. It appears, that in pursuance of the circular of the 19th of January, the meeting was held on the 23rd, and there was ample protest and a declaration that this gentleman, who is the plaintiff now, would file a bill, and so on; and I wished to see the order, that I might know, in the first place, what time the money was actually paid in, and what was the day of the date of this application to have it out. I suppose that was a few days ago. [Mr. Stuart.—The 17th of June, and the plaintiff has not thought it important to state when it was paid in, but I believe it was February.] I did not know those facts, and therefore I asked for the order, that I might be supplied with the information; but I cannot but myself think that this meeting having taken place on the 23rd of May, that the bill was filed quite in time for the purpose of intercepting the transit of the money back again, apparently on the face of the order, into the hands of the gentlemen who were never authorised by the projectors of the South and Midland Company to receive any part of their assets whatever. I dare say it is all perfectly right, and it was understood in the way of honourable proceeding, that those two gentlemen, the foreigners, Messrs. Walkinshaw and Tootal, will put the money in the possession of Mr. Cooper and those two other gentlemen, who were the three persons, provisional directors of the South and Midland Company, who joined in paying in the money; and I observe by the terms of the Act of Parliament, that the money can only be had out in a given form; that the parties who paid it in, or a majority of them, may apply to have it out, and the direction is, that it shall be paid to the parties applying, or those whom they may appoint. Well now then with respect to the payment of the £8,000. I take it as it stands, exactly on the joint affidavit of Messrs. James and Wright. There are two passages which relate to it: they first of all state, at folio 12, "It was also agreed that the sum of £8,000. should be advanced to the Manchester and Southampton Company, on account of the expenses incurred in promoting and preparing the Ludgershall and Poole line, in which the said South and Midland Company was about to acquire so large an interest, and which payment was to form an item to the credit of the South and Midland Company in the final adjustment of accounts between the two companies." Now, it appears to me that that agreement, simply as an agreement by trustees to pay their cestui que trusts money, not for a definite demand, but so as to make it form an item of accounts, was not the proper mode of dealing with the money of cestui que trusts. And then there is this further thing to be observed, that what was stated in folio 15 is, as it appears to me, something rather different from what is stated in folio 12, because it is stated "that in consequence of such disapproval the said Manchester and Southampton Company, on the demand of the South and Midland Company, have consented to return to the directors of the said last-mentioned company the said sum of £5,000. and that the petition in the said plaintiff's bill mentioned for payment out of court of the said sum of £5,000. was for the purpose of effecting such return." I merely read that, because it forms part of the next sentence, "And they further say that the said sum of £8,000. so advanced to said Manchester and Southampton Company, for such plans, sections and expenses, is claimed by the defendants as directors of the South and Midland Company; but such claim is to some extent resisted, and the rights and liabilities of parties to the said sum of £8,000. have been made the subject of a reference to counsel." You will observe, that in the first instance it is stated that it was agreed that it should be advanced on account of the expenses incurred in promoting and preparing the Ludgershall and Poole, otherwise Manchester and Poole, line; and now it says that the sum of £8,000. so advanced to the Manchester and Southampton Company for such plans and sections and expenses is claimed by the defendants, so that it is left in this affidavit rather vaguely stated in respect of what the payment actually was. But I cannot myself think that it was a right thing to advance a solid sum, with a feeling that the whole was not due, on the speculation that the amount which was really due was to be settled in a future account. Now that does not appear to me to be a very wise or prudent mode of proceeding. If, indeed, it was the result of the agreements, why then the making of the agreement is one of the very things complained of, because it becomes a question, as I said before, whether it was a thing authorised by the subscribers' contract. Now Mr. Stuart particularly noticed that section in the subscribers' contract which related to making agreements with railway companies and other proprietors [Stuart.—Railway proprietors, or any persons]. Making all such contracts and arrangements with railway or canal proprietors, land owners, or any other persons. Now really, I should have thought that would have applied to this case. If, for instance, the Manchester and Poole people have constructed a portion of the projected line, and they had power to sell, and were willing to sell, it would have been quite within the purview of this sixth article of the subscribers' contract that the directors of the South and Midland Company should have entered into a contract to purchase it; that I can understand; but it is quite a different thing when no line was completed; but for the purpose of having some line completed not belonging to anybody, the directors of the South and Midland Company make a contract, by means of which they actually disable their own company from acting by itself. Now, I cannot but myself think that I am not at liberty, at present, to dissolve the injunction, but this thing has occurred to me—[Stuart.—It is for an injunction. Bethell.—A mere temporary order.] You move for an injunction? [Bethell.—Yes, Sir.] What I was going to say is this, that the mode of getting the money out is particularly described by the Act of Parliament, and it strikes me that if there was to be merely a stop upon the execution of the order, there may, for aught I know, arise some such circumstance as may prevent the money from ever being got out, unless a new Act of Parliament is passed; as, for instance, supposing three of the five should die. Therefore, it rather appears to me that, if the parties agree to it, the proper order will be this, not to grant an injunction, but to let the money be paid to the three, on their undertaking forthwith to pay it into court. I only throw it out for the consideration of the parties; if they will not do that, I must grant the injunction simpliciter. [Stuart.—We cannot agree to that; we think it would be a breach of trust; we cannot agree to it.] Then I must grant the injunction.

Motion allowed.

ROLLS COURT.

March 20 and 21, and April 20.

NELSON v. DUNCOMBE, AND DUNCOMBE v. NELSON.

Practice—Trustee and cestui que trust—Implied contract—Unsoundness of mind—Account—Allowance for maintenance, &c.

If a trustee be sued for an account in the Court of Chancery, and it shall appear that he had properly expended sums of money for the protection and safety, or for the maintenance, of his cestui que trust, at a time when the cestui que trust was incapable of taking care of himself, the Court will allow him credit for such sums of money, on his shewing, first, that his cestui que trust was incapable of taking care of himself; and, secondly, that he has properly expended the money.

In cases of persons actually found lunatic by inquisition, there is an implied contract for the payment of moneys expended for the protection and maintenance of such persons; and, semble, a contract might, if necessary, be implied for supporting a person who has been provided with such protection as the legislature has secured, in the absence of any finding by inquisition.

A B, a person of unsound mind, but not so found, was committed to prison for a violent assault, and upon the medical certificates required by law, and with the authority of the committing magistrate, C D, the trustee of A B's property, had him removed to a lunatic asylum, where he remained five years, and afterwards escaped. A B then filed a bill against C D for an account of his property, and a commission of lunacy was issued, whereby he was declared to be of sound mind. C D was held entitled to have a reference to the Master to inquire what sums of money were properly expended for the protection and support of A B in the lunatic asylum, and under what circumstances the commission of lunacy was sued out, and whether any and what agreement relating to the costs thereof was entered into between A B and C D, or their respective solicitors.

This was a case in which Thomas H. Duncombe, the defendant, had interfered for the protection of John Nelson, the plaintiff, a person alleged to be then and previously a person of unsound mind. Mr. Duncombe was a trustee of property for Mr. Nelson under his mother's will, and Mr. Nelson being imprisoned for a violent attack on a medical gentleman, Mr. Duncombe, upon the medical certificates and with the authority of the committing magistrate, had him placed in a lunatic asylum, and supported him there for five years, when he escaped. He then filed his bill for an account, and a commission of lunacy being issued, he was found to be of sound mind, and he then objected to allow Mr. Duncombe the sums expended for his maintenance in the lunatic asylum, or the costs of the commission, and Mr. Duncombe filed a cross bill. The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment.

Kindersley (with him Bates), for the plaintiff, Nelson, contended that Duncombe was not entitled to any thing, on the ground that he was paying not for the support but the coercion and imprisonment of the plaintiff, who, though he had a slight tendency to unsoundness of mind, was, nevertheless, declared sane by the commissioners. Duncombe ought to have got the commission issued at first. But even if he was entitled, he ought not to have filed the cross bill, as he could have claimed equally under the original bill.

Turner (with him Taylor), for Duncombe, insisted that maintenance of persons of unsound mind would be allowed. Williams v. Wentworth, 5 Beav. 325; Wentworth v. Tubb, 1 Y. & C. C. 171; Sherwood v. Sanderson, 19 Ves. 280. As to filing the cross bill, the facts of Mr. Duncombe's case could not be put properly in issue without doing so.

Kindersley, in reply.

JUDGMENT.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—Mr. Nelson, the plaintiff, in the first of these two causes, is the son and residuary legatee of Elizabeth Nelson, deceased; Mr. Duncombe, the defendant in the first cause, and the plaintiff in the second cause, is her legal personal representative. Mr. Nelson filed his bill for the common account, and for payment of the residue of his mother's estate. The will of Mrs. Nelson was dated the 9th day of December, 1833, and she thereby appointed her son sole executor. She made a codicil, dated the 21st of February, 1834, and thereby appointed Mr. Duncombe an executor of her will, jointly with Mr. Nelson, the son; and she died on the 2nd day of the following month of June. The will and codicil were soon afterwards proved by Mr. Duncombe alone, power being reserved to the plaintiff to prove them afterwards, which, however, he has never done. Mr. Duncombe possessed and administered the estate, and he is bound and willing to account for it; but he claims to be entitled to credit in account for expenses which (as he alleges) he has properly incurred, for protecting and supporting the plaintiff, whilst of unsound mind, and of suing out and prosecuting a commission de lunatico inquirendo concerning him. The material facts to be considered with reference to this claim, which give rise to the only question in the cause, appear to be as follows:—Mr. Nelson, in the lifetime of his mother, had been considered to be of unsound mind; and upon the usual medical certificates, which were signed by Mr. Glendinning and Mr. Cohen, he was, in March, 1833, at his mother's request, placed in a lunatic asylum.

After being kept there for about three months he was removed. By the fact of his removal, and by his mother having appointed him first of all executor, and, subsequently, joint executor, with Mr. Duncombe, of her will, it must, I think, be presumed that she considered him to have recovered, and to have become of sound mind. After the mother's death, and in 1835, the defendant, Mr. Duncombe, offered to account and settle with Mr. Nelson, and by that offer he must, I think, be presumed to have considered Mr. Nelson to have been then of sound mind. Mr. Nelson took no notice of the offer to account, and he seems to have refused to hold any communication whatever with Mr. Duncombe, who, nevertheless, had in his hands or power very considerable sums of money, which belonged to the estate of the testatrix, and of which Mr. Duncombe was then trustee for Mr. Nelson.

In this state of things, and in August 1839, Mr. Nelson was taken before a magistrate on a charge of having threatened to kill or do some bodily harm to a medical gentleman who had attended his mother in her last illness, and who appears to bear the same name as one of the medical persons on whose certificate Mr. Nelson had been placed in a lunatic asylum in his mother's lifetime. On this charge the magistrate required Mr. Nelson to find sureties to keep the peace, and, on his failing to procure such sureties, Mr. Nelson was committed to prison. Under these circumstances Mr. Duncombe was applied to, as the executor of Mrs. Nelson's will, and as Mr. Nelson's trustee in possession of his property to a considerable amount; he was informed of Mr. Nelson's imprisonment on a charge of threatened violence. It was suggested to him that a recurrence of Mr. Nelson's former malady had taken place; that he was not right; but that, for the sake of himself and others, he required protection and proper restraint. Mr. Nelson was without any relation, and, so far as appears, without any friend in the world. If the facts and the suggestions communicated to Mr. Duncombe were true and were well founded, it could hardly be doubted that Mr. Duncombe had at least a moral duty imposed upon him to inquire into the matter, and, if necessary, to adopt such means as were proper for Mr. Nelson's protection and support. Sad, indeed, would be the condition of men, if, under circumstances so painful, there did not rest in the law a duty to interfere. If Mr. Nelson had been a poor man, without resources, it would have been the duty of those who were near him to obtain from the law such protection and restraint as the law affords in such cases, and to obtain his release from the restraint to which he was subjected as an offender against the law; and it cannot, I think, be doubted that Mr. Duncombe had in his hands money properly belonging to Mr. Nelson, out of which Mr. Nelson might be protected and maintained, and he could not, consistently with his duty, remain a passive observer of Mr. Nelson's imprisonment for want of sureties; and Mr. Duncombe thought—in my opinion, rightly—that it was his duty to interfere. Whether he interfered in a proper manner, and did all and no more than ought to have been done under circumstances so difficult, may be questioned; but I must consider that it was right for him to interfere. He procured medical advice, and applied to the magistrate by whom Mr. Nelson had been committed; and upon the medical certificates required by law, and with the authority of the magistrate, Mr. Duncombe procured Mr. Nelson to be removed from the prison in which he was confined, to the lunatic asylum in which he had been formerly placed by his mother. To the restraint, to the regulations, and the means intended for protection which the law provides in such cases, Mr. Nelson was subjected for upwards of five years. In September 1844, he escaped (as it is said), upon a ground of convalescence which he exercised. He soon afterwards consulted the solicitors by whom this suit was prosecuted on his behalf, and they obtained medical opinions on the state of his mind, and they state, in their letter to Mr. Duncombe of the 12th December, that the medical opinions, though decisive of the existence of a mild form of insanity, shew that it would be improper again to place him in a lunatic asylum, and they afterwards expressed themselves as follows:—

"We made you acquainted with these circumstances, because you had been, as we had been informed, a friend of Mr. Nelson's late mother, that you are her executor, and hold, in that character, a considerable sum of money in trust for Mr. Nelson. We concluded that he, not having (as far as we can ascertain) any relations, you would be the most likely person to take an interest in him, and the most proper person to petition for a commission of lunacy, which seems to us the only course to be pursued."

Some subsequent correspondence took place between Messrs. Crosby and Compton, and Mr. Faithful, Mr. Duncombe's solicitor. Messrs. Crosby and Compton suggested, under the advice of counsel, that Mr. Duncombe ought not to hesitate about presenting a petition for a commission of lunacy; and if he declined to do so, they should call upon him to render an account, and pay over the money. To this Mr. Faithful answered, that Mr. Duncombe was ready to account to the party who could give him a proper discharge, but he could not require Mr. Duncombe to apply for a commission of lunacy; and on the 11th of the following month of November, Mr. Nelson's bill was filed. It is material to consider the medical opinions mentioned in the letter of Messrs. Crosby and Compton. The first is the certificate of Dr. Cohen, and it is dated the 27th day of September, 1844, and is in the following words:—"I hereby certify that I this day visited Mr. John Nelson, and consider him, after careful examination, to be of unsound mind. He is harmless at present, although, from his own account, I should conclude that at a previous period he had been extremely violent. It is therefore necessary, to guard against any paroxysm to which he may be liable, to subject him to an effective and kind control; and, as his illusions are, to a very great extent, mixed up with lunatic asylums, it would not, in my opinion, be giving him a fair chance of recovery, were he re-committed to one. I would therefore recommend, that he should be placed under such subjection, as, while it will permit him his liberty, as far as is consistent with his state, and tend to free his mind from illusions under which he labours, will at the same time be ready to control any sudden excitement which may arise."

The next is the opinion of Dr. Glendinning, which is expressed as follows:—"I certify that, by desire of Messrs. Crosby and Compton, I yesterday visited Mr. John Nelson, and that I found him in possession of good physical health, and in a perfectly tranquil state of mind. But that a protracted interview and long conversation with him have convinced me that he labours under illusions characteristic of a mild form of mental disease, involving no immediate danger to himself or others, but requiring an habitual yet unobtrusive and gentle domestic care, with professional superintendence, in order that he may have a fair chance and reasonable expectation of being some future day capable of permanently enjoying his liberty, without risk or inconvenience to himself or others."

The result of those certificates seems to be, that Mr. Nelson, at the time when he was visited by those medical gentlemen, was deemed to be of unsound mind, but convalescent, and likely to recover by mild and gentle treatment—treatment, however, requiring vigilant attention, and, if necessary, an effective control. Messrs. Crosby and Compton are not to be blamed for wishing, under such circumstances, a commission of lunacy to be applied for, or for advising, as they did, that Mr. Nelson should be attended by a person experienced in cases of lunacy; and, on the other hand, I think Mr. Duncombe is not to be blamed for being reluctant either to apply for such a commission, or to account to a person not competent to give him an effectual discharge. In the course of a few days after this bill was filed, Mr. Duncombe was informed that it had been reported to the Lord Chancellor that Mr. Nelson was a violent lunatic, and unsafe to be abroad; and in consequence of an intimation which accompanied this information, some further communications on the subject of applying for a commission of lunacy took place between the solicitors, and in the end, Mr. Duncombe consented to sue out the commission; and having put in an answer to Mr. Nelson's bill, and thereby admitting funds and incomes to be in his hands, an order of transfer and payment of the money and funds into court was made on the 12th of January, 1845, on the motion of Mr. Nelson; and it being inserted in the order that it having been agreed between the solicitors of Mr. Nelson and the solicitor of Mr. Duncombe, that Mr. Duncombe should retain in his hands 500*l.* to meet the charge of procuring a commission of lunacy to be issued, the sum ordered to be paid in by Mr. Duncombe was reduced accordingly. In the course of the communication on the subject of the commission of lunacy, Mr. Faithful stated in his evidence that Messrs. Crosby and Compton uniformly urged the propriety, and, indeed, the necessity, of a commission being issued, as it was evident that Mr. Nelson was of unsound mind. They negatived the proposal made by Mr. Nelson that they should apply for a commission themselves, but he says that it was distinctly understood, if the application were made by Mr. Duncombe, no opposition would be offered, and Mr. Duncombe would be allowed the costs attending such proceedings; and this evidence seems to have been in accordance with the admitted facts and probabilities of the case; but I cannot say that facts so important, and which may be so important in this case, are so distinctly put in issue as to enable me to say that Mr. Nelson ought to be bound by the evidence in its present state. Under the alleged circumstances, however, Mr. Duncombe procured the commission. The inquest was held on the 22nd April, 1845. The evidence which was given on the occasion by a surgeon, one of the members of the asylum, has been proved in the case, and it is, I must say, in many respects most unsatisfactory. On the whole, the jury found that Mr. Nelson was then of sound mind, and capable of taking care of himself and his property. The verdict has not been impugned; and it must therefore be admitted that on the 22nd of April, 1845, Mr. Nelson was of sound mind, and there is nothing to shew now that he has not ever since continued to be so. Soon after the verdict, Mr. Duncombe offered to settle an account with Mr. Nelson; but the allowance of the expenses which he had incurred being refused, he filed his bill on the 3rd of June, 1845, and he thereby prayed a declaration of his right to the allowance, and that the allowance should be made in the taking of the accounts. Under the circumstances which have occurred, and having regard to the fact that the commission had been sued out and executed after the answer to Mr. Nelson's bill had been put in by Mr. Duncombe, I do not think that the filing of Mr. Duncombe's bill was unnecessary for the due statement of his case. Mr. Nelson, of course, is entitled to the ordinary presumption of sanity, and upon that he insists that every thing done by Mr. Duncombe has been entirely done contrary to his interest, and in violation of his personal rights, and he is in no way indebted to Mr. Duncombe for supporting him in the asylum, or procuring the commission. On the other hand, presumption of sanity may be rebutted by proper evidence. The legislature has defined the circumstances under which persons may be treated and confined as insane, though not so found by inquisition; and upon the production of evidence which the legislature has determined, authority is given to subject persons to whom insanity is imputed to a species of confinement and control, to which Mr. Nelson was subjected. Mr. Duncombe insisted that, in the situation in which he was, and with the evidence he had before him, he acted in the discharge of a duty which he owed not only to Mr. Nelson but to society, or to those who were exposed to injury by the person of Mr. Nelson; and out of moneys in his hands he claims to be reimbursed the expenses he incurred in the discharge of that duty, and especially for applying for and procuring the commission, which he says he did in consequence of the request of Mr. Nelson's solicitors, acting for him, and upon the understanding that his expenses were to be paid. Whether Mr. Nelson, by his solicitors, suggested to Mr. Duncombe that if he applied for a commission his expenses would be allowed, is a distinct question, and not, perhaps, admitting of decision at this time, but free from the particular difficulties which attend the main question in this cause. If it should appear that Mr. Duncombe was induced to incur those expenses by Mr. Nelson's agents for Mr. Nelson's benefit, on sufficient ground of reliance that he should be allowed them in account, they would be allowed to him independently of the other question in the cause; and the circumstances are such, that if it be desired, I think there must be a special inquiry on the subject.

The principal question now to be determined arises on Mr. Duncombe's claim to be allowed in account the expenses which he incurred in maintaining Mr. Nelson in a lunatic asylum from August 1839, to September 1844. The question is not precisely the same as that which has arisen in cases of a lunatic so found by inquisition. There being no lunacy or unsoundness of mind, therefore the question of implied debt does not arise in the form in which it has arisen in those cases; there wants something of the solid and firm foundation on which Courts, both at law and in equity, have in those cases determined that a debt was incurred by implied contract. The question must be considered with reference to the special circumstances under which it arises; and it is not denied that Mr. Nelson was placed, detained, and visited in the asylum, in a manner authorized by law. No action has been brought against any party for any misconduct. There is no evidence of any harshness or carelessness on the part of Mr. Duncombe. Notwithstanding all that, I do not hesitate to say that if Mr. Nelson was of sound mind in August 1839, or if he was of unsound mind, and the manner in the asylum in which he was placed was not proper for his protection or for his recovery, and if he was detained longer than he ought to have been, or improperly treated, the forms of law were neglected and abused, and he was wrongly and unjustly imprisoned, and suffered an injury as great as any man could inflict upon another. But all this may possibly have been without any just imputation upon Mr. Duncombe. It may have arisen without his knowledge or acquiescence, from want of knowledge or skill of the medical advisers who gave the certificates on which he was sent, and those medical advisers under whose care he was placed, or for want of judgment or humanity of the keepers, or for want of due vigilance or attention by those who were appointed by law to visit the asylum. But if the outrage committed by Mr. Nelson in August 1839 was in truth the result of insanity,—if for want of capacity he was liable to injure himself and others,—if he was placed under proper protection and proper care taken of him, and he was properly treated,—the greatest service which could be rendered to him was to provide for his protection, and subject him to a restraining process; to this it may be owing that he became convalescent at the time of his escape, and to this it may be owing that he recovered so as to be found of sound mind in April 1845.

On consideration of the evidence, it does appear to me, that, under the circumstances which came to the knowledge of Mr. Duncombe in August, 1839, it was his duty to interfere for the protection of Mr. Nelson,—a duty of imperfect obligation, perhaps, but still a duty not to be neglected by any man who wished to conduct himself as he ought. I think that it was his duty to interfere either by his own act, or by procuring a bill to be filed in this Court for the purpose of obtaining directions for the application of Mr. Nelson's income for his protection and support. By applying to the Court he might have exempted himself from all but very slight risk; by taking upon himself to interfere without the sanction of the Court, he at the same time took upon himself the burden of proving to the Court, if necessary, that the expenses he incurred by interfering were such as ought properly to be allowed to him in account. I conceive that if a proper application had been made, this Court, acting in conformity with that which Lord Eldon calls "its habit of taking notice of persons in such state of imbecility, for their protection," would have inquired in what way the income or the property (Mr. Nelson then appearing to be unable to take care of and to protect himself) could be best and most properly applied for his safety and protection. The Court might have caused a commission of lunacy to be applied for, or might have directed Mr. Nelson to have been taken care of in some proper asylum of the same nature as that in which he was placed. The proper course to be pursued might have been attended with some difficulty; it might have properly depended upon the particular circumstances decided by evidence, one of which would have been that Mr. Nelson had formerly recovered after being placed in such an asylum. But whatever might have been the directions given to Mr. Duncombe, or to any guardian who might have been appointed by the Court, I think, under any circumstances, that if Mr. Nelson, having afterwards become of sound mind, availed himself of the jurisdiction of the Court to compel Mr. Duncombe to account for moneys in his hands, this Court would, upon that occasion, have compelled Mr. Nelson to do justice and equity on his part, and to have allowed expenses, properly incurred, for his maintenance and protection at a time when he was unable to take care of himself; and if Mr. Duncombe had done no more than that which this Court would have directed him to do from the facts appearing in a suit properly instituted, there can scarcely be any good reason why he should not have the like allowance. The circumstances are not precisely the same, because by acting for himself, without first obtaining the sanction of the Court, he has necessarily assumed the burden of proving the propriety of all he did; but supposing him to have done this, is any sufficient reason given why he should not be allowed in account the moneys which he has properly expended for the protection and benefit of Mr. Nelson, at the time when Mr. Nelson was incapable of exercising any discretion, or in any way acting for himself? An objection is made to the jurisdiction. It is said, as no lunacy has been found, there can be no implied contract; and in the absence of contract, the Court has no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon any such claim as this. I think it is proved that in all the cases of implied contract, there has been a lunacy actually found, but it has not been determined that this Court will not take notice of what is due in respect of the property of persons lunatic, though not so found; or that a contract may not be implied for the expenses of persons so circumstanced; a bill may be filed in the name of the person alleged to be of unsound mind, though not found so by inquisition, by a next friend or guardian, and such a person may be sued as a defendant, and the Court appoints a guardian to answer for him. In such cases, Lord Eldon observes, "the Court imposes all the restraint proper to be used, and the party is bound by the act of the guardian so appointed." It is thus in cases where property of persons so situated is brought under the consideration of the Court, the Court being satisfied by proper evidence that the persons are incapable of protecting and dealing with their own interest for themselves, inferring insanity, though not found so by inquisition; and being satisfied that the next friend or guardian pays proper attention to their interest; nay more, inquiries may be necessary to ascertain not only what their rights are, but what is beneficial to them; or, if necessary to direct that a commission de lunatico inquirendo should be issued, it ultimately deals with their rights and property as justice may require. When the Court goes so far in adjudicating upon property belonging to persons insane, though not found so by inquisition, I own there does not seem to me to be any sufficient reason why a contract might not, if it were necessary, be implied for supporting a person who has been provided with such protection as the legislature has secured in the absence of any finding by inquisition, but it scarcely seems to me to be necessary to resort to the doctrine of implied contract. Lord Eldon did not do so in the case of Sherwood v. Sanderson, in which he ordered payment of the expenses of suing out a commission of lunacy to be paid concerning a person to whom insanity was imputed, and who was found not a lunatic, but of unsound mind. This was done on the general jurisdiction of the Court in a case pending a traverse, which prevented any exercise of jurisdiction over the property of the party in the matter of the lunacy. I think that the principle and practice referred to by Lord Eldon in that case authorises me in saying that if a trustee be sued for an account in this court, and it shall appear that he had properly expended sums of money for the protection and safety, or for the maintenance of his cestui que trust, at a time when the cestui que trust was incapable of taking care of himself, the Court will allow him credit for such sums of money. There are two things to be shewn: first, that the cestui que trust was incapable of taking care of himself; secondly, that the sums of money for which credit is asked were properly expended for his protection and benefit. I shall, therefore, think it right to refer it to the Master to inquire whether, in the month of August, 1839, the plaintiff, Mr. Nelson, was of unsound mind, or in such a state of mind as to be incapable of taking due care of himself; and if the Master shall find that he was either of unsound mind, or in such a state of mind as to be incapable of taking care of himself, then the Master is further to inquire under what circumstances Mr. Duncombe interfered to take care of Mr. Nelson, and to place him in a lunatic asylum; and under what circumstances, and for how long, Mr. Nelson was maintained in such asylum; and what sums of money were properly expended by Mr. Duncombe for the protection and support of Mr. Nelson while he remained in such asylum; and if it be necessary, I will direct an inquiry as to the agreement. I shall put that in the direction if the parties desire it; if not, I will leave it out. Next, let the Master further inquire whether Mr. Nelson was of unsound mind, or in such a state of mind as to be incapable of wholly managing his affairs, in the month of April, 1844, and from that time till the 9th of January, 1845, and under what circumstances the commission of lunacy in the pleadings mentioned was sued out and prosecuted; and then whether any and what agreement and understanding respecting the costs of procuring and suing out such commission was entered into or subsisted between Mr. Nelson and Mr. Duncombe, or their respective solicitors; and the Master is to be at liberty to state any special circumstances in relation to any of the matters referred to him.

BROWNE v. HOME.

Practice—New orders—Taking bill pro confesso—Terms.

Glasse applied to the Court, under the 76th of the New Orders, to direct the bill in this case to be taken pro confesso against the defendant. An appearance had been entered for him in due course, and he was in custody under an attachment for want of his answer. Accordingly, in pursuance of the 76th Order, within three weeks after the execution of the attachment, and on the 23rd of June last, notice of the present motion was served upon him.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Let the clerk of records and writs appear with the bill at the hearing, and appoint a day on the first day of causes next Term.

SMURFIT v. BEGG.

Practice—Suppressing depositions.

This was a motion to suppress depositions taken in the cause, on the ground that the witnesses were not sworn at the execution of the commission.

Smurfit, who sued in forma pauperis, appeared in person to support the motion, and read several affidavits to prove the allegation.

Purvis, contra, read the affidavits of the commissioner and his clerk, both distinctly stating, with the utmost particularity of circumstances, that the witnesses were duly sworn.

Bates (with him) said the plaintiff was not asking to examine witnesses, but was endeavouring to suppress the depositions already taken, that he might be able to make an entirely new case.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I refuse the application; there is no ground whatever for making it. I never heard of a more improper application. The plaintiff is suing in forma pauperis, and, therefore, I can give no costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Tuesday, April 21.

JENKINS v. GOWER.

Will—Construction—Next of kin, when to be ascertained.

A testator, by his will, gave a fund to trustees upon trust for his wife for her life, and after her decease, upon trust to pay over and transfer the same to such persons, &c. as he should direct by a codicil; and in default of such direction, upon trust to transfer and make over the same unto such person or persons as would, under and by virtue of the statutes of distribution of intestates' estates, have been entitled to his personal estate in case he had died intestate. The testator did not make any codicil to his will, and it was held that the persons entitled to the fund upon the wife's decease were the next of kin according to the statute who were so at the time of the death of the testator, and not of the widow.

Rees Price, late of Cardigan, gentleman, by his will, dated the 10th of January, 1824, after certain devises and bequests, gave and bequeathed to Edwin Gower and David Powell Lucas, their executors and administrators, all his moneys vested in the public government funds or securities, whether standing in his name or in the name or names of any other person or persons, or in trust for or on his account, or to which he might be in any wise beneficially entitled, together with all dividends that might be due and unpaid thereon, in trust, that they, the said E. Gower and D. P. Lucas, their executors or administrators, or the survivor of them, his executors or administrators, should collect and get in the said funds and the moneys arising from such public or government securities, and place out the same at interest in his or their name or names, either in one entire sum or in parcels, in government or real securities, and the same call in and place out again on such securities as often as he should think fit, and in trust to pay the dividends, interest, and annual proceeds thereof unto his wife during and so and in such manner that the receipts of his said wife, or of any person or persons to whom she might appoint the same when due, should be good and effectual discharges for the money which should thereby be expressed to be received; yet, nevertheless, so that his wife might not anticipate, charge, or assign all or any part of the same dividends, interest, or proceeds, before the same should become due and payable. And after her decease in trust to pay over and transfer all the stocks, funds, and securities, and the moneys secured thereon, unto such person or persons, in such shares and proportions, at such times and in such manner and form as should or might be expressed in any codicil or codicils to that his will; and in default of such direction or appointment, then should transfer and make over the same, or so much thereof whereof no such disposal should be made, unto such person or persons as would, under and by virtue of the statutes of distribution of intestates' estates, have been entitled to his personal estate in case he had died intestate. And the testator appointed his wife sole executrix. Shortly after the date of his will the testator died, without having revoked or altered his will; and the same was duly proved by Adeline Jane Price, his widow, in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. The government funds or securities of which the testator was possessed at the time of his death consisted of the sum of 3,000*l.* Three per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities; and on the 27th of January, 1829, the said Adeline Jane Price transferred the same into the names of the said E. Gower and D. P. Lucas. On the 10th of March, 1829, the said A. J. Price was married to the plaintiff, Jonathan Jenkins. On the 10th of November, 1842, Mrs. Jenkins died, and her husband having taken out letters of administration of the estate and effects of his wife, instituted this suit to establish his right, as the personal representative of his wife, to a moiety of the said sum of 3,000*l.* Consols, under the will of Rees Price. The question in dispute, therefore, was, as to the time at which the next of kin of the testator should be ascertained—whether at the death of the testator, or at the death of his widow.

Russell and Stinton, for the plaintiff.

Anderson, Roll, Metcalfe, Swanson, Roe, and Hallett, for the several defendants.

The following cases were cited: Smith v. Smith, 12 Jur. 428; Urquhart v. Urquhart, 13 Sim. 613; Cholmondeley v. Lord Ashburton, 6 Bea. 86; Withy v. Mangles, 4 Bea. 358; Davies v. Baily, 1 Ves. sen. 84; Garrick v. Lord Camden, 14 Ves. 373; Briden v. Hewlett, 2 Myl. & Keene, 90; Butler v. Bushnell, 3 Myl. & Keene, 232; Long v. Blackall, 3 Ves. 486; Jones v. Colbeck, 8 Ves. 38; and Clapton v. Bulmer, 10 Sim. 426.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The argument for those who were next of kin of the testator at his widow's death, seeks to have the words, "in case I had died intestate," construed as equivalent to the words, "in case I had died at the time of my wife's decease intestate." That is not the correct construction of the words; they cannot be so read, unless the context requires that they should be so read. I think that there is not any such context. The circumstance that the widow took for life is not sufficient for the purpose, as various cases have established. Here, in my opinion, there is nothing else. Sir Launcelot Shadwell says, in Clapton v. Bulmer, 10 Sim. 440:—"I quite agree with that set of cases which Sir Knight Bruce has quoted in support of the proposition, that if you find a gift, ultimately, of the residue of the personal estate of the testator to his relations or to his next of kin, or in words which are tantamount, and the tenant for life of the residuum happens to answer that description, it is nothing more than a paraphrased description of the person before mentioned. If A B was the next of kin, it is of very little importance whether the testator says, that, in the event of his dying without issue, the fund shall go to A B, and in the event of his dying without issue, the fund shall go to a person whom he designates by a multitude of words which point to A B." I think that the words, "in case I had died intestate," must be read and construed according to their ordinary and correct interpretation. In Garrick v. Lord Camden it was held that the words "next of kin" did not include the wife, which shewed that the will did not contain any provision or words justifying the Court in construing them otherwise than according to their ordinary and correct meaning. Here the words "person or persons as would, under and by virtue of the statutes of distribution of intestates' effects have been entitled to my personal estate," may include the widow. The question whether there is any ground for construing them otherwise than according to the correct meaning, must be answered in the negative.

CLEMENTS v. BERESFORD.

Practice—Interest—Receiver's accounts.

Where the executors of a receiver made default in payment of the sum found due from his estate, but no default had been made by the receiver in his lifetime, the Court charged the receiver's surety with 4 per cent. interest only on the amount to be paid.

In this case a receiver, after having regularly passed his accounts at the close of a year died during the following year, and, his executors being ordered to pass his account, it appeared that 1,200l. was due from his estate. The executors having made default in obeying the order for payment, it was sought to charge the amount and interest at 5 per cent. as upon a defaulting receiver's account, against the surety for the receiver, it being contended that the surety must pay all that the receiver would be liable to pay.

Gardner, for the parties in the suit, cited the Order of 23rd of April, 1797, 15 Ves. 278, and Dawson v. Raynes, 2 Russ. 466.

W. T. S. Daniel for the surety.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that his impression was, that if there was no default on the part of the receiver in his lifetime, the interest should be only 4 per cent.

WAKEFIELD v. BROWN.

Covenant.

A, possessed of a house and premises for the residue of a term of sixty-one years, and B, who has no legal interest in them, and C, who has a reversionary interest in them subject to A's term, demise and confirm the premises to D, for a part of the term of sixty-one years, and D covenants with A, B, and C to pay thereat to A for a certain period, and afterwards to B. C dies, and D assigns her term to E. Held: that A and B might support an action of covenant in their joint names against E, although B had no legal interest in the premises, and that the privity of estate between A and E was sufficient.

The declaration was in covenant by Robert Wakefield and Benjamin Bingley, plaintiffs, against George Brown. It recited an indenture made between the plaintiffs and one Samuel Wakefield, deceased, of the one part, and Sophia Brown, of the other part, whereby the plaintiff, R. Wakefield, at and by the request and appointment of Samuel Wakefield and Benjamin Bingley, leased to Sophia Brown certain livery stables, with the dwellings over the same, together with the yard, coach-house, and appurtenances belonging or therewith usually occupied and enjoyed, situate, standing, and being at the corner of and on the south side of Old-street-road, near Shoreditch Church, in the parish of St. Leonard, Shoreditch, in the county of Middlesex, and known by the name or sign of the King's Arms Livery Stables (part of certain premises demised by one Sutton to Benjamin Bingley, describing them), for thirty-one years from Midsummer-day, 1826. And the said Sophia Brown, for herself, her heirs, executors, and administrators, did thereby covenant, promise, and agree, to and with the said Samuel Wakefield and Robert Wakefield, and with their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, and also with and to the said Benjamin Bingley, his executors, administrators, and assigns, that she should and would, from time to time, and at all times during the said term, thereby granted at her and their own charges, well and sufficiently repair, uphold, preserve, cleanse, empty, amend, and keep in good and workmanlike manner, with the best materials, and to the satisfaction of the said Benjamin Bingley, his executors, administrators, or assigns, and of the said Robert Sutton, his heirs or assigns, the whole of the said premises thereby demised, as well as the glass windows, doors, &c. &c. There were also covenants to paint outside and inside, &c. &c. The declaration then stated that by virtue of which demise the said Sophia Brown afterwards entered and was possessed thereof. It then proceeded thus:—

And the plaintiffs further say, that after the making the said indenture, and during the said term thereby granted, to wit, on the 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1830, all the estate, right, title, interest, and term of years then to come and unexpired, property, profit, claim, and demand whatsoever of the said S. Brown, of and in the said demised premises, with the appurtenances, legally came to and vested in the defendant, whereupon the defendant then entered into and upon all and singular the said demised premises, with the appurtenances, and became and was thereof possessed from thence for a long space of time, exceeding the period of five years, to wit, from thence until the commencement of this suit. It then alleged performances by B. Bingley, and laid as breaches the non-repair, non-paving, &c. to the satisfaction of Benjamin Bingley and R. Sutton, and also the omission to paint the inside every three years, and the outside every five years. It concluded thus, and so the plaintiffs say, "that the defendant hath not kept the covenants made by said Sophia Brown, for herself and her assigns, with the plaintiffs, in manner and form, &c. to the plaintiffs' damage 300l." The defendant cravedoyer of the deed, which purported to be an "Indenture made the 24th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1830, between Samuel Wakefield, of the first part, Robert Wakefield, of the second part, Benjamin Bingley, of the third part, and Sophia Brown, of the fourth part. It recited an indenture of August 27, 1830, between Benjamin Bingley, of the first part, Samuel Wakefield, of the second, and Robert Wakefield and Benjamin Bingley, of the third part, whereby B. Bingley granted to S. Wakefield an annuity of 96l. charged upon (inter alia) the premises devised for the lives of six nominees mentioned in the last-mentioned indenture; and for better securing the same, B. Bingley thereby assigned the premises unto R. Wakefield, for the remainder of the term of sixty-one years then to come, granted by R. Sutton, wanting one day of the said term, and subject to the agreement for lease hereinafter mentioned." It then recited an agreement of May 30, 1826, by B. Bingley, to lease the premises to J. Brown, upon the terms hereinafter mentioned, and the concurrence of S. Wakefield. The indenture then witnessed that, in pursuance of the said agreement, &c. and 150l. paid by J. Brown, in his lifetime, and 100l. by Sophia Brown, his widow, he, R. Wakefield, by request and appointment of S. Wakefield and B. Bingley, devised and leased, and B. Bingley granted, demised, leased, ratified, and confirmed unto S. Brown, her executors, administrators, and assigns, all those livery stables, &c. (describing them) for thirty-one years, from Midsummer 1826, yielding and paying therefor yearly and every year during such part of the said term as the premises shall remain subject and liable to the payment of the said annuity unto the said Samuel Wakefield, his executors, administrators, and assigns, the rent or sum of 160l. of lawful money of Great Britain; and from and after the re-purchase, redemption, or cessation of the said annuity, yielding and paying yearly, and during the then residue of the said term, the like yearly rent or sum of 160l. unto the said B. Bingley, his executors, administrators, and assigns, the same to be paid by equal quarterly payments; on Michaelmas-day, Christmas-day, Lady-day, and Midsummer-day, without any deduction or abatement whatsoever thereout, or out of any part thereof, for or on account or in respect of any land tax, sewer-rate, or any other taxes, rates, tithes, charges, assessments, or impositions whatsoever, and whether parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise, the next quarterly payment of the said yearly rent to be made on Christmas next ensuing the date hereof, all rent having been paid up to Michaelmas-day last previously to the date and execution of these presents; and the said S. Brown, for herself, her heirs, executors, and administrators, doth hereby covenant, promise, and agree, to and with the said S. Wakefield and Robert Wakefield, and with their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, and also with and to the said B. Bingley, his executors, administrators, and assigns, in manner following; that is to say, that the said Sophia Brown, her executors, administrators, and assigns, shall and will, from time to time, and at all times during so much of the said term hereby granted, as the said premises shall continue chargeable with, and liable to the payment of the said annuity as aforesaid, well and truly pay, or cause to be paid unto the said Robert Wakefield, his executors, administrators, and assigns, and from thenceforth, during the then residue thereof, unto the said Benjamin Bingley, his executors, administrators, and assigns, the said yearly rent of 160l. of lawful money as aforesaid, on the days and times hereinafter appointed for the payment thereof according to the reservation aforesaid, and the true intent and meaning of these presents.

Then followed covenants to pay the taxes, &c. to repair to the satisfaction of Benjamin Bingley and R. Sutton, to paint, inside and outside, with powers to R. Wakefield and B. Bingley their respective executors, administrators, &c. to repair, and after notice, to insure in joint names of R. Sutton, his heirs or assigns, and B. Bingley, his executors, administrators, or assigns. There were various other covenants not material to mention. Then there was the following covenant by B. Bingley, that "the said S. Brown paying the rent herein reserved, and during the performance of the said covenants, should quietly enjoy and without interruption by him, or R. Wakefield, or R. Sutton, or any person or persons claiming, by, from, or under, or in trust for him, them, or any, or either of them; also a covenant by B. Bingley, to indemnify and save harmless S. Brown from the rent due under his indenture, and from the payment of the said annuity of 96l. and from any breach of covenant by B. Bingley, and his executors, administrators, and assigns. The defendant then demurred generally, that the said declaration was not sufficient in law. The point mentioned in the margin was, that between the defendant as assignee of the lease declared on, and the plaintiff Benjamin Bingley, there does not appear to be such a privity of estate as is by law required to enable the said Bingley to sue the said defendant as such assignee upon the covenants of the lessee to and with the said Bingley, contained in the said lease, and also that, according to the interests of the plaintiffs appearing upon the face of the said lease, the said plaintiffs are not entitled to sue jointly in this action.

Watson, Q.C. (with him Peacock), in support of the demurrer.—Looking at the declaration, it is a demise by Robert Wakefield, but a joint covenant with Robert Wakefield, Samuel Wakefield, and Benjamin Bingley. It is a covenant in gross not running with the land. Webb v. Russell, 3 T. R. 393; Anderson v. Martindale, 1 East. No instance can be found where a joint covenant with three, one of whom only has an interest in the land, has been held to run with the land. Then is it a joint or separate covenant? In terms it is joint with the Wakefields, and separate with Bingley. Treport's case, 6 Co. 146; Serenite v. James, 10 B. & C. 410; Eccleston v. Cliphams, 1 Saund. were cited.

Crouder, Q.C. (with him Lush), contra, cited Anderson v. Martindale, 1 East, 497; Sorsbie v. Park, 12 M. & W. 146; Mills v. Ladbroke, 2 M. & G.; Bac. Abr. Leases, O; and contended that if the plaintiffs could not sue one another.

Watson, in reply, cited Hopkinson v. Lee, supra, vol. 6; Bradford v. Botfield, 14 L.J.

Cur. adv. vult.

In Trialty Term judgment was delivered.

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—An action for covenant for non-repair, in pursuance of the terms of a lease made between Samuel Wakefield, of the first part, Robert Wakefield, of the second part, Benjamin Bingley, of the third part, and Sophia Brown, of the fourth part. By the recital it appears that Benjamin Bingley, having a term of sixty-one years, granted an annuity to Samuel Wakefield, and to secure it had assigned that term of sixty-one years wanting one day to Robert Wakefield; then by a lease Robert Wakefield, at the request of Samuel Wakefield and Bingley, demised and confirmed the premises to Sophia Brown for thirty-one years, yielding and paying a rent to Samuel Wakefield while the premises remained subject to him, and afterwards to Bingley. Sophia Brown then covenanted to and with the said Samuel Wakefield and Robert Wakefield, and their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, and also to and with the said Benjamin Bingley, to pay the rent to Robert Wakefield, and afterwards to Bingley, and also to repair and paint the premises outside once in three years, and inside once in five. The declaration alleges the premises came to the defendant by assignment, that afterwards she committed a breach of covenant, by not painting; to this declaration there was a general demurrer, the objection being that the action ought to be brought by Robert Wakefield alone, and there is no privity of estate between Robert Wakefield and Samuel Wakefield. Samuel Wakefield is alleged by the declaration to be dead; the indenture is strangely drawn, for it reserves the rent to Samuel Wakefield, and the covenant is to pay to Robert, the covenant is to surrender to Bingley at the expiration of the term of thirty-one years, and Bingley alone covenants for quiet enjoyment. There is also a provision for notice to repair, and a covenant with Robert Wakefield and Bingley, omitting Samuel Wakefield, to repair after such notice. The present question, therefore, arises on the general covenant to repair and to paint; that covenant is with the two Wakefields jointly and Bingley. If Samuel Wakefield had been alive, it is plain that Robert Wakefield could not have sued without joining him, because Samuel Wakefield had no legal interest in the premises, and the case is, therefore, within the authority of Anderson v. Martindale. Now, if this were a joint covenant with the two Wakefields, one of whom had no legal interest, it is difficult to say he could not covenant with Bingley in respect of his reversion if he dies, and so as regards him this covenant with the Wakefields must be considered separate, as perhaps it might have been if the assignment to secure the annuity had been with both. This case appears to come within the authority of Sorsbie v. Park, 12 Meeson & Welsby; Mills v. Ladbroke, 2 Manning & Grainger; and Bradford v. Botfield, 14 Law Journ. and so on, and is in no way inconsistent with the late case of Hopkinson v. Lee, in this court. The case which comes nearest to the present is Foley v. Addenbrooke, 3 Q.B. in which it was held that where the interest in the cause of action is joint, the action must be in the joint names of the grantee; which was not necessary in this case, any more than Bradford v. Botfield, to determine that one of several lessors can sue on a covenant to repair. That they may join is clear, from the case of K v. —, which is so far an authority for the plaintiff in this case. The other objection, that there is no privity of estate, is certainly not good. The covenant to repair or paint clearly runs with the land; and there is privity of estate between the defendant and one of the plaintiffs, Robert Wakefield. Therefore judgment must be for the plaintiff.

TRIX and WIFE v. THORN.

Discretion of Court as to setting aside judge's order—Setting aside demurrer as frivolous—Action on bond—Replication to general plea of performance.

If a judge at chambers has set aside a demurrer as frivolous, the Court will take all the circumstances of the case into its consideration, in order to guide the exercise of its discretion in granting or refusing a rule to set aside the judge's order; and the time at which the application is made is one of those circumstances.

*Debt on bond for payment of a sum of money, with interest, on a certain day. Plea: performance generally. Replication: non-payment of the principal and interest on the day named (the day being laid under a videlicet), concluding with a verification. Demurrer: on the grounds, 1st, that the day being laid under a videlicet, it did not appear that the breach was before the commencement of the suit; 2nd, that the replication ought to have concluded to the country; 3rd, that it was double, for alleging non-payment of both principal and interest. A learned judge at chambers having set aside this demurrer as frivolous, the Court refused to set aside that order.*

*Advocate Smith, in Easter Term, had obtained a rule to shew cause why an order of Mr. Justice Gresswell, setting aside a demurrer as frivolous, should not be set aside. The declaration was in debt on a bond given to the female plaintiff, dum sola, conditioned for the payment of 300*l.* on a day certain, with a general breach. The condition was set out on oayr.*

Plea: that the defendant had in all things performed the conditions on his part.

*Replication: that he did not pay on the day; the day being laid under a videlicet, and concluding with a verification.*

Demurrer thereto. That demurrer was set aside by order of Gresswell, J. on the 9th March, and this application was made on the 27th April.

Bull, Q.C. shewed cause.—First, this application is too late. It ought to be made within a reasonable time in the Term next after the order made, if made in vacation. (Clement v. Weaver, 1 Dowl. N.S. 193.)

M. Smith.—No rule has been laid down as to the number of days within which a party must come to set aside a judge's order made in vacation. On the contrary, the rule being that he must come in the next Term, he has the whole of that Term for the application. (3 Chitt. Archbold's Practice, (6th ed.) 1224, citing R. v. Wilkes, 4 Burr. 2569.)

*Bull, Q.C. was then called upon to argue the rule.—The first ground of demurrer is, that the replication does not shew that the breach happened before the commencement of the suit, because the day is laid under a videlicet; but the answer is, that although laid under a videlicet, the date is not for this purpose immaterial, and the Court will take notice that it is a day previous to the commencement of the action. (Merckill v. Allen, 2 Cr. & J.) The second ground is that the replication is bad for not concluding to the country; and Roakes v. Manser, 1 C. B. 331, is cited in support of that objection; but it was only held there that a conclusion to the country might be sustained; not necessarily that a verification would be bad. The third ground, that the replication is double in alleging non-payment of both principal and interest, equally fails; for the condition of the bond is for the payment of both as an entire sum; and the case of Dickenson v. Harrison, 4 Price, 288, does not apply. (He also cited Stephen on Pleading, and Jones v. Owen, 5 Ad. & Ell. 222.)*

*M. Smith, contr.—First, the breach of the condition does not appear to have been before the commencement of the action. In Parkinson v. Whitehead, 2 M. & G. 329, the declaration stated that therefore, to wit, on the 31st May, 1825, by an agreement in writing, the defendant's testator agreed, within two years from Midsummer then next, to build certain houses, and alleged for breach that the houses at the commencement of the action (1839) were not built, contrary to the agreement; and it was held bad on general demurrer for not shewing that two years from Midsummer next after the making of the agreement had elapsed previous to the commencement of the suit. So here the day for payment being laid under a videlicet, is not binding; and the issue would be proved if the day for payment were after the commencement of the suit. (Shaner v. Lambert, 4 M. & G. 477; Tucker v. Webster, 10 Mees. & W. 371.) Secondly, the replication ought to have concluded to the country, as the Court of Common Pleas decided in Roakes v. Manser, 1 C. B. 331, upon the authority of Bush v. Leake, 3 Doug. 255, and the cases collected 1 Wms. Saund. 108, n. Thirdly, the replication is double, in assigning a breach of the condition to pay the interest as well as the principal, the principal and interest being separate debts. (Dickenson v. Harrison, 4 Price, 282.) The replication is also bad for not averring non-payment to the husband as well as to the wife.*

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—I think that the first ground *of demurrer fails, and that the day of payment is so far material. This is not like the case of Parkinson v. Whitehead, where the contract was to be performed within two years next after a certain day; and where it became necessary to allege that those two years had elapsed before the commencement of the suit. Secondly, it is not double; for though the case in Price says that the principal and the interest may be treated as separate debts, it does not follow that they must be so treated; nor is it bad for not alleging to whom the money had not been paid. It is sufficient to shew that it was not paid according to the condition. Thirdly, with regard to the verification, I entertain more doubt. I am not prepared to say decidedly whether it ought not to have concluded to the country. Still the case of Roakes v. Manser leaves that point open. And here I think it very important to consider that this replication is pleaded to a bad plea in bar; for upon this application we have to exercise our discretion upon all the circumstances of the case. In my opinion the jurisdiction of a judge at chambers to set aside demurrers as frivolous is of very great value; and when a judge has exercised his discretion upon such an application at chambers, I for one should be very slow to disturb his decision. But we are to look at all the circumstances, and the time of the application is not immaterial. I consider that parties would do better to come on the first day of next Term if they wish to set aside the order of a learned judge made in vacation; I do not mean to say that they are precluded from coming after the lapse of a day or two, but it is always better to come promptly; and I doubt whether this rule would have been granted, if the lapse of time had been brought under our notice. Without laying down any precise rule, it is certainly a circumstance to be taken into consideration in every case. This rule will be discharged.*

PATTON, J.—It must not be forgotten that here is a good declaration, and a bad tricky plea, no doubt intended to invite a demurrer. Then the defendant having demurred to the replication, a learned judge exercising his discretion has set aside that demurrer as frivolous; and we ought not to set aside his order, unless upon a consideration of all the circumstances. Now, suppose the defendant had come to argue this demurrer, first, it is clear that he would not have been heard for a moment, because the plea is bad on general demurrer; but if he had he could not have maintained his first ground of demurrer; for, by rule of Court, the plaintiff, in making up the demurrer-book, might set out the bond; and so it would at once appear that the day of payment was before action brought. The case never got to that stage; but we have a right to consider how it would have been if the demurrer-book had been made up. With regard to the verification, the Court of Common Pleas has decided that a conclusion to the country would have been good; but it does not follow that a verification is bad. As to the ground of duplicity, I entertain no doubt that when the condition is to pay a certain sum with interest, on a certain day, the principal and interest form one entire sum; although it might be different if interest were payable in the interval. Neither is the absence of an averment of non-payment by the husband any ground of special demurrer; for the breach is the non-payment on the day; and that is alleged. The judge having exercised his discretion at chambers upon all these points, I see no reason for disturbing his decision.

Rule discharged with costs. [A few cases of last Term, unavoidably postponed during the circuit, will appear next week.]

ADMIRALTY COURT.

Wednesday, March 26.

(Before Dr. LUSHINGTON.)

Wages, pilotage and towage should be paid out of the freight, and not out of the cargo and freight rateably. As all the expenses incurred in cases of bottomry relate to the ship itself, the cargo cannot be charged with any part of them until the value of the ship and freight has been applied in liquidation of such demands.

The facts of this case sufficiently appear in the following

JUDGMENT.

Dr. LUSHINGTON said:—The parties to the act on petition, which set forth the question now to be determined, were the consignees of the cargo, and the holders of a bond, dated April 9, 1845; and the question was, whether the wages, pilotage, and towage, should be paid out of the freight, or out of the proceeds of the ship and freight rateably. He could not, however, take the point as an isolated point. He must proceed step by step. This Peruvian vessel left Lima on a voyage for London, with a cargo of guano and silver; she met with damage at sea, and put into Bahia. There those who had the command of her sold the silver, and applied the proceeds in payment of the necessary expenses of the ship. The fund so raised not being sufficient, further moneys were procured on the security of a bottomry-bond, which bound the ship only, and also on the security of ano*ther bond, which bound the cargo only. After the necessary repairs had been completed, the vessel left Bahia, and met with a collision at sea, which compelled her to return thither, and a third bond was then taken, which was solely on the ship. The latter bond, with the premium, amounted, in October last, to 362*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.* The ship having reached London in June, 1845, was arrested for the recovery of the moneys secured by this bond. The validity of all the bonds was not denied. That was a peculiar state of things; it was very unusual to grant a bond upon the cargo only. The validity was not questioned, but he could not determine the question now arising without considering the principle on which such validity must depend. As all the expenses which were incurred in cases of bottomry related to the ship itself, the cargo could not be made liable to any part of them, until the value of the ship and freight had been applied in liquidation of such demands. In principle the cargo could never be hypothecated for the benefit of the ship, it could only be done where the lender required such security, and only to the extent of any deficiency in the proceeds of the ship and freight, to pay the money advanced. He understood that to be the principle on which the judgment in the case of the Gratitudine, 3 Rob. 264, was founded. The case of the Prince Regent plainly established that the cargo could not be made liable till the proceeds of the ship and freight had been exhausted. Moreover, the judgment in the Prince Regent decided a point left doubtful in the Gratitudine, namely, that it was the duty of this Court, before it allowed the proceeds of the cargo to be applied in liquidation of the bond, to cause the whole proceeds of the ship and freight to be appropriated for that purpose, though the bond did not mention them. The principle did not apply to a bond on the ship only; for if the bondholder did not require the further security of the freight or cargo, he must abide by his own act. The bondholder had in no case a right to demand more than was due by the terms of his bond; where other funds were brought in to discharge the bond, it was the act of the law for the benefit of the owner of the cargo, and not for the benefit of the bondholder. He disclaimed giving any opinion as to the law if the very extraordinary case of a bottomry bond on the freight only should arise. In the case now before the Court there was a bond on the cargo alone, against which there was no opposition; the Court, as of course, pronounced for the validity of it, but that decree must be taken with an implied reservation that it could not be enforced against the cargo till the funds primarily liable were exhausted. The first two bonds bore the same date, and might be considered to a certain extent as one. How were the three bonds to be paid? The last dated bond must be paid first, and out of the ship only, and what remained of the proceeds of the ship was applicable to the payment of the other two bonds. But how? There was no priority between these two bonds; the proceeds of the ship, therefore, must first be applied to liquidate both bonds, then the freight to pay the second bond, and finally the cargo, if there were a deficit. The learned judge then entered into a variety of calculations to shew the effect which this decree would have in reducing the amount of the several bonds. But, he added, there were the wages, pilotage, and tonnage to be paid, and the question was, out of what fund? He had been asked to decree them out of the freight only. For what reason was the ship to be held exempted? Prima facie she was as much benefitted by those services as the freight. But he was desired to do it in order that he might save the holders of the first bond from total loss, and the holders of the second from partial loss. If he assented to it the owners of the cargo would be the sufferers, and thus he would do indirectly what he could not do directly. The peculiar interest of the owner and the cargo intervened, and that interest was, that the proceeds of the ship and freight should be applied first to discharge part liens, as wages, rateably; then to discharge the bond entitled to be first paid, and then all after demands standing in pari conditione. The result was that the 55*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.* the amount of wages, &c. which were liens entitled to priority of payment, must be paid out of the gross freight, 794*l.* 2*s.* and the proceeds of the ship 499*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.* rateably. The effect would be that 285*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* would be left of the proceeds of the ship to be applied to pay the bond of the 9th of April, and 453*l.* 3*s.* 10*d.* the balance of freight, to pay the bond on the cargo, before the cargo was so applied.*

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Friday, Aug. 14.

(Before Mr. Commissioner FANE.)

Re TAYLOR.

Where an insolvent has obtained his final order, and subsequently comes into the possession of property, and on whom a notice for the surrender of that property has been duly made, served, and filed by the official assignee, pursuant to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, s. 9, the Court will not authorize the taking of such property by the assignee, if an assignment of it to other parties had been made by the insolvent prior to the date of filing the required notice by the assignee.

The insolvent in this case was an attorney, and an application had been made to Mr. Reed, on behalf of the official assignee, to "claim and demand" certain property to which the insolvent had become entitled upon the demise, and in pursuance of the will of a Mrs. Watts, of Brighton.

A lengthened argument upon that application having taken place, the learned Commissioner said the case was one of too much nicety and importance to be decided without mature consideration, and now proceeded to deliver judgment.—This insolvent petitioned the Court in 1843, and obtained his final order in the same year. In 1845 he became entitled to a legacy and other property under the will of Mrs. Watts, who died in that year. No creditor's assignee was ever appointed. Mr. Whitmore, the official assignee, having accidentally heard that the insolvent had acquired property, "claimed and demanded" such property from the insolvent personally, pursuant to the 9th section of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, on the 20th of July last; and on the same day filed a copy of his claim. Mr. Whitmore now asks that I should make an order authorizing him to take possession of the estate and effects which the insolvent acquired under the will of Mrs. Watts. Mr. Whitmore's application was opposed by Mr. Nicholls, as counsel for a Mr. Bertram, to whom the insolvent assigned his interest under Mrs. Watts's will, by way of security for a loan of 200l. by a deed dated the 13th of January, 1846. It was also opposed by a Mr. Edwards, as attorney to some trustees, to whom the insolvent, on the 1st of July last, assigned his property in trust for creditors who had become such since his insolvency. The question is, whether I ought to give to Mr. Whitmore the authority asked. It is clear that the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, was intended to secure to an insolvent, who obtained his final order, his personal liberty only, and that his future property was to be liable, if the Court thought fit, for the payment of his old debts. On the part of the official assignee, it was contended that the insolvent's future property became vested in his assignees by virtue of the 7th section of the Act, absolutely and at once on the passing of the final order; whilst, on the part of the respondents, it was contended that no future property vested in the assignees until such future property had been claimed and demanded by the assignees from the petitioner, and the claim had been served and filed pursuant to the 9th clause of the Act, and then only from the filing the notice, and to be taken possession of only under the direction of the Court. I have carefully considered the Act of Parliament, and I am of opinion that future property does not vest in the assignees until a claim has been duly made, served, and filed, and that nothing vests till the filing. The question turns mainly on the 7th and 9th clauses of the Act, which at first sight certainly seem to contradict each other, but they admit of being reconciled. The clauses to which I have referred are as follow:—It was argued that the words in the 7th clause, "that from and after the passing of the final order, the whole estate, present and future, should become absolutely vested in the insolvent's assignees," meant any property which might come to him at any time up to the day of his death; but if so, that clause would be utterly inconsistent with the 9th clause, which enacts that all "estate and effects acquired by him at any time after the final order shall have been made, shall be absolutely vested in the assignees, upon their filing a copy of a claim made by them," pursuant to that section. Understanding these clauses as the official assignee would have them understood, they are utterly irreconcilable; for how is it possible to reconcile the contradictory ideas of property absolutely vesting in a person at two totally different periods, the date of the final order and the date of a claim made, it may be several years after? The solicitor for the official assignee felt this difficulty, and endeavoured to get over it by attempting a distinction between the words in the 7th clause, "the whole estate present and future," and the words in the 9th clause, "any estate and effects acquired by him at any time after the final order shall have been made;" insisting that the first words related to property acquired otherwise than by personal industry. Such, however, in my opinion, is not the proper mode of reconciling the seeming contradiction—the proper mode is, to give a limited meaning in the 7th clause to the word "future," which appears to me clearly to mean "reversionary," that is, to mean "future," in the sense of the property vested or contingent, to which the insolvent is then entitled, but not receivable until a future time; and this construction is quite in conformity with the rest of the sentence, which seems to say, that, as regards the property of an insolvent having obtained his final order, the assignees shall hold such property, just as (in like manner as) bankrupts' assignees do the property of a certificated bankrupt. With this explanation all is clear and consistent. The assignees under the 7th clause take all the property of an insolvent having obtained his final order, which he acquires up to the moment of his obtaining his final order. Just as bankrupt's assignees take all bankrupt's property up to the moment of his obtaining his certificate, and under the 9th clause they take, in a special way, what the assignees of a certificated bankrupt do not take at all; that is, property acquired by him after the Court has finally pronounced in his favour as to the final order. Taking this view of the case, I cannot authorize Mr. Whitmore to take any property which came to the insolvent after the date of the final order, which was not his property on the 20th day of July, when the claim was filed. It is represented to me that the insolvent had heard, in June or July, that the official assignee was going to make and file a claim under the 9th section; and that he lost no time in making the assignment of the 18th of July, expressly to defeat Mr. Whitmore's claim; if so, his conduct was most unfair towards his former creditors, and it is possible that the official assignee might, by proceedings in Chancery, set aside the assignment by the insolvent as fraudulent; and to assist him or any creditor in making out such case, I would execute an authority to Mr. Whitmore in general terms, authorizing him to take possession of any estates or effects acquired by the insolvent not effectually assigned away by him before the filing of the claim, subject, if necessary, to proper qualifications. The official assignee, or creditors under the old insolvency, might also procure redress against the insolvent for his improper conduct, by procuring a rescinding of the final order under the 12th section 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, on the ground that he had not given due notice to his assignees of property acquired by him after the date of his final order.

SYKES v. COOPER.

Provisional committee—Engineer—Agency—Admissions.

An admission under judge's order of a newspaper containing an advertisement is no admission of that advertisement being inserted by the direction of the company to which it refers.

The directors of a railway company appoint an engineer to the company, and his name is advertised in the prospectus as the engineer to the company:—Held, per Erle, J. that this does not constitute the engineer agent to the company, so as to make them responsible to persons employed by him in taking surveys; and therefore, in an action against one of the directors by an engineer who had been so employed by the engineer to the company, letters from the engineer to the plaintiff are not admissible without further proof of his authority to bind the company.

This was an action brought by an engineer who had been employed by Mr. Higgins, the engineer to the South Midland Junction Railway Company, to take trial sections and preliminary surveys.

Crowder, Q.C. (with whom was Barstow) proposed to shew that Higgins had been held out to the world by the directors as engineer to the company, and put in a Times newspaper, admitted under a judge's order. This contained an advertisement of the prospectus of the company, in which Mr. Higgins was so designated. And Cockburn, Q.C. (with whom were M. Smith and Phina) objected to this being read, as it was not shewn that the company had authorized the insertion. The admission is only of the Times newspaper.

ERLE, J. held the objection good.

Proof was then given of the advertisement being authorized; proof of the work being done under the direction of Mr. Higgins; and it was then proposed to put in various letters from Mr. Higgins to the plaintiff.

Cockburn objected.

Crowder and Barstow.—It is a question of agency. Mr. Higgins was appointed and advertised as the engineer of the company, and he was thereby held out to the world as their agent for matters which were absolutely necessary for the engineering department. The plans sent by the plaintiff were seen by the directors of the company, and by the defendant in his capacity of director. To reject this evidence would be to hold that he is legally incapable of binding the company, and that Higgins alone is liable.

ERLE, J.—I am clearly of opinion that the evidence is inadmissible. It is tendered to fix the company with the acts of a person as their agent, and no proof whatever of authority has been given. This disposes also of the case if no other evidence can be produced.

PARFITT v. RAYDEN.

Insurance—Evidence—Log-book—Captain's statements.

In an action against the underwriters by the owner of a ship to recover freight; the defence being that the ship was unseaworthy, letters from the captain to the plaintiff are not admissible against the plaintiff, without proof of his acquiescence in the correctness of the statements contained therein. Nor are entries in the log-book admissible for the same purpose, nor protests made by the captain as to the state of the ship, unless it can be shewn that the plaintiff has previously used these documents upon which to found a claim in respect of the ship.

Assumpsit upon an insurance for freight. The risk insured against was at and from the Malacossi river. The defendant pleaded an assumpsit and a special plea, that at the time the vessel left the river Malacossi she was unseaworthy.

Crowder, Q.C. (with him Stork) put in the policy, and called upon the defendant to prove his plea.

Cockburn, Q.C. (with him Greenwood), then addressed the jury, and opened the contents of a letter written by the captain to the plaintiff; the protest made by the captain as to the state of the vessel, and the log-book.

Crowder objected that these could not possibly be evidence.

ERLE, J.—I quite agree with you; but I can only put it to the learned counsel whether they think there is any chance of their succeeding either here or in another place in getting them in, and if they think that there is a chance of that, I cannot prevent the contents being stated.

The statements were then proceeded with.

An admitted copy of a letter from the captain to the plaintiff was then tendered, to which Crowder objected.

Cockburn and Greenwood.—This is a statement of the plaintiff's agent, and it is a matter in the scope of his business, and within his usual authority. If a conversation between them had been overheard, evidence could have been given of it. The Times newspaper is often put in when it is proved that the plaintiff or defendant is in the habit of reading it. The question is not as to the weight to be attached to the letter, but whether it is admissible, and it is tendered mainly upon the ground that it was written in his capacity of captain, and in the course of his duty.

ERLE, J.—The Times, or other documents, may be admissible to prove the fact of knowledge that such a statement had been made, but not of the facts stated. The captain is not the plaintiff's agent to bind him by statements of this kind. It often happens that he is hostile to the owners. I consider the letter clearly inadmissible.

An admitted copy of the protest made by the captain before the ship was abandoned, and a copy of the log-book, were then tendered.

ERLE, J.—These are no evidence. They have never, that I am aware of, been put in evidence, and I shall reject them unless it can be shewn that the plaintiff has used them to found a claim upon, and so to have admitted them as correct.

The counsel for the defendants then proposed to prove that they had been used by the plaintiff in a former trial between the plaintiff and another underwriter, and called the attorney to the defendant.

Crowder objected, that the record of the former trial was the only legal evidence of any issue between the parties, and proof of that fact was necessary before any evidence of what then took place could be given.

ERLE, J. rejected the evidence.

Verdict was ultimately given for defendant.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

MR. MORISON, in the House of Commons on Tuesday, moved a series of ten resolutions for the future government of railways, the first and chief of which was to constitute a new department of the executive government for the sole control and superintendence of railways, and all business therefrom arising. This resolution was agreed to, and the nine others were withdrawn on an intimation from the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER that the Government would introduce a measure to that effect, which should transfer to the new department all the duties now discharged by the Board of Trade, with a great portion of the staff engaged on them. A Bill was, accordingly, on Wednesday, introduced to the Commons, and read a first time. As chroniclers of all that pertains to law and law appointments, we give particulars of an angry discussion between Lord GEORGE BENTINCK and other members, on the appointment of Mr. Commissioner POLLOCK to the Chief Justiceship of India.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

TUESDAY, Aug. 18.—The Royal assent was given by commission to thirty public and private Bills. The Lords Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Marquis of Lansdowne, and the Earl of Minto. The following are the titles of the Bills: The Sugar Duties Bill (No. 3); the Militia Pay Bill; the Forms (Assessed Taxes) Bill; the Highway Rates Bill; the Loan Societies Bill; the Turnpike Act Continuance Bill; the Stock in Trade Bill; the Copyhold Commission Bill; the Court of Common Pleas Bill; the Religious Opinions Relief Bill; the Grand Jury Cess Bonds (Ireland) Bill; the Prisons (Ireland) Bill; the New Zealand Company Bill; the Adverse Claims (Ireland) Bill; the Deodands Abolition (No. 2) Bill; West Riding Union Railways Bill; Manchester, Bolton, and Bury Canal, and Leeds Railway Amalgamation Bill; Caledonian, Pollon, Govan, and Clydesdale Junction Railways Amalgamation Bill; Huddersfield and Manchester Railway and Canal (Oldham Branch) Bill; Liverpool, Ormskirk, and Preston Railway Bill; Gauge of Railways Bill; Salthouse Embankment Bill; Wolverhampton Stipendiary Justice Bill; Books and Engravings Bill; Plymouth Great Western Docks Bill; Bowling Bay Improvement Bill; Brighouse Sewering, Draining, and Lighting Bill; Wexford Harbour Improvement Bill; Norfolk Estuary Bill; Duke of Cleveland's (Hardwick Hart) Estate Bill; Scott's Estate Bill; Clowes Estate (Booth's Charities) Bill; Horne's (Ferguson's Estate) Bill; and All Souls College (Oxford) Estate Bill.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, Aug. 18.—Lord G. BENTINCK called the attention of the House to a job which had been committed by the late Government with respect to the appointment of the present Chief Justice of Bombay. At the present, there were two chief justices of that presidency. On the 29th of June last, the late administration resigned the reins of government, but appointed on the 30th Mr. D. Pollock to the office of Chief Justice of Bombay. At that time, Sir H. Roper, the Chief Justice of Bombay, had not tendered his resignation to the Government. Sir H. Roper was in the seventh year of the performance of his duties as Chief Justice of Bombay. Five years' service entitled him to a retiring pension of 700l. a year; seven years' service to a retiring pension of 1,000l. a year. Sir H. Roper's period of seven years' service would not expire till the 2nd of next November; and yet to perpetrate a job, the late President of the Board of Control had superseded Sir H. Roper, and appointed Mr. D. Pollock as chief justice in his stead. By the law of the land, as soon as Mr. Pollock was appointed, the authority of Sir H. Roper as chief justice ceased; and the result was, that every trial which had since taken place before Sir H. Roper became illegal, and every criminal convicted and hanged in the interval was a murdered man. To remedy this illegality, a Bill, under the title of the "Patent Commission Bill," had passed the House of Lords, and would, in all probability, be introduced into that House that evening. The object of this job had been to make a vacancy in the Commissioners of Insolvency, and thereby to reward the private secretary of Lord Lyndhurst. He had nothing to say against the character of Mr. D. Pollock, but he was 65 years of age. Passing over the appointment of Mr. C. Phillips as successor to Mr. D. Pollock, an appointment, however, which was attributable to the friendship of an ex-Chancellor, who had recently defended in another place all the tergiversation of the late government, he had no hesitation in denouncing, as a gross job, the appointment of Mr. Perry as the successor of Mr. C. Phillips. He called on the partisans of the late government to show him any precedent for so nefarious a job. The government was actually defunct when it made this appointment; and he therefore felt himself entitled to call for investigation into the manner in which this patronage of the chief justiceship had been disposed of. After one of his usual bitter attacks on the late administration, he called upon Sir J. Hobhouse to lay before the House all the information which he could produce with respect to this appointment.—Sir J. HOBHOUSE stated the facts of the case, and left the House to come to its own decision upon them. In February last, Sir H. Roper wrote to Lord Ripon, expressing his wish to retire from the chief justiceship of Bombay, not immediately, but on the 2nd of November next, when he would be entitled to a retiring pension of 1,000l. a year for seven years' service. On the 4th of May Lord Ripon, having taken her Majesty's pleasure on the subject, accepted the resignation of Sir H. Roper on the terms on which it had been tendered. On the 16th of June Lord Ripon requested Mr. Gladstone, the Colonial Secretary, to make out a patent for the appointment of Mr. D. Pollock as successor to Sir H. Roper. Mr. Gladstone, on inquiring into the matter, informed Lord Ripon that it was illegal to appoint a judge in prospectu. Lord Ripon thereupon ordered letters patent to be made out, appointing Mr. D. Pollock forthwith Chief Justice of Bombay. This was accordingly done on the 1st of July, and in the patent appointing Mr. D. Pollock there was a clause annulling the appointment of Sir H. Roper. As soon as he (Sir J. Hobhouse) saw that clause he consulted the Attorney-General upon it, and the Attorney-General, after examining into it, informed him that there was no remedy except an Act of Parliament, to legalize all that might take place in the interval between Mr. D. Pollock's appointment and the time of taking his seat as Chief Justice at Bombay, and an Act of Parliament had in consequence been drawn up and introduced into the House of Lords by the present Lord Chancellor.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL had himself come to the opinion which Sir J. Hobhouse had communicated to the House, after mature deliberation, and he was happy to say that he had been fortified in it by the concurrent opinion of the present Lord Chief Baron, the present Lord Chancellor, the late Lord Chancellor, and the late Attorney-General. It was laid down in all our old law books, and especially in Comyn's Digest, that a judicial office could not be held in reversion. The object of the bill introduced into the other House was to cure altogether the inconvenience which had been felt in this case, and to make all letters patent in future take effect upon the arrival of the new judge in India.—Mr. S. WORTLEY agreed with the Attorney-General that a judicial office could not be granted in reversion, but was not sure that an appointment to a judicial office was illegal. Having expressed his satisfaction that the error committed in this case, and many similar cases, was about to be remedied, he proceeded to justify the appointments of Mr. D. Pollock and Mr. C. Phillips, on the ground of the eminent learning and acquirements of those gentlemen. He then read Lord G. Bentinck a severe lecture for the bitter personalities in which he was perpetually indulging against the members of the late administration.—Mr. HUME said that, if this was not a job, it was very like one. If the Government had appointed Mr. D. Pollock to his present office, after it had resigned, it was a case which called for particular animadversion. The manner, too, in which Sir E. Perry, who had executed his duties as a puisne judge in India to the satisfaction of all parties, had been passed over by this appointment of Mr. D. Pollock, who knew nothing of the practice of the law in India, was most objectionable. The House was much indebted to Lord G. Bentinck for bringing this matter forward, and the attack which Mr. S. Wortley had just made upon him was neither well-timed nor just.—After a few words from Mr. BERNAL, Mr. GOULBOURN, &c., the order for the day was read.

THURSDAY, August 20.—On the motion that the Small Debts Bill be committed, Lord G. BENTINCK said that the present ministers had inherited from their predecessors this measure, which threw more patronage into the hands of the executive government than any measure introduced for many years into Parliament; but still the House was entitled to a full explanation of the extent to which the patronage thus created went, and of the expense which it would entail upon the country. The second clause of the Bill gave the Government power to divide every county into as many districts as it thought fit. Each district was to have a separate judge; each judge was to have a salary of 1,200l. a year; and the Lord Chancellor was to have the nomination of all these judges. Each Court was to have a clerk with a salary of 600l. a year, and a treasurer with a salary not defined, but left to the discretion of the Lords of the Treasury. The Solicitor-General had informed him, since he came into the House, that the number of these courts would not exceed sixty-five. Taking that to be the case, the salaries of the judges and the clerks would amount to 117,000*l.* a year, an immense addition to the patronage now at the disposal of the ministers of the Crown, and quite distinct from the other patronage which they would obtain in the appointment of treasurers, and other officers to be paid by fees. There were several points in the Bill which required amendment; but, as they were points in detail, he would reserve them for consideration in the committee. After stating that he did not consider this measure to be one which would bring cheap justice to every man's door, he declared that it was of too great importance to be proposed and carried in the last week of the session, both on account of the large amount of patronage which it conferred on the Government, and of the great revolution which it would make in the jurisprudence of the country.—Sir G. GREY observed, that although this Bill had originated with the late Government, several alterations had since been made in it; some in its progress through the House of Lords, and others by the present Government. No suggestions had been made to Government for the postponement of this measure, but many representations had been made to it of the importance of passing it into a law in the course of the present session. Lord G. Bentinck had assumed that each judge was to have a salary of 1,200*l.* a year, but that was a misapprehension on his part. The maximum salary was fixed at 1,200*l.* a year; but it did not follow that all the judges were to receive that amount. The question of patronage had been very fully considered. Ministers were of opinion that the patronage should be placed in the hands of the Lord Chancellor, acting under his responsibility as a Minister of the Crown, and subject to the control of public opinion. The question of compensation would be referred to the Treasury, which would apply the definite rules which had been established for its guidance in such cases.—Mr. M. SUTTON stated, that the present Government had made some important changes in this Bill since its first introduction into Parliament. The late government had relieved itself from the responsibility of appointing to so many judgeships at once, by giving the first nomination of them to the lords-lieutenant of counties, and by reserving to itself the power of filling up the subsequent vacancies. Again, by the bill, as originally framed, the judges of the existing courts were to be the first judges of the new courts.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL thought it expedient that the Government should exercise this patronage rather than the lords-lieutenant of counties.—Mr. HENLEY stated that he did not think it wise to place so large an amount of patronage at once in the hands of the Crown.—The House then resolved itself into committee on the Bill. Several clauses were agreed to without discussion; on others certain verbal amendments were made. On the ninth clause considerable discussion took place.—Mr. WAKLEY moved as an amendment, that attorneys as well as barristers should be eligible as judges in these courts.—Sir G. GREY objected to the alteration.—The committee divided, when the amendment was negatived by a majority of 53 over 16 voices.—Colonel T. WOOD then moved as an amendment, "That the judges shall cease to practise as barristers, when they accepted office under this bill."—This amendment was negatived by a majority of 57 over 12 voices. The clause was then agreed to, as were the other clauses up to 15. The chairman then reported progress, and asked leave to sit again on Friday.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE Deodands Abolition Bill has come down to the Commons with the amendments made in it by the Lords, which have received the approval of the Lower House, and the Bill now waits only the royal assent to become law. Nothing calling for special remark has occurred during the week.

THE GAME LAWS IN SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

The following information may perhaps be interesting to some of our readers. It is a copy of a law passed in Sweden, bearing date August 4, 1845, for the preservation of game in Norway. This law restricts the season for shooting; and, as it is not uncommon for English sportsmen to make shooting excursions into that country, they should be acquainted with the state of the law there. Hitherto no law has existed, with the exception of that relating to elks, either with regard to the season of shooting or the species of game shot:—

LAW FOR THE DESTRUCTION OF BIRDS AND BEASTS OF PREY, AND FOR THE PRESERVATION OF GAME.

We, Oscar, by the grace of God King of Norway and Sweden, the Goths and Vandals, maketh known, that there has been laid before us the following resolutions, passed the 12th of July this year, in the Storthing now assembled:—

Section 1.—For the destruction of the undermentioned beasts and birds of prey the following premiums shall be paid:—For every bear, wolf, tiger-cat, lynx, glutton, or wolverine, of whatever age, 3 specie dollars; for eagles (land and sea eagles), 60 skillings, and for mountain owls, 24 skillings; for the young of these birds the same; for hawks, if not killed by firearms, 24 skillings.

Section 2.—The provision from which these premiums are to be paid is to be assessed on the enf (province) in which the animal is slain. And in order to be entitled to the premium, the skin of the slain beast must be exhibited to the foged (sheriff) of the district, or to his deputy, who will cut from the right fore paw the two middle claws. The slain bird of prey is also to be produced, and the claws likewise cut off. To enable the claimants to receive the premium, a certificate or order is to be given gratis.

Section 3.—Elks and stags must in future only be taken from the 1st of August to the 1st of November, and during that time only by the proprietor of the ground, who is allowed to kill one elk and two stags on each separate property he may possess. The restrictions with regard to time and number do not refer to animals found on islands which are private property, or those kept within walled parks.

Section 4.—Wild reindeer must not be killed from the 1st of April to the 1st of August.

Section 5.—For the space of ten years after the promulgation of this law beavers must neither be snared, shot, nor killed, and after the expiration of that period only by the proprietor of the land.

Section 6.—Hares must not be killed from the 1st of June to the 15th of August. No one but the proprietor of the land on his homestead is allowed to follow a hare in the new fallen snow, or in any way whatever hunt, snare, or kill it, even dogs are not used.

Section 7.—The cock and hen capercaillie, black-cocks, and hazel-hens, must not be snared or shot from the 1st of April to the 15th of August. Partridges not from the 1st of December to the 1st of September. With the exception of the provinces of Norway and Finland, no waterfowls used as food (birds of passage excepted) must be shot from the 1st of April to the 15th of July, or be deprived of their eggs after the 1st of June.

Section 8.—The occupier of fast property is entitled, without restriction as to time or number, to snare and kill stags on his homestead, when these animals injure his orchard, meadow, &c.

Section 9.—The violation of this law, inasmuch as a trespass has not only been committed on the rights of the ground proprietor according to section 6, for every snared or slain animal, will render the offender liable to the following fines:—elks, 40 specie dollars; stags and beavers, 20 specie dollars; wild reindeer, 10 specie dollars; hares, 2 specie dollars; and other game, 1 specie dollar; unlawfully depriving the nest of eggs, 60 skilling. Those who sell game which has been killed during the season that is prohibited are liable to the same punishment as those who have killed it.

Section 10.—Suits arising from offences for which punishments are provided by section 9, are to be settled in the police-courts. When information has been lodged for any of the above trespasses, the Inspector of the police or foged (sheriff) is to inquire of the accused if he submits to pay voluntarily the fine imposed by this law, at the same time acquainting him with the amount. Should the accused agree to pay the fine, and the money not be forthcoming, the amount shall be levied on him by execution. Should he deny having committed the trespass, or hesitate coming to an amicable adjustment, the officer will cause the case to be investigated, and, according to circumstances, will adjudge. The fines are to be divided between the informer and the poor-box of the district. If, in addition to an offence against this law, another person's rights in hunting, fishing, or preserves, have been prejudiced, reparation is reserved to him by the usual course of law.

Section 11.—The ordinances of the 8th of May, 1733, section 8, the law of the 22nd of June, 1816, as well as the regulations of the Norwegian law—5, 10, 1—regarding stags, are hereby repealed. As we have approved and confirmed, so we hereby approve and confirm, this resolution as law.

Given at our Palace at Stockholm, the 4th of August, 1845, under our hand and the seal of the kingdom,

OSCAR,
FREDERICK DUK, SCHONBRAC.

The Gazette contains notice that the following places have been duly registered for the solemnisation of marriages therein:—Forton Chapel, Cockerham, Lancashire; St. Andrew's Church, Cambridge; Our Lady's Chapel, Halsall, Lancashire. Lawrence Wright, superintendent registrar.

THE LAWYER.

SUMMARY.

The Insolvent Debtors' Bill has been read a second time, and the Small Debts Bill is now in Committee. It does not yet appear that the suggestions of Mr. KEANE, in his able pamphlet upon the Bill, have been adopted. The proceedings of the Committee and Deputation appointed at the meeting at the Gray's-inn Coffee House, (reported in this journal a fortnight back,) will be found in another column. The death of that learned and eccentric advocate, Sir CHARLES WETHERELL, resulting from an accident, occurred this week; a memoir of him will be found under the head "Necrology." We invite attention to an important judgment delivered by Mr. Commissioner FANE on Friday—Re Taylor—and which appears in our report of the Courts of Bankruptcy and Insolvency.

PARLIAMENTARY EXPENSES OF RAILWAY BILLS.

The following extract from the recently delivered estimate of expenses before the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Railways, gives curious details respecting the Parliamentary expenses attending the passing of Railway Bills. Mr. Robert Stephenson is the witness examined:—"Can you give about the average of the Parliamentary expenses per mile on some of the greatest undertakings with which you have been concerned in this country?—I have known them vary from 800l. to 1,000l. per mile for Parliamentary expenses alone. That must depend entirely on whether it is an opposed line or not?—Yes; what is where. I draw the limits. The London and Birmingham income we will take as about 800,000l. a year; there is about 50 per cent. of that spent in labour and in the materials, but a large proportion in labour. Do you include in the term 'labour' salaries to the clerks and the staff?—From the secretary down to the common porter; the whole staff. There is out of that 400,000l. probably 300,000l. positively paid in labour. If we could get that at the same value as we could labour in Belgium, the company ought to be able to give the public the advantage of that, and lower their fares 150,000l. a year. Do you say that the rate at which a company can carry, depends chiefly on the cost at which the railway is constructed?—Yes, and the traffic upon it. You say, and the traffic which is carried upon it?—Yes. Is it not true, that in general, where there is a very large traffic, the railway is constructed, from the circumstances of the country, at a very heavy expense?—There are cases of that kind. Generally?—Yes. The London and Greenwich; that was constructed at an enormous expense? Yes. And the Dublin and Kingstown at an expense of 100,000l. per mile?—Yes. In Belgium there has been a total absence of Parliamentary expenses?—I believe they are very small; they do not amount to more than 2,000l. or 3,000l. for a bill; and then they were all done by Government. Railroads in more thinly populated countries are constructed at a much smaller expense, than that?—Certainly. But they are obliged to charge higher rates of fares, because they have a smaller traffic?—Clearly."

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Frederick Hancock, of Shipton-on-Stour, in the county of Worcester, gent. and William Bowen, of Stafford, gent. to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Most Hon. Constantine Henry Marquis of Normandy to be her Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the King of the French.

The Queen has also been pleased to appoint the Right Hon. John Viscount Ponsonby, G.C.B. to be her Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Emperor of Austria.

Mr. Milman is appointed to succeed Mr. Secker, now one of the Metropolitan police magistrates, as a revising barrister on the Oxford Circuit.

Mr. Smirke, of the Western Circuit, will succeed Mr. Cockburn as Recorder of Southampton.

IRELAND.—Master Murphy has appointed Edmund B. Lawless, esq. to be counsel to his office in Chancery.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

(From a Correspondent.)

The committee and deputation constituted at the meeting of the Profession at the Gray's-inn Coffee House, have, indeed, proved themselves worthy the thanks of every attorney and solicitor throughout the kingdom. Their labours have been incessant and well-directed, and prove what the Law Institution might do, when an "industrious few" can effect so much.

Not that the Profession, as a body, deserves perhaps even what little has been done for them, for a more apathetic class, in respect to their own interests, never existed. The deputation alluded to have been in attendance at the House of Commons nearly all the last, and during the present week, laying hold of every member whose support they could enlist. On Saturday last they had the honour of an audience with the Attorney and Solicitor-General at the chambers of the latter, when the principal objections to the Bill were discussed. Mr. BETHUNE, counsel for the Houses of Parliament, and by whom the measure has been partly drawn, went very courteously with the deputation through each clause serialim. The unrestrained option to a plaintiff, of being able to sue concurrently in the superior courts for a debt above 5l. has been a fluctuating and doubtful point, and at one time the deputation hoped they had succeeded; but a sudden change having come over the authorities in office, the boon held out at first, was at last denied.

However, for most of the modification of the Bill since it was printed on the 11th instant (and there have been three reprints since then), the Profession are indebted to the Gray's-inn deputation. Mr. F. Herbert, Mr. J. A. Jones, Mr. Scott, Mr. Heathfield, Mr. Curling, Mr. Martin, and Mr. Clarke, have all been indefatigable, and we only wish their example had been followed by the Profession generally, who will deeply regret, when too late, that they did not bestir themselves. If the present measure works well, in ten years we shall have the jurisdiction extended to debts of 50l. and in time the common law practice will be superseded. Short forms for conveyancing will complete the affair, and the Profession of attorney and solicitor be but a beggarly calling, with this aggravation, that its ruin has been in a great measure brought about by the apathy and indifference exhibited by its own members. [We do not partake of the gloomy anticipations of the future, which our correspondent expresses; at the same time we agree with him, that were the Profession more united, and awake to their own interests, they would not be sufferers to the extent they now are.—ED. L. T.]

A new law on criminal procedure has just been promulgated in Prussia, the principal provisions of which are as follow:—"The accused will appear in person before his judges, and the proceedings will be oral. No means of constraint will be used to compel him to confess the crime of which he is accused. He will have the free choice of a counsel, and in case the crime be of a nature to lead to a punishment more severe than an imprisonment of three years, he will have a right to demand from the Court the appointment of a defender. The tribunal will only apply the sentence specified by the law. In the event of the Court finding extenuating circumstances, it will have the power of mitigating the sentence of death to imprisonment for life, and the sentence of perpetual imprisonment to a shorter term. Sentences will no longer be required to be submitted to the approval of the Minister of Justice. A prisoner acquitted of a charge cannot again be tried for the same offence, even should fresh proofs against him be afterwards discovered; but prisoners acquitted under reservation may be again tried for the same offence, but that only within a certain time prescribed by the law. Persons interested in the cause may be present at the trial, but those not interested must immediately leave the Court if called on to do so by the tribunal or by the prisoner under trial."—[We gave some particulars on this head, but less copious, in the last number of the LAW TIMES.]

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

FEES FROM MISDEMEANANTS, TAKEN BY CLERKS OF THE PEACE AND CLERKS OF ASSIZE.

Abstract of a Return of all Fees or Payments whatsoever, taken or demanded from defendants in misdemeanor, by the clerks of the peace and clerks of assize at the four last quarter sessions, and at all the assizes which have been held in the present year [1845] respectively.—Ordered by the House of Commons.

[The total amounts only are given, not the receipts at each quarter sessions.—EDS.]

ENGLAND.

Bucks.—Fees demanded, 31. 19s. 3d.; fees taken, 31. 19s. 2d.

Cambridge.—Fees demanded, 31. 11s. 6d.; fees taken, 31. 11s. 6d. No fees were taken or demanded at the three last quarter sessions.

Chester.—Fees demanded, 16s.; fees taken, 16s. No fees whatever have been demanded or taken from defendants in misdemeanor at the four last quarter sessions, except a sum of 16s. from the inhabitants of the hundred of Macclesfield, upon an indictment for not repairing a hundred bridge. Under the provisions of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 50, fees amounting to 46l. 17s. 4d. have been received from the treasurer of the county, being those demandable (although not actually demanded) from defendants, and on their acquittal payable by the county.

Cornwall.—Fees demanded 26l. 17s. 4d.; fees taken, 51. 6s. 8d. The only other fees or payments taken or demanded from defendants were for subpoenas and testificandum, of which the clerk of the peace has kept no particular account.

Cumberland.—Fees demanded 31. 5s. 6d.; fees taken, 31. 5s. 6d. No fees were taken or demanded at three of the quarter sessions.

Devon.—Fees demanded, 15l. 10s. 4d.; fees taken, 15l. 10s. 4d.

Dorset.—Fees demanded, 10l. 14s.; fees taken, 51. 11s. 4d.

Essex.—Fees demanded, 11. 5s.; fees taken, 11. 5s. No fees were taken or demanded at three of the quarter sessions.

Gloucester.—Fees demanded, 50l. 18s. 6d.; fees taken, 48l. 15s. 8d. Most of the defendants being in indifferent circumstances, small amounts only were taken from each; the gross amounts demanded are not stated in the return.

Kent.—Fees demanded, 41. 16s. 2d.; fees taken, 31. 16s. 2d.

Lancaster.—Fees demanded, 69l. 13s. 10d.; fees taken, 61. 8s. 2d.

Lincoln.—Holland division, fees demanded, 21. 9s. 8d.; fees taken, 10s.; Kesteven division, fees demanded, 17. 11s. 6d.; total, fees demanded, 41. 1s. 2d. fees taken, 10s.

Middlesex.—Fees demanded, 25l. 1d.; fees taken, 24l. 3s. 5d. The clerk of the peace demands and receives on behalf of the clerk of the court 4d. for taking or discharging every common recognizance, and accounts to him for the same. There have been a few additional cases in which subpoenas and copies have been issued, or copies of depositions have been made at the regular charges, but the clerk of the peace is unable to state whether they were cases of felony or misdemeanor. There are general sessions of the peace in Middlesex, not being general quarter sessions; but misdemeanors are tried equally at both sessions.

Nottingham.—Fees demanded, 2l. 8s. 8d.; fees taken, 2l. 8s. 8d. No fees were taken or demanded at three of the quarter sessions.

Salop.—Fees demanded, 1l. 5s.; fees taken, 1l. 5s. No fees were taken or demanded at three of the quarter sessions.

Somerset.—Fees demanded, 69l. 15s.; fees taken, 69l. 15s.

Southampton.—Fees demanded, 89l. 1s. 4d.; fees taken, 89l. 1s. 4d.

Stafford.—Fees demanded, 1l. 18s. 4d.; fees taken, 1l. 18s. 4d.

Surrey.—Fees demanded, 4l. 5s.; fees taken, 4l. 5s. In five cases the acquittal fee of 5s. was not demanded.

Wills.—Fees demanded, 14l. 12s. 6d.; fees taken, 12l. 7s. 6d.

York (East Riding).—Fees demanded, 5s.; fees taken, 5s. No fees were taken or demanded at three of the quarter sessions.

Total, England.—Fees demanded, 408l. 19s. 5d.; fees taken, 309l. 14s. 9d.

WALES.

Brecon.—Fees demanded, 2l. 10s.; fees taken, 2l. 10s.

Carmarvon.—Fees demanded, 7s. 6d.; fees taken, 7s. 6d. No fees were taken or demanded at three of the quarter sessions.

Denbigh.—Fees demanded, 7l. 5s.; fees taken, 7l. 5s. No fees were taken or demanded at three of the quarter sessions.

Total, Wales.—Fees demanded, 10l. 2s. 6d.; fees taken, 10l. 2s. 6d.

Total, Counties.—Fees demanded, 419l. 1s. 11d.; fees taken, 319l. 17s. 3d.

BOROUGHES.

Bath.—Fees demanded, 18s. 6d.; fees taken, 18s. 6d.

Bolton.—Fees demanded, 1l. 6s. 4d.; fees taken, 1l. 6s. 4d. No fees were taken or demanded at three of the quarter sessions.

Canterbury.—Fees demanded, 1l. 2s. 6d.; fees taken, 1l. 2s. 6d.

Doncaster.—Fees demanded, 7s.; fees taken, 7s. No fees were taken or demanded at three of the quarter sessions.

Gloucester.—Fees demanded, 1l. 1s.; fees taken, 1l. 1s.

Leeds.—Fees demanded, 3l. 1s.; fees taken, 3l. 1s.

Liverpool.—Fees demanded, 9s.; fees taken, 9s. No fees were taken or demanded at three of the quarter sessions.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—Fees demanded, 17s. 6d.; fees taken, 7s.

Penzance.—Fees demanded, 2s. 6d.; fees taken, 2s. 6d. No fees were taken or demanded at three of the quarter sessions.

Southampton.—Fees demanded, 2l. 8s.; fees taken, 2l. 8s.

Worcester.—Fees demanded, 17s.; fees taken, 17s.

Total, Boroughs.—Fees demanded, 12l. 11s. 4d.; fees taken, 12l. 10d.

RETURNS FROM CLERKS OF ASSIZE.

Homes Circuit.—Fees demanded, 54l. 7s. 4d.; fees taken, 54l. 7s. 4d. In addition to these fees, fees for subpoenas and for copies of depositions may have been taken of defendants in cases of misdemeanor; but being small in amount, the clerk of assize has made no memorandum relating to them, probably not amounting to 1l. in the whole.

Midland Circuit.—Fees demanded, 58l. 3s. 8d.; fees taken, 26l. 9s. Of these fees about 3l. were taken from individuals, and the remainder from parishes under indictments for non-repair of highways.

Norfolk Circuit.—Fees demanded, 7l. 7s. 4d.; fees taken, 7l. 7s. 4d. These fees were received from the inhabitants of a parish, upon an indictment against them for the non-repair of a road.

Northern Circuit.—Fees demanded, 10l. 4d.; fees taken, 10l. 4d.

Oxford Circuit.—Fees demanded, 75l. 10s. 4d.; fees taken, 68l. 15s. 4d.

Western Circuit.—Fees demanded, 20l. 2s. 4d.; fees taken, 20l. 2s. 4d.

North Wales and Chester.—Fees demanded, 2l. 3s. 2d.; fees taken, 2l. 3s. 2d.

South Wales Circuit.—Fees demanded, 8l. 4s. 4d.; fees taken, 8l. 4s. 4d.

County Palatine of Lancaster.—Fees demanded, 1l. 4s. 6d.; fees taken, 1l. 4s. 6d.

Total, Assizes.—Fees demanded, 246l. 2s. 4d.; fees taken, 207l. 13s. 8d.

SUMMARY OF TOTAL AMOUNT OF FEES.

Counties, England and Wales.—Demanded, 419l. 1s. 11d.; Taken, 319l. 17s. 3d.

Boroughs.—Demanded, 12l. 11s. 4d.; taken, 12l. 10d.

Assizes.—Demanded, 246l. 2s. 4d.; taken, 207l. 13s. 8d.

Grand Total.—Demanded, 677l. 15s. 7d.; taken, 539l. 11s. 9d.

POOR LAW IN IRELAND.—The Poor-Law Commissioners, in their 12th report, state that they are enabled to report favourably of the progress of the Poor Relief Act in Ireland since the date of their last report. They then state that in four unions no rate had been made, and that the number of unions in which the workhouses still remained unopened was twelve. The only union in which no rate had been made at the commencement of the present month was the Clifden Union, the guardians of which had recently, at their urgent request, determined to open the workhouses and to make a rate. The total expenditure for the year ended December last, in 123 unions in which workhouses were opened, was 316,026l. and the number of paupers relieved 114,205. The average weekly cost per head of maintenance and clothing of the inmates of workhouses, for the half-year ended September, was 1s. 8d. The amount expended in vaccination in Ireland during the first half-year (March), in 108 unions, was 1,553l. 3s. 11d. and during the second half-year (September), in 112 unions, 1,813l. 8s. 2d. The Commissioners declare that the financial state of the unions has never been more satisfactory than at the present time. The Commissioners refer with satisfaction to the progress which has been made during the past year in the building of fever hospitals in connection with the workhouses. By a return made to the House of Lords during this session it appeared that the number of fever patients relieved in the workhouses, or in houses hired by the guardians, within twelve months ended the 31st July last, was 8,216; the number being exclusive of those sent to hospitals. Of 50 fever wards it appears that at the date of the report (1st May inst.) the number actually in occupation was 16; the number completed in addition, 6; the number in progress of building, 14; and the number determined upon, but not then begun, 14—making a total of 50.

TAXES IN GREAT BRITAIN.—A Parliamentary paper has been issued, giving an account of the gross receipt and net produce of the revenue from taxes in Great Britain, for each year ending on the 5th of January from 1836 to the 5th of January, 1846, distinguishing the amount collected under each head of duty, and also the amount of payments made out of the gross receipts in each year. For the year ending the 5th of January, 1837, it seems that the gross receipt was 3,226,550l. 16s. 6d. and the net produce 3,921,505l. 13s. 8d. The payments out of the gross receipt were 224,242l. 3s. 7d. In 1838, the gross receipt was 3,895,342l. 1s. 9d. and the net produce 3,890,146l. 6s. 0d. Payments out of the gross receipt 211,533l. 5s. 2d. In 1839 the gross receipt was 3,907,964l. 12s. 11d. and the net produce 3,903,065l. 13s. 9d. Payments out of the gross receipt 254,635l. 7s. 2d. In 1840 the gross receipt was 3,939,107l. 6s. 2d. and the net produce 3,932,689l. 9s. 5d. The payments out of the gross receipt were 214,361l. 13s. 9d. In 1841 the gross receipt was 4,157,422l. 16s. 11d. and the net produce 4,152,287l. 15s. 3d. The payments out of the gross receipt were 212,828l. 11s. 1d. In 1842 the gross receipt was 4,720,457l. 5s. 4d. and the net produce 4,715,358l. 8s. 0d. The payments out of the gross receipts were 224,028l. 10s. 5d. In 1843 the gross receipt was 5,072,462l. 17s. 10d. and the net produce 5,067,448l. 6s. 0d. The payments out of the gross receipt were 239,265l. 13s. 1d. In 1844 the gross receipt was 9,772,523l. 7s. 4d. The payments out of the gross receipt were 294,626l. 14s. 6d. In 1845 the gross receipt was 9,881,843l. 0s. 5d. and the net produce 9,759,470l. 18s. 1d. The payments out of the gross receipt were 363,630l. 17s. 0d. And in 1846 the gross receipt was 9,752,663l. 18s. 11d. and the net produce 9,624,396l. 17s. 11d. The payments out of the gross receipt were 370,432l. 11s. 7d. The property and income-tax in the year ended the 5th of January, 1845, only yielded (net) 582,656l. 17s. 11d. whilst in the year following it yielded 5,387,455l. 9s. 11d.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—By a return presented to Parliament, is shewn the state of the several funds standing in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, and the charges upon the same. Out of the Suits' Fund various salaries and expenses were paid, making, in the year ending on the 1st of October last, 99,524l. 1s. 4d. leaving a balance on that day in cash of 11,933l. 19s. 1d. and in stock 3,424,811l. 5s. 9d. The payments on the Suits' Fee Fund account, in salaries and compensations, amounted in the year, to the 24th of November last, to 139,439l. 0s. 2d. and the excess of charges above fees was 4,564l. 3s. 1d. The fees received in the Masters' offices in the year reached as much as 36,546l. 7s. 4d.

WINE AND SPIRITS.—The number of gallons of wine imported and retained for home consumption during the year 1845, were as follows:—Cap. 357,793; French, 443,330; Portugal, 2,688,084; Spanish, 2,554,877; Madeira, 102,746; Rhine, 62,519; Canary, 20,260; Foyat, 69; Sicilian and other sorts, 506,454. The total number of gallons in bond in London and other places on the 5th January, 1846, was 10,230,946. The number of gallons of spirits imported and retained for home consumption during 1845 were of—Rum, 2,469,135; Brandy, 1,058,274; Geneva, 15,504; other foreign and colonial spirits, 6,907; spirits mixed in bond, 9; spirit of the Channel Islands, 50,965. The total number of gallons in bond on the 5th January, 1846, was 5,917,399.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I fully agree with you in the remarks on the Small Debts Bill, which appeared in Saturday's LAW TIMES. Very many of the country attorneys are glad to have some alteration in the present discreditable, dilatory, and costly system of recovering small debts, more particularly that prevailing in the country county courts, and other prescriptive small courts, however crude and amateur-like the present Bill may be. I have myself a mixed practice, and, from painful experience, I often counsel a client against attempting to recover a small debt, not only on account of the legitimate expense, but for fear of the "sharks," who are ever hovering around these courts for defences and plunder.

The attorneys cannot but be helpless in Parliament, when we find such want of energy, such dissension and jealousies prevailing among them. The day of reckoning and thinning of the almost countless and increasing ranks is fast approaching, as, amongst other causes, the community is becoming too wise to be forced into needless litigation. I am, &c.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

A correspondent puts the following query, and solicits a reply from some of his professional brethren:—

Whether it is prudent, in a transfer of mortgage, where no further money is advanced, to make the mortgagor enter into fresh covenants, provisos, &c. with the new mortgagee; but if it be not safer merely to take an assignment of the interest, covenants, &c. of the first mortgagee, I have some doubts whether the ad valorem duty for the entire sum would not attach as for a fresh security, when there are fresh covenants.

THE INNS OF COURT, AND EDUCATION FOR THE BAR.

It remains, no doubt, still in the memory of our readers, that the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple, in the early part of this year, made an announcement, through our columns and in other ways, of their having determined upon founding a Lectureship on Civil Law and General Jurisprudence, and endowing exhibitions of liberal amount, as an inducement to the cultivation of those neglected but useful sciences. In our comment upon the able Report of the Committee of Benchers who recommended the adoption of this important and most valuable measure, we expressed a hope, and have since more than once repeated it, that the three other Inns of Court would act in concert with the Middle Temple, establish Readerships of their own, and give prizes for merit like that Society; and, more sanguine still, we wished, and did not despair, to see a great Legal University erected by the combination of the four Inns, which have stood isolated, or nearly so, as regards each other, up to the period when the Benchers of the Middle Temple first promulgated their views and intentions on the subject of Legal Education to the world.

The first and most ardent of our desires, we are pleased to say, has been concurred in by the Benchers of the Inner Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Grays' Inn, who have resolved upon following the example of the Middle Temple, by themselves founding lectureships on some branch of the law; and it remains to be seen whether the other hope we entertained will not be eventually fulfilled, and we shall have a great Law University established in London. The promptness and earnestness with which the subject has been taken up, and the liberal conduct of the Honourable Societies who have thus answered to the call of the Middle Temple, while they do honour to the principles which actuate those learned bodies, prove also the inefficiency of the voluntary mode of Legal Education which to this time has obtained, and the consequent necessity there existed for the measures which have now been adopted.

To the exertions of Mr. BETHELL, who, if he did not first see the need for a change, certainly was the earliest who had the courage and industry to endeavour to effect it, we are indebted for the gratifying resolutions which the Inns of Court have passed. Heartily does he deserve the thanks—and something more than mere thanks, not only of every student preparing for the Bar, and who wishes to qualify himself for the duties which he aspires at a future time to perform, but of the entire body of the Legal Profession, for its higher cannot be improved, without benefit also to its lower branch.

As further on we shall give a formal announcement of the result which followed the conferences of the four Honourable Societies, on the subject of Legal Education, we think it due to Mr. BETHELL first to make known the several suggestions which he submitted for their consideration; and it is gratifying to find in the minutes of the proceedings of the Honourable Societies (which we subjoin), that all the material points of his well-considered suggestions have been adopted. The following are Mr. BETHELL's proposals as given in the Law Review :—

1. That four readerships be established in addition to the readership on jurisprudence and the civil law already established by the Middle Temple; namely, a reader on constitutional and criminal law; a reader on the law of real property; a reader on the law of personal property and commercial law; and a reader on equity jurisprudence as administered in the Court of Chancery. Of these it is suggested that the reader on the law of real property be founded and endowed by the four societies conjointly; and the three other chairs by Lincoln's Inn, the Inner Temple, and Gray's Inn.

2. That the lectures of the several readers do commence in Michaelmas Term next.

3. That a standing committee or council be established, to consist of twelve members: three to be nominated by each of the four Inns of Court; of whom five shall be a quorum, and four go out of office annually. To this committee shall be intrusted the duty of making all such regulations as shall be necessary for completing the details of several measures which are hereby recommended.

4. That the lectures of the several readers shall be open to the students and barristers of all the societies, subject to the payment of such terminal fees to the several readers as the standing committee shall direct.

5. That a public examination shall be established, to be held three times a year, for the examination of all such students as shall be desirous of submitting thereto previously to being called to the Bar; and such examination shall be conducted by the five readers; and a standard of merit, as the condition of being entitled to the honours to be conferred and receiving the exhibitions to be distributed, shall be fixed by the committee; to which, if no student shall attain, no honour shall be awarded, nor shall any exhibition be adjudged; but the names of all the examinees who shall rise above the said standard of merit, shall be ranked in the order and according to the degrees of their respective attainments.

6. That the examinations be held three times in every year; namely, Hilary Term, Trinity Term, and Michaelmas Term.

7. That, as the examinations are intended solely for such students as are candidates for honours and rewards, no student shall be admitted as an examinee who shall not have diligently attended the lectures of three of the readers during one year; and of which readers, one shall be the reader on the law of real property.

8. That from and after Michaelmas Term, 1847, no student shall be eligible to be called to the Bar who shall not have attended during one whole year the lectures of any two of the readers; of which, the reader on real property shall be one.

9. That every student who shall have attended during one whole year the lectures of any two of the five readers (the reader on real property law being one), shall have the same privileges in point of admission to the Bar as are now allowed by any of the societies in favour of graduates of the English universities.

10. That exhibitions be founded by the several societies of Lincoln's Inn, the Inner Temple, and Gray's Inn, of the same number and amount as have been already established by the Middle Temple; and as there is reason to hope that a ninth exhibition may be added, it is trusted that the societies will be in a condition to award three exhibitions of one hundred guineas each at every one of the three public examinations, if a fitting standard of merit shall be attained to.

11. That every means be adopted for giving honourable notoriety to the names of those students who shall be deemed worthy of honours and rewards at each public examination; and that every encouragement be held out to the students to induce them to submit to the examinations.

12. That the standing council shall have power of granting dispensation to any students who shall have been prevented by inevitable accident from complying in all respects with the regulations as to attendance, &c., which shall be established.

Deputations from each committee of the several Inns of Court met at the Inner Temple, and the result of their conference is given in the following minutes. The resolutions then passed we hear have since been confirmed by the respective committees.—

Minutes of the result of the conferences of the deputations from the committees of each of the Inns of Court on the subject of Legal Education as approved the 3rd of June, 1846.

The deputations from the committees appointed by the several Inns of Court to consider the subject of legal education, have communicated together, and are of opinion that the following propositions should be offered for adoption to their respective societies.

That it is expedient to institute rewards, or honours, or both, by way of encouragement to students who may be willing to undergo examinations.

That for the purpose of preparing the students for such examinations, there should be established four lectureships in addition to that on civil law and general jurisprudence already established by the Middle Temple.

That the subjects of the additional lectures should be :—

1. Constitutional law, criminal and other crown law.
2. The law of real property and conveyancing, devises and bequests.
3. Those branches of the common law which are not included in the two last heads.
4. Equitable jurisprudence as administered in the Court of Chancery.

That the lectureship for constitutional law, criminal and other crown law, should be maintained at the joint expense of the four Societies.

That the lectureship of civil law and general jurisprudence, should be maintained, as now, at the sole expense of the Middle Temple.

And that the other three lectureships should be maintained at the expense of the three other Societies respectively,—one for each, as shall be hereafter arranged among themselves.

That no examination should be required of any student as a condition precedent to his call to the bar.

That every student should be required, as a condition precedent of his call to the bar, to produce a certificate of his having attended two of the courses of lectures, the selection to be determined by himself.

In this co-operation of the four Inns of Court, and particularly in the circumstance of their uniting to endow a lectureship for constitutional and criminal law, at their joint expense, we believe we see the foreshadowing of a great Faculty of Law for this country; it seems to us the first hearty concurrence and really serviceable connection of these learned bodies to effectuate a great and lasting benefit to our common profession; and we see no reason whatever why such a University should not be chartered to grant degrees in Civil Law in the same manner as at Oxford and Cambridge—a consummation we devoutly wish to see accomplished.

THREE Numbers of the Reports—namely, No. XXI. Criminal Law Cases; No. XXII. Magistrates' Cases; and No. XVIII. Practice Cases, are in a forward state of preparation, and will be issued in a few days. The Small Debts Bill will be published, with full Notes and Comments, by Mr. PATERSON, with all practicable despatch after it receives the royal assent.

A COURSE OF LECTURES ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS.

BY PROFESSOR CAREY.

Delivered at the University College.

LECTURE XV.

We now proceed to consider the cases in which the goods are left on the premises of the seller. These cases may be described under the following heads :—

First, where the goods are in a warehouse, and the keys of the warehouse are delivered to the buyer. There the delivery of the keys is a transfer of the corporeal power. It is true that the buyer may not be able to exercise this corporeal power, except under certain conditions, but what is more important is, that by the giving up the keys, the seller parts with the corporeal power, he cannot have the goods without committing a trespass. There are one or two cases which bear upon this point. Where goods are locked up in a warehouse, and the key is given to you, that is a delivery to you, though there be another door to go through to the warehouse of which you have not the key, to which you have no right to go (and I think there is a case nearly on this point, that under such circumstances you have not necessarily a right to go upon the land, and if you go against the will of the owner, you are a trespasser), nevertheless the goods are yours.

Secondly, where there has been a delivery, whether by transmutation from hand to hand, or otherwise. It is clear the delivery is not affected by any subsequent delivery of the goods, if, after they have once come into his possession, the buyer leaves the goods with the person of whom he bought them; this is a perfectly independent transaction, having no relation to a contract of sale; it differs in no respect from the case of one who is the owner of the goods leaving them with a stranger. That was the case of Elmore v. Stone, 1 Taunt. So where, by any act of the parties, the man who sold the goods is treated as a mere third person, this has been held either to amount in itself to a delivery, or to be evidence from which the delivery may be inferred. For instance, a man buys a stack of hay, and leaves it in the yard of the man of whom he bought it; he afterwards cuts a part of it and takes it away, or he sells part of it to a third person, who cuts it and takes away the part so sold to him: here the whole stack has been held to have been the seller's. It was said, in Chaplin v. Rogers, 1 East, 195, "the buyer dealt with the commodity as if it was actually in his possession." The payment of warehouse rent is another act of the same kind. (Mill v. Gwentley, 4 Tyrwhitt, 275.) The effect of the warehouse rent depends upon the circumstances; if it is part of the original bargain that the warehouse rent shall not be paid till the goods are taken away, the rent so agreed to be taken might be considered as constituting only a part of the price. I give 100l. for goods, and 10s. a week for warehouse rent until they are delivered. But if, after a sale has been effected for 100l. instead of the actual delivery taking place, the parties agree that the goods shall be kept in the warehouse of the seller at a warehouse rent, by this act the seller may be turned into a warehouseman, and this will amount to a delivery; he will hold them then as the goods of another person. (Hurry v. Mangles, 1 Campb. 452.) So where the thing sold has been marked by the buyer, and then left with the seller, here the marking of the goods may be merely for the purpose of identifying the articles, or it may be merely that the seller has allowed the buyer to treat them as if in his actual possession; the act of marking is in itself ambiguous, and the effect of it appears to be, not so much a question of law as a question of fact, depending on the circumstances of the case and the intention of the parties. (Dixon v. Yates, 5 B. & Ald. 313; Townley v. Crump, 4 A. & E. 58.) The delivery of part may operate as the delivery of the whole; for instance, if ten barrels are in the custody of a warehouseman, and are sold, a delivery order for two, if acted upon, is no delivery of the other eight; if there is a delivery order for all the ten, and two are sent to the warehouseman, and two are actually taken, that is a delivery of all. Part delivery is an equivocal act that depends on the intention of the parties; delivery of part with a view to delivery of the rest is an inchoate delivery of all; delivery of part with intent to separate that part from the rest, is only a delivery of that part. (Bunney v. Poyntz, 4 B. & Ad. 569.) The effect of delivery in the case of transmutation from hand to hand, is evident with respect to the thing itself; it is no longer in the possession of the old owner; it is in the possession of the new owner; he can deal with it as any other thing that is his; the old owner has no more right to deal with it than any other thing that is not his. The buyer is liable for the price, either immediately, or (if credit has been given) at the expiration of the credit; the seller has no longer any hold upon the goods, and he can look only to the buyer personally; supposing the things delivered to be not according to the bargain, then the consequences result which I have already explained in speaking of validity; the principles are the same, and the application very little varied, when, instead of being a sale of specific articles, it is a general sale of the goods.

In the course of our inquiries into the effect of contracts of sale, I have pointed out the principal rules relating to the vesting of property of the thing sold in the purchaser. One very important effect of such vesting of the property I adverted to incidentally, namely, that any increase or diminution in the value of the property is the gain or the loss of the owner. If the property rises in value, the owner has the benefit of it; if it falls in value, if any accident happens to it, if it is damaged and perishes, the owner must bear the loss; hence it follows that where a sale has been completed, when the property in the goods sold has been transferred, when they have ceased to be the goods of the seller, and become the goods of the buyer, the chance of profit and the risk of loss are also transferred. When the property is vested in the purchaser, if the thing perishes the loss is his, and he is bound still to pay the price. Noy's Maxims, 42:—"If a man sells a horse for money he may keep it until it is paid for, yet the property of the horse is by the bargain in the buyer, and if the horse die in the vendor's stable between the bargain and delivery, he may have an action of debt for the money, because by the bargain the property was in the buyer. If goods are sold, and the sale is completed, and afterwards the goods, whilst remaining with the seller, are accidentally destroyed by fire, the purchaser is still liable for the price; the goods became his at the time of the bargain, and having so become his, any accident, subsequent to that, he must abide by: and, on the same principle, for any damage that is done he is the party to sue. In the law of Scotland, the result is the same. If an agreement is made, but the sale is not completed, the goods are still the goods of the seller, and he must bear the loss; here the sale is still incomplete (2 Bl. Comm. 451). And where the quantity has not been supplied from the common mass, or where the price has reference to weight or measurement, or while the bargain is in reference to some test or criterion not yet applied, the risk then is not with the seller; and if the goods have perished, he has no claim for the price. The same rule applies where an order has been given for goods to be made; if in the progress of making the goods perish, the man who has to make them would have to begin over again; if after they are made, and have become in any way appropriated to the person for whom they were made, then if they perish the loss is his. The law in Scotland is different in this respect—it follows the law of Rome; by the completion of a contract the property does not pass, it passes only by delivery; but if the sale, according to the language of the Scotch law, is complete, there is a contract to deliver the thing sold in specie, and the results of it are nearly the same with respect to the vesting of the property.

We now come to the discussion of another subject, to which reference has occasionally been made in the course of these lectures. We have seen (except where goods have been sold on credit), the buyer has no right to the possession, until he has paid the price: until he has paid, the seller has the right to detain them; this right is frequently called a lien. A lien is the right to hold the goods of another, until he is paid what he claims for them. If cloth is sent to a tailor to be made into a coat, there is a lien on the coat for the price of making it. A seller is frequently said to have a lien on the thing sold for the price; it is similar to the right of lien. It is, however, said not to be correctly described as a lien, but to be a right springing from the original right of ownership—a remnant of the right of ownership. But besides this right of detaining goods, or the lien, as it is sometimes called, the seller has a still further right. If the purchaser becomes insolvent at any time before the goods come into his actual or constructive possession, the seller has a right to stop them; this is termed the right of stoppage in transitu.

Stoppage in transitu appears to be inconsistent with the ancient principles of the common law; the property by a sale, or delivery to a carrier, has become vested in the purchaser; the seller has no further control over the goods, as far as relates to the effect of the sale; the goods are vested absolutely in the buyer; the seller has a claim for the price. From this hardship the vendor appears to have some relief in the Court of Equity. The hardship is this; you send goods to a man who ordered them; if before they came into his possession he is a bankrupt, the assignees get the whole of the goods, and you have to come in and prove your debt under the bankruptcy, and get your dividend of perhaps one shilling in the pound. One of the earliest cases is Painore v. Leighton, 2 Vern. 203. Two merchants of Leghorn consigned some silk to Bonnells, merchants in London; while the ship was still in port, or sailing, intelligence arrived of the failure of Bonnells. It appears that some Italian merchants altered the consignment, and instead of sending the goods to the Bonnells, they sent them to one Vandeput. A bill was filed in Chancery against Vandeput, by the assignees of the Bonnells; an action of trover was directed to be brought, in order to ascertain whether, by the first consignment, the property had been vested in the Bonnells; the jury found that it had been vested in them; the Court of Chancery, however, adjudged that the Bonnells having paid no money for the goods, if the Italians could by any means get them into their hands, or prevent them coming into the hands of the Bonnells, it was but lawful for them so to do, and very allowable in equity. In this case, the goods, under ordinary circumstances, supposing there to have been no bankruptcy, would have become (and did become, except for what occurred,) the property of the bankrupt; nevertheless, the seller was allowed to stop them, and so send them to somebody else. Supposing these parties to have remained solvent, and at the time when this act of stoppage took place an accident had occurred to waste or destroy the goods, the Bonnells would have been liable for the price; they would have been in the same situation that Dunn was in the case of Richardson v. Dunn. Supposing any accident had happened to them by the negligence of the owner of the vessel, an action would have been brought against the owner of the vessel by the Bonnells, as the property was in them; nevertheless, the goods not having come into their possession, the former holder was allowed to take hold of the property, and to give it another direction to the house of Vandeput. This principle was subsequently acted upon by Lord Chancellor Hardwicke in Smee v. Prescott, 1 Atkins, 245:—"If the defendant got the goods back again by any means, provided he did not steal them, I would not blame him." The same doctrine (that is to say the doctrine of stoppage in transitu) has since been adopted in the courts of common law, and was frequently enforced by Lord Mansfield:—"No point is more clear," says he, "than if the goods are sold, and the price has not been paid, the seller may stop them in transitu, I mean in the ordinary sort of passage into the hands of the buyer. There have been a hundred cases of this sort (ships in harbour have been stopped in port) where the goods are in transitu the seller has the proprietary lien." It is there called a "proprietary lien." I have hitherto termed it a "right only to stop the goods." There are two cases frequently referred to, Levy v. Cuff (quoted in Lichbarow v. Mason), 2 T. R. 66; and Stokes v. Riviere, 3 East, 181. This power of stoppage is not a privilege to be exercised according to the discretion of the seller; it exists only where the purchaser is insolvent, or becomes insolvent before the goods are delivered into his possession. It was said by Sir William Scott, in the case of the Consentia, 6 Rob. 321, "If the person to whom these goods are consigned is not insolvent, but from misinformation or excess of caution the party has exercised the right prematurely, he has assumed a right that did not belong to him, and the consignee will be entitled to the delivery of the goods, with an indemnification for the expenses he may have incurred. In the law of England, so far as I have looked at it, and in all the books which I have read, it is not an unlimited power that is vested in the consignor to vary the consignment at his pleasure, in all cases whatsoever; but it is a privilege allowed to the seller, for the particular purpose of protecting himself against the insolvency of the consignee. It is not necessary, however, that the person should be actually insolvent at the time when the stoppage takes place. If the insolvency happens before the arrival of the goods, it will be sufficient; and will be sufficient, I conceive, to justify what had been done, and to entitle the stopper to the benefit of his own provisional caution. But if the person is not insolvent, the ground is not laid on which such a privilege is founded."

It was rather argued in a recent case that non-payment might, under certain circumstances, justify the goods being stopped, after they were on their way; that point did not quite arise in Witham v. Bowker. The insolvency of the person to whom the goods have been sent does not of itself produce any effect upon the bargain; it only gives the vendor a right of stoppage, which he may exercise if he chooses. If he fails to exercise it, and consequently the goods come into the possession of the insolvent, then the vendor must be content to stand in the same situation as the rest of the creditors. In order to exercise this right, it is not necessary that he should make an actual seizure; it is sufficient to give notice of his claim to the person who has the goods in his possession. One of the most difficult questions in point of form is to ascertain whether the transitus be still continuing, or is at an end; whether the goods are on their road, or have reached their final destination. They are considered to be in transitu as long as the person in whose possession they are can be deemed a middleman between the two parties, whether carrier, wharfinger, or warehouseman. And it is immaterial whether the carrier has been appointed by the purchaser or not; for though he may be his agent, he is the agent to carry, not to finally receive and appropriate; by whomsoever he is employed, he is merely the vehicle between the seller and the buyer. (Mills v. Ball, 2 Bos. & P. 457.) There, "A, living at N, in Devonshire, ordered goods of B in London, who sent them by ship via Exeter, consigned to A, and advised him thereof. On their arrival at Exeter, they were delivered to C, a wharfinger, who received them on A's account, and paid the freight and charges; after their arrival A wrote to B informing him that in consequence of his affairs being deranged, he should not take the goods, and telling him that they were at Exeter; at this time A. had committed an act of bankruptcy, upon which he was afterwards declared a bankrupt. B applied to C for the goods, and tendered him the freight and charges due; upon which C promised not to deliver them out of his custody, but afterwards did deliver them to the assignees of A, though indemnified by B. Held, 1st, that B had a right to stop the goods in the hands of C; and, 2ndly, that he might maintain trover for them against C. "The question is," says Lord Alvanley, "whether the goods in the hands of the wharfinger were in such a situation that the vendors could stop them. The cases cited for the plaintiffs have established that where there is a contract for the sale of goods, and a delivery has been made to a middleman, who is merely the vehicle between the buyer and seller, the latter, in case of the insolvency of the former, may stop them at any time before they have arrived in such a state as to be in the actual or constructive possession of the buyer. The only question is, whether these goods are to be considered as having been in the hands of a middleman, or as having been taken in the possession of the person for whom they were ultimately intended? If, in the course of the conveyance of the goods from the vendor to the vendee, the latter be allowed to exercise any act of ownership over them, he thereby reduces the goods into possession, and puts an end to the vendor's right to stop them. So, though it has been said that the right of stoppage continues until the goods have arrived at their journey's end, yet if the vendee meet them upon the road and take them into his own possession, the goods will then have arrived at their journey's end, with reference to the right of stoppage. I am of opinion that the wharfinger in this case not having been employed by the vendee, is to be considered as a middleman." But if a man, to use the words of Chambers, J. be in the habit of using the warehouse of a wharfinger, or other middleman as his own, and make it a depository of goods, and disposes of them there, the journey will be at an end when the goods have arrived at such warehouse. (Richardson v. Goss, 3 Bos. & P. 119; Scott v. Pettit, 3 Bos. & P. 469). The question generally in these cases is, were goods ordered to be sent? The principle is, that the transitus is not at an end until the goods have reached the place named by the buyer to the seller, as the place of their destination, unless he himself takes them out of his possession. To take the case I have been reading (Bos. & P.), if the order had been given to a man in these terms, "send me the goods to be delivered to me at the warehouse of so and so at Exeter," and they have got into a warehouse at C., that would have been a delivery to A. the purchaser, and the transitus would have been at an end; the warehouse at C. would have been the ultimate destination named by the one party to the other. There is a case to which reference is generally made, Dixon v. Baldwin, 5 East. 175. There goods were ordered to be sent to a particular place according to the order of the purchasers. "A and B, traders living in London, were in course of ordering goods of the defendants, cotton manufacturers at Manchester, to be sent to M. and Co. at Hull, for the purpose of being afterwards sent to the correspondents of A and B at Hamburg; and on the 31st of March A and B sent orders to the defendants for certain goods to be sent to M. and Co. at Hull, to be shipped as usual: Held, that as between buyer and seller the right of the defendants to stop as in transitu was at an end when the goods came to the possession of M. and Co. at Hull; for they were for this purpose the appointed agents of the vendees, and received orders from them as to the ulterior destination of the goods; and the goods after their arrival at Hull were to receive a new direction from the vendees." "As to the first of these cases" (cited for the defendant), says Lord Ellenborough, "Hunter v. Beale, in which it is said that the goods must come to the corporeal touch of the vendee, in order to oust the right of stopping in transitu, it is a figurative expression, rarely, if ever, strictly true. If it be predicated of the vendee's own actual touch, or of the touch of any other person, it comes in each instance to a question whether the party to whose touch it actually comes be an agent so far representing the principal, as to make a delivery to him a full, effectual, and final delivery to the principal, as contradistinguished from a delivery to a person virtually acting as a carrier or means of conveyance to or on the account of the principal, in a mere course of transit towards him." "And if the transit be once at an end, the delivery is complete, and the transitus for this purpose cannot commence de novo merely because the goods are again sent upon their travels towards a new and ulterior destination." The case of Scott v. Pettit was decided on this ground, viz. that the transitus of goods is only not at an end upon their reaching the packer, where they remain with him for the purpose of being forwarded on to some ulterior appointed place of destination. But here, as in that case, the goods had so far gotten to the end of their journey, that they waited for new orders from the purchaser to put them again in motion, to communicate to them another substantive destination, and that without such orders they would remain stationary." Lawrence, J. agreed with Lord Ellenborough, that there was no right to stop them in transitu. Then there is the case of Stovell v. Hughes, 14 East, 308. The law, as laid down in Dixon v. Baldwin, has been recently acted upon in two cases, affirmatively and negatively. Jackson v. Nichol, 5 Bing. N. C. 508, where "M. purchased lead of plaintiff at Newcastle, without specifying any place of delivery. After a time, M. desired that it should be forwarded to him in London, and plaintiff gave M.'s agent at Newcastle an order on plaintiff's servant for its delivery. The agent indorsed the order to a keelman, who received the lead and put it on board a vessel for London. The vessel arrived in London on the 21st of June, and defendants, as wharfingers, undertook the delivery of the lead. M. failed on that day. On the 23rd and 24th M. demanded the lead of the captain of the vessel, who refused to deliver it, though the freight was tendered, alleging that the defendants had stopped it on account of the failure of M. On the 28th a letter arrived from plaintiff, ordering the lead to be stopped in transitu; it was then on board a lighter belonging to defendants: Held, that the transitus was not at an end, and that the plaintiff was in time to stop the lead." "The first question," says Tindal, C. J. "which arises upon this special case is, whether the transitus was at an end, either by the delivery of the lead from the premises of the plaintiff, to the order of Crawhall, the agent of the buyer, or by the putting of the same on board the Est; and upon this question we are of opinion that the transitus was not determined on either of those occasions." Then, upon the second question, "whether the transitus was at an end at the time the stoppage took place in the river," it not clearly appearing, from the statement of the case, whether the defendant's refusal arose from any adverse claim of their own against the purchasers, or simply as holding for them; he says, "in either case, the plaintiff's right of stoppage existed. For as the right of the vendor to stop in transitu is not defeated by any claim of the carrier for his lien for a general balance, or even by a foreign attachment laid upon the goods by a creditor (Oppenheim v. Russell, 3 B. and P. 42), it follows, that if any claim of lien for a debt due to the defendants existed, of which there is no statement in the case, it could not operate to defeat the plaintiff's right; and if the goods were in the lighter, not being subject to any such claim, they were still in a course of transitu in order to be delivered, and were not actually delivered to the buyer, notwithstanding the defendants undertook the delivery by the order of Maltby and Co. (the purchasers)." Then there is the case of Dodson v. Wentworth, 4 Mann. & G. 1080. "Bales of flax sold by A in London to B, residing at Michley Mill, are addressed to 'B, Michley,' and are shipped for Hull under a bill of lading, making them deliverable at the port of Boroughbridge for B, Michley Mill. The bales are forwarded from Hull to Boroughbridge by water-carriage, and are deposited there in the warehouse of C, a party unconnected with the carriers, who was in the habit of receiving goods for B, and holding them at B's risk, and without charging warehouse rent, until fetched away by B or delivered to other persons by B's order." Held, that "the transitus is at an end, and the bales cannot be stopped by A, upon the insolvency of B, although B has exercised no act of ownership over them." "It appears to me," says Tindal, C. J. "that this case falls within the principle laid down in Dixon v. Baldwin, and that the transitus was at an end when the goods were lodged under the circumstances stated in evidence, in the warehouse of the Osse Navigation Company, at Boroughbridge." Colman, J. says, "I am of the same opinion. By the bill of lading, the goods are to be delivered at Boroughbridge; and the words 'Michley Mill, Ripon,' after the name of the consignee, do not point out the place of destination where the transitus is to end: they are merely a designation of the party to whom the goods are consigned. Boroughbridge is clearly the place at which the carriage of the goods is to terminate, and at which their delivery is to take place." It may also happen that if the thing sold is in the actual possession of the vendor, still the right of stoppage may be lost. This is the case where there has been something equivalent to a delivery to the purchaser, and the seller or agent continues to hold the thing sold only as a warehouseman on account of the purchaser. Such was the case in Stone v. Elmore, where the horse was retained by the original seller to stand at livery. And in the case of Hurry v. Mangles, 1 Camp. 452, the goods sold remained in the warehouse of the vendor, and he received warehouse rent for them. In this case Lord Ellenborough said, "The acceptance of warehouse rent was a complete transfer of the goods to the purchaser. If I pay for a part of a warehouse, so much of it is mine. This is an executed delivery by the seller to the buyer. If there was any conspiracy or contrivance on the part of the plaintiffs to cheat the defendants out of the price of the goods, proof of that will be an answer to this action; but it would be overturning all principles to allow a man to say, after accepting warehouse rent, 'the goods are still in my possession, and I will detain them till I am paid.' The transitus was at an end. The goods were transferred to the person who paid the rent, as much as if they had been removed to his own warehouse, and there deposited under lock and key." Dixon v. Yates, 5 B. & Ad. 313, was a similar case. Yates had sold a quantity of rum to Dixon; the rum was left in Yates's vaults; Dixon, the purchaser, sold to Collard forty-six puncheons; Collard accepted bills for the payment, and Dixon gave him delivery orders for two puncheons, but refused to give orders for the rest. Collard became insolvent, and the bills were dishonoured, and forty-four puncheons, for which no delivery orders had been given, were still in Yates's vaults; Dixon claimed them, and the question was, whether they were Dixon's or Collard's. The right of Dixon, the vendor, to retain the goods had been suspended by the bills given; when the bills were dishonoured the right revived, and Dixon was held entitled to the possession.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

The Law Magazine; or Quarterly Review of Jurisprudence. August 1846. Wm. Benning.

ALWAYS learned and sound, the contents of this number of the old Quarterly oracle of the Profession are more varied and not less readable and apposite to the circumstances of the times than usual. The literary division of the number contains nine articles on popular and vexed subjects. The first is a resume of the examination into "the Eighth Report of the Criminal Law Commissioners," by the same writer who handled the subject in a former number, which at the time we noticed. His strictures on the recommendations of the commissioners, and comments upon the facts they have laboriously gathered—not in every case to deduce the correct inference—are always judicious, and often shrewd; they betoken the writer to be a man of sound judgment and vigilant observation—whose experience of the working of our criminal law has been very extensive, and to whose opinion the attention of our legislators should be given. Speaking of the evil resulting from the multiplicity of counts in modern indictments, the writer differs from the commissioners, and indirectly advises a power of amendment.

We entirely agree with the commissioners in their reprobation of a multiplicity of counts; there is but one method, however, in which they can be got rid of, and that method the commissioners appear entirely unwilling to adopt. The strict accuracy now required is so great, that it is in practice found impossible to avoid variances with a single count. The commissioners adhere to this accuracy with the greatest tenacity, and will not listen to the power of amendment. If their opinion be followed, the same reprehensible practice of multiplying counts must of necessity continue.

The value of the subjoined suggestion of Lord DENMAN, C. J. on the subject of perjury, and of the remarks appended by the reviewer, will by all be acknowledged. It seems strange that the commission should have overlooked this—one of the most crying and frequent sins which beset our courts of justice.

With regard to perjury, Lord Denman, C. J. observes—"In any scheme for the improving the administration of justice, I should recommend the adoption of a simple and general form of indictment for perjury. The difficulties that now surround a prosecution almost operate as a guarantee for the impunity of that crime." No one, who has much acquaintance with proceedings in our courts, can doubt that perjury prevails in them to a frightful extent, and yet so great are the obstacles which stand in the way of a conviction, that we are hardly guilty of any exaggeration in saying that the crime is practically free from punishment. So few are the convictions in comparison of the number of false swearings, that the convictions may be rather considered as exceptions to the general impunity which prevails. In no indictments are more numerous special averments necessary, and in none is there more technical accuracy required; it is not therefore extraordinary that fatal defects should frequently occur, even if the materials for framing such indictments were before the party framing them. This, however, is rarely, if ever the case. Copies or extracts of the former proceedings are usually the best foundation on which such indictments are framed, and errors in such copies lead to errors in the indictment; (a) and it sometimes happens that the former proceedings are in the custody of an adverse party, and cannot be obtained. Whatever difference of opinion may exist as to the precise mode of remedying these inconveniences, none can exist that they require some remedy. The commissioners, however, do not advert to the subject. We venture to suggest that it would be better to provide that it should be unnecessary to state the count or tribunal before which, or the proceeding in which, the perjury was committed, and that it should be sufficient to state that the defendant falsely and wilfully swore so and so, setting out the false evidence; that it should be unnecessary to have any special denial of the matters sworn, as instances not unfrequently occur where variances take place between the matter sworn and the special traverse of it; and that the power to amend the matter sworn, which now exists under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 15, where it is in writing, should be extended to all cases. It appears to us that, as all cases of perjury must be tried by a judge, there is not the slightest fear that he would permit any person to be convicted of perjury without the necessary formal proof of all the previous proceedings, and equally little that he will allow amendments, unless the case be one in which it is proper that they should be made. (a)

(a) In a recent case, where the indictment had been framed on copies of affidavits, when the original affidavits were produced several variances occurred in the setting out of the affidavits on the record, which, however, had been carefully examined and accurately corresponded with the copies themselves.

The next is an article on "The Discipline of the French Bar;" so amusing and replete with information, that as less is popularly known on this side the channel, of the history, regulations, and government of the French Bar than could be wished, we propose, in an early number, to transfer it to our columns.

The third subject discussed is, "The Results of Death Punishments." Here, the arguments in favour of retaining capital punishments are put in even a more convincing manner, and certainly backed by stronger statistical facts, than in the former article on this question, which made such a sensation, and produced such an outcry among the advocates of gallows abolition. The writer hurls his bolt with merciless vehemency; and, conscious of his strength, is less considerate of the humane, if mistaken, motives of those who advocate the opposite course, and scarcely as guarded in the epithets he applies to this section of society as could be wished. Give ear, if it be no more, to his sarcasm and irony, in the following passage:—

These (criminals who have died on the scaffold), are the people about whom all this philanthropic palaver is raised; Forty-one atrocious miscreants in six years sacrificed to the safety of the millions, of whose lives they proved themselves to be reckless! Why, as great a number of innocent lives are sacrificed every year for the sake of coals; and not one tithe of the same exertion is made to correct the negligence or punish the cupidity of colliery owners! Unknown thousands perish in our large towns, victims to the miasma of our kennels and gutters, and the parsimony of municipalities; and where is the philanthropic effort to abate this murderous nuisance? It is employing itself in bewailing the gallows, and shedding all its beautiful compassion upon the select portion of society who have strangled their wives or slaughtered their mothers; it is devoting its amiable sympathy to the rescue and reformation of twelve interesting murderers per annum, utterly regardless of the lives of tens of thousands who, not having attained a qualification for the halter, are left to batten unheeded on the vices of which our prisons are nurseries, giving society the benefit of their training in crime. The rest of mankind are of no consequence to your genuine gallows abolitionist. Every day gaol birds are unworthy of his philanthropic palate. The mercies of his benevolence descend not from the scaffold; its sympathies centre on assassins. True it is, that whilst shooting, stabbing and maiming were capital punishments, those offences amounted to 120 per annum, and that they now exceed 200; (b) but what of that, so long as the stabbers and maimers are rescued from all chance of the indignity of a halter! True it is that hundreds of obscure people are yearly shot, stabbed, ravished, or burnt out of house and home, in addition to the number of like victims previously to the modern victories of the abolitionists, but what enlightened mind regards their fate, whilst a dozen murderers are still in danger of hanging! The selfishness of society on this point is extremely shocking to the humanities of Exeter Hall; and the flood of its sensibilities and the hurricane of its charities, despising the interests of commonplace people and their every-day lives, betake themselves to the scaffold, and finding no one there but a select party of murderers, bestow upon them the full fervour of their impassioned philanthropy! Beautiful luxuriance of sympathy! Adorable tenderheartedness! How can the selfish multitude pit their personal safety against the progress of this soaring benevolence! True it is that the greatest moral lawgiver carefully abstained from any approach to this exuberant charity, and from any command from which it could be implied; but the philanthropists of Exeter Hall have improceed upon the Christianity of Christ, and exaggerate the mercy, at the sacrifice of the justice, of the Gospel!

Far more to our taste are the purely argumentative parts of this article. And we feel called upon, by this allusion to the subject of capital punishments, to express our opinion that the facts, not to say the arguments, here set forth are conclusive against the abolitionists. Yet, notwithstanding this, we agree with Serjeant TALFOURD in the belief he somewhere expressed, that the office of hangman will not survive this century, so rapid is the growth of what are termed "humane principles." Whether real humanity lies in sparing the life of the criminal, and perhaps multiplying offenders, by affording comparative impunity to crime, or otherwise, we will not here dispute. As a specimen of the reasoning by this writer we give the following:—

That capital punishments are not reformatory, but merely preventive, is urged against them by those who at the same time admit that prevention is the chief object of punishment, inasmuch as security to society is entitled to precedence over the interests both of the wronged and the wronger. In the extreme cases to which capital punishments are alone applied, it is true that punishment attains only one of its objects; but that, according to the admission of those who urge this objection, is its primary object—namely, the security of society. From the necessity of the case it preponderates over every other, its importance being rendered paramount by the atrocity of the offence, and the vital interest society has in its prevention. It is therefore untrue that executions are "miserably defective" as a punishment, because they only protect society at large, and fail to reform a handful of the blackest criminals.

It is not denied that prevented crimes, being unrecorded, are liable to be far underrated; but it is retorted, that "if capital punishments are thus effective, we ought to apply them to the prevention of all offences; that if hanging will rid the world of petty larceny, we should hang for petty larceny, and have done with it; that if hanging will stop apple stealing, we have a specific for making orchards safe through all coming time. Why not? Because (we are made to say) the punishment is disproportionate to the offence. This answer (it is alleged) supposes proportionate infliction, and not prevention, to be the object of punishment. It reverts to the vindictive theory." It does nothing of the sort. It is very easy to impute a fallacy in order to refute it. The device is silly and short lived. It is not only because the punishment of hanging is disproportionate to the offence of apple stealing that apple stealers are not hung, but because the benefit to society by its prevention is inadequate to the penalty at which it is purchased. We do not hang the pickpocket, because the protection of pockets is not worth the sacrifice of life; and not because we have no faith in the preventive power of the punishment, as the abolitionist logicians pretend. "No one (they say) ventures to recommend the universal application of this specific. Till they do, we take leave to question their faith in its efficacy. [Indeed, you don't; your folly is not equal to any such question.] The prevention which would fail for apple stealing [your own assumption] cannot be infallible for rape and murder!!!" This solemn twaddle is too amusing. Because heavy artillery is not applied to the demolition of sparrows, it is powerless for the cannonading of castles! But no illustration can surpass the inordinate silliness of the argument itself; for, according to it, there must be no moderation of punishment; and imprisonment, the panacea of the abolitionists, ought to be perpetual. Any punishment is susceptible of exactly the same reductio ad absurdum, as that which they, in their dismal ignorance of the first elements of logic, fancied they were applying to the advocates of capital punishments for murder. We cannot waste further time or space in breaking this fly on a wheel.

There is no doubt that civilization abhors violence and reverence life, and that is the precise reason why it inflicts the heaviest penalty on those who commit the former and destroy the latter; and holds that they who will not allow others to live have forfeited a right to live themselves. Murderers invite and are the agents of their own death. They know the penalty before they commit murder. They create the necessity of the sacrifice of their lives, for in consequence of their own act they are put to death, that others who have not forfeited their right to live may enjoy it. There is no want of reverence for life in this, it is the necessary result of regard for its preservation. Mr. Bright says,

"If it were possible that the punishment of death did sometimes deter men from the commission of the crime of murder—which was by no means proved—he would ask whether it was not clear that the infliction of such a punishment tended to destroy reverence for human life."

It is, on the contrary, proved that executions do prevent the worst crimes, as far as any statistics can prove it. This is the ground which crumbles under the feet of the abolitionists. They cannot get over their blunder on this material point.

This is an article which will attract a large share of notice, and we recommend it to the perusal of all who feel interested in this nice question; and whom does this not include?

A long essay on "The Law of International Domicile" follows next. The profusion and variety of foot-note references alone will convince those who may not look into the text which they illustrate, of the vast amount of learning and research the writer has brought to his subject.

The fifth article is a searching and able review of "Stephen's Commentaries;" the sixth a brief memoir of the late Chief Justice Tindal. The seventh article is a long, able, instructive, and interesting one in the form of a review of "Spence's Equitable Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery." A brief history of this high court of judiciary, prefaced by a passing glance at the laws and customs of the Romans, Saxons, Danes, and Normans, is given in this review. To all students of our laws, and to those who would refresh their memories of early impressions when mastering the history of our jurisprudence, we recommend the perusal of this article. We can only find room here for a humorous and graphic picture of a lawyer's pillory—one of a kind which the dry details of law but seldom furnish, and we therefore enjoy it the more. If some of the most diffuse and wary of modern special pleaders were made like examples in Westminster Hall, it would certainly amuse the spectators, but, we fear, not cure them of their sin.

THE LAWYERS' PILLORY.

Some old decrees and orders preserved by Mr. Spence in his notes are by no means in accordance with what we are accustomed to consider within the province of the Court, or consistent with decorum. The Court seem to have laid considerable reliance on the personal credit of, and also personal acquaintance with, some of the parties. Thus, notice is taken of the good credit and upright dealing of the Countess of Huntingdon as well proved as known to this Court—of the great opinion that this Court had of the great discretion, circumspection and honesty of Mr. Plowden, a counsel in the cause—of the honour and integrity of Sir Ralph Sadler, as a Privy Councillor, so as that his estate was discharged by reason of a memorandum he had himself indorsed on a bill on which he was liable, that part of it had been paid. Counsel, on a motion to set aside a former decree, having asserted that such an order was without precedent, and several precedents having been afterwards found, the counsel was for such "his rash motion" committed to the Fleet. The Court constantly takes upon itself the office of a mediator or arbitrator, especially between persons of distinction, between persons nearly connected, or of great disparity of position. But one of the most curious is the punishment for impertinent length of pleading in the note, p. 377, in the case of Myllward v. Weldon, 8th February, 1596, Sir J. Puckering, Lord Keeper. Richard Myllward, the plaintiff's son, had confessed that he had "both drawn, devised and engrossed" a monstrous replication—

"Which did amount to six score sheets of paper, and yet all the matter thereof which is pertinent might well have been contrived in sixteen sheets of paper. * * * And because his lordship is of opinion that such an abuse ought not to be tolerated, proceeding of a malicious purpose to increase the defendant's charge and being fraught with much impertinent matter not fit for this Court: It is therefore ordered, that the warden of the Fleet shall take the said Richard Myllward into his custody, and shall bring him into Westminster Hall on Saturday next, about the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon, and then and there shall out a hole in the midst of the same engrossed replication, which is delivered to him for that purpose, and put the said Richard's head through the same hole, and so let the same replication hang about his head and shoulders with the written side outwards, and then, the same so hanging, shall lead the said Richard bareheaded and barefaced round about Westminster Hall whilst the Courts are sitting, and shall show him at the bar of every of the three courts within the Hall, and then shall take him back again to the Fleet and keep him prisoner until he shall have paid 10*l.* as a fine to the queen and twenty nobles to the defendant in respect of his costs for the aforesaid abuse, which fine and costs are now adjudged and imposed upon him by this Court for his abuse aforesaid."

Articles on the "County Courts Bill," and on "Vexatious Legislation of Parish Settlements," follow, and make up the contents of the literary part of the number. Into them we have not space at present to enter, but may recur to them at a future time. The usual quantity of "Notes on leading Cases," and a continuation of the Digest of Cases in Common Law and Equity, make up an excellent number of this Quarterly oracle of the Profession.

Bills of Costs in Chancery, for Plaintiff and Defendant, in conformity with the present Practice. By JESSE COLE, Solicitor. 8vo. London, 1846: Meldola, Cahn, and Co. St. Mary-axe.

THE novelty of this book lies mainly in its giving practical directions and notes as to the prosecution and defence of suits immediately under the several items of the charges. The "various orders of Court adapted to the present practice, including those which came into operation in October last, together with the recent decisions of the Courts in reference or applicable to such orders," are also introduced. Great pains have been bestowed on the various parts of the work, and the research evidenced by the author in collating authorities, and the vigilance with which he has watched and availed himself of the decisions on mooted or doubtful points, are no less remarkable than praiseworthy. The book, which is rendered complete by an Appendix of Forms and a copious Digest, will be a useful and acceptable one to the Profession, and we recommend it accordingly.

A Letter to the Right Honourable Sir George Grey, Bart. on certain Clauses in the "Small Debts Bill" (now in the House of Commons). By DAVID DEADY KEANE, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. London: Shaw and Sons.

THIS pamphlet contains some judicious strictures on several clauses of the Small Debts Bill, with shrewd practical suggestions for their reconstruction and improvement. The chief subjects on which the Author descends are,—balance of cross accounts; balance of cross judgments; commitment for fraud; conflicting claims for goods taken in execution; examination of parties on oath; forms of procedure; prohibition; protection from arrest; rent; sequestration of the person; writ of arrest, &c. &c. Mr. KEANE has brought to the analysis of this Act the experience of an industrious, clear-sighted, and able man; his objections and suggestions, whether they obtain consideration or not, most certainly deserve it. We could have wished, had space permitted, to have given the Author's remarks on writs of error, and prohibition after sentence, but must content ourselves with his comment on the 89th section of the Act, which runs as follows:—

The 89th section enacts:

"That no landlord of any tenement let at a weekly rent shall have any claim or lien upon any goods taken in execution under the process of any court held under this Act for more than four weeks' rent; and if any such tenement shall be let for any other term less than one year, the landlord shall not have any claim or lien upon such goods for more than the arrears of rent accruing during two such terms or times of payment; and if such tenement shall be let for a yearly or other holding for a longer period, such landlord shall not be entitled to have any claim or lien upon such goods for more than one year's arrears."

This varies from the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 67, and, the substitution of "two" terms of payment for "four" such terms excepted, the variation is not an improvement. Even under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 67, which did not contain any provision corresponding to that which is printed in italics, it was contended that there was conferred on the landlord, as against the execution creditor, a claim to arrears of rent accruing during four terms of payment, even though those four terms should together exceed a year. Whatever force there was in the argument that supported that position, will be much increased by the passage above printed in italics, which points to the conclusion that the claims of the landlord shall be confined to the arrears for one year, only when the tenement shall have been let "for a yearly or other holding for a longer period." Doubt, even on such a point as this, ought to be prevented.

This section is founded on the notion that under the stat. 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, the sheriff is the party who ought to pay the landlord such arrears of rent as he may have claim to, not exceeding a year's rent; that the sheriff is entitled to remove the goods before the landlord is paid, and that the payment is to be made out of the proceeds of the goods. This, it is submitted, is a fallacy. In the case of Cocker v. Musgrove, judgment was pronounced in the Court of Queen's Bench on the 9th of June last (Law T. for June 20), and the true construction of the stat. of Anne was thereby determined to be, that where the sheriff in possession under a writ of fi. fa. receives notice, as well as the execution creditor, of rent being due, not exceeding one year, it is not his duty to proceed to a sale, unless the execution creditor first of all pays the rent to the landlord, whatever may be the supposed value of the goods seized. The judgment was delivered by Lord Denman in the words that follow:—

"This was an action against the sheriff of Middlesex, for not levying under a writ of fi. fa. The declaration stated that there were goods out of which the defendant might and ought to have levied: one of the pleas traversed that allegation. The facts were, that five executions came into the sheriff's hands; that there was rent due from the execution debtor, of which the several plaintiffs had notice; but no one of them chose to pay the rent. The sheriff returned those facts; the jury found that there were goods sufficient to pay the rent and execution, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff under the direction of the learned judge. The defendants contend, upon the true construction of the stat. of 8 Anne, they were not bound or at liberty to sell the goods until the rent was paid by one of the execution creditors. The practice, undoubtedly, has been very general for the sheriff to sell in such cases, and out of the proceeds to satisfy the landlord in the first instance, and if he does so sell he is liable to an action if he does not pay the landlord. Many cases show this to be necessary. Some will be found cited in Windle v. Freeman, 11 A. & E.; and the statute is still more discussed in Riseley v. Ryle, 11 M. & W. 16. In the latter case, Parke, B. says: 'Construing the Act as it has hitherto been construed, it means that the sheriff is not to remove the goods until the rent has first been paid by somebody; if he does, he is liable to an action at the suit of the landlord, for whose benefit the Act of Parliament was made.' It is plain that the advance should be made by the execution creditor. If he neglects to make it after notice of rent being due (and it is not necessary to say whether notice be requisite) the sheriff cannot be called upon to sell the goods, let the value be what it will. Until the rent be paid, there are no goods out of which the sheriff is bound to levy, that is, bound to sell. We are, therefore, of opinion, that the rule for a new trial in this case must be made absolute."

Now, in that case it was sufficient for the purpose of the defendant to contend that the sheriff was not obliged to sell; but the words of the statute seem to prohibit even the taking goods liable to rent; and it is obvious, that if the right to take should be disputed, the case of Cocker v. Musgrove will tend towards a decision adverse to the sheriff. If there be no right to take at all until the execution creditor has satisfied the rent, then section 89 will be nugatory. If,—and to this the case of Cocker v. Musgrove must lead,—the sheriff is bound not to sell until the landlord has been satisfied his arrears of rent for two terms of payment, the provisions of section 89 will avail but little for the purpose of the Act. If it be still doubtful whether the true construction is not, that the sheriff is bound not to sell until the execution creditor has paid the landlord, then, as the sheriff is not bound to sell until the execution creditor has so paid, assuredly he will never sell until the execution creditor has paid the sum which the statute of Anne requires, not merely the sum which section 89 indicates. He will not risk a decision as to the possible effect of section 89 on the statute of Anne; and if an action be brought against him by the execution creditor he will rely, as safely he may, on the case of Cocker v. Musgrove. It is submitted, then, that section 89 must be modified.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

A PRACTICAL COMMENTARY

ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS RELATING TO REAL PROPERTY.

By WILLIAM HUGHES, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

Effect of the late Will Act with respect to lapsed devises.—As the law stood previously to the recent enactment, 1 Vict. c. 26, a devise would have lapsed by the death of the legatee in the testator's lifetime (Symson v. Hornsby, Pre. Ch. 439; Brett v. Rigden, Plow. 340; Hartop's case, Cro. Eliz. 243; Turner v. Kett, 4 T. R. 601); and so it will still, unless in the case of estates tail, and gifts to children or other issue of the testator.

As to estates tail.—With respect to estates tail, the 32nd section of the above-mentioned statute enacts, "that where any person to whom any real estate shall be devised for an estate tail, or an estate in quasi entail, shall die in the lifetime of the testator, leaving issue, who would be inheritable under such entail, and any such issue shall be living at the time of the death of the testator, such devise shall not lapse, but shall take effect as if the death of such person had happened immediately after the death of the testator, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will."

Gifts to children or other issue.—With respect to gifts to children or other issue of the testator, the 33rd section enacts, "that where any child or other issue of the testator, to whom any real or personal estate shall be devised or bequeathed, for any estate or interest not determinable at or before the death of such person, shall die in the lifetime of the testator, leaving issue, and any issue of such shall be living at the time of the death of the testator, such devise or bequest shall not lapse, but shall take effect as if the death of such person had happened immediately after the death of the testator." But this section of the statute, it has been determined, does not substitute the issue for the pre-deceased devisee, but the latter will take a fee-simple conditional, depending either on his surviving the testator, or on his leaving issue living at the time of such testator's death; and the devisee may dispose of such interest by his will, notwithstanding he should die in the testator's lifetime. (Johnson v. Johnson, 3 Hare, 157.) But this enactment, that a bequest to a child who died in the testator's lifetime, leaving issue living at the testator's death, shall not lapse, does not apply to a testamentary appointment. (Griffith v. Gale, 12 Sim. 327.)

Of the rule in Shelley's case.—It may not be improper in this place to give a brief outline of the rule in Shelley's case; but which, though so thus designated, was a fixed rule of law long before Shelley's case was decided, in which it was not a subject for the determination of the Court, or even of controversy, but is expressed in the arguments in clear terms as an acknowledged rule of law, and from thence it is presumed to have received this appellation.

When the rule will apply.—By this rule, whenever an estate is given to one generally, or for life, and afterwards, in the same instrument, a remainder is limited to his heirs, or the heirs of his body, such subsequent limitation vests immediately in the ancestor, and will not remain in contingency or abeyance. If the limitation be to his heirs, he will take an estate in fee-simple; if to the heirs of his body, an estate tail. This rule will apply equally, notwithstanding an intervening clause for life or in tail be interposed between the freehold of the ancestor and the subsequent limitation to his heirs: with this diversity: that where the devise is immediate, as to A for life, remainder to his heirs, or the heirs of his body, it becomes executed in the ancestor, forming, by its union with his particular estate, one estate of inheritance in possession; and where it is mediate, as to A for life, remainder to B for life, or in tail, remainder to the heirs, or the heirs of the body of A, it is then a vested remainder in the ancestor, not to be executed in possession till the determination of the preceding means estates. (Hodgson v. Ambrose, Doug. 337, 345; S. C. Dom. Proc. 3 Bro. P. C. edit. Toml. 416.) And notwithstanding the estate be limited to the ancestor expressly for his life (Rudall v. Eiley, Carth. 170; Goodright v. Pullen, Lord Raym. 1437); or it is declared to be without impeachment of waste (a restriction inconsistent with an estate of inheritance) (Papillon v. Voice, 2 P. Wms. 471; Robinson v. Robinson, 2 Ves. sen. 225; Denn dem. Webb v. Puckey, 5 T. R. 299; Frank v. Slovin, 3 East, 548; Jones v. Morgan, 1 Bro. C. C. 206; Bennett v. Tankerville (Earl of), 19 Ves. 170; Perrin v. Blake, 4 Bur. 2579; 1 W. Blackst. 672; or trustees are interposed to preserve contingent remainders (Colson v. Colson, 2 Atk. 247; S. C. 2 Str. 1125; Hodgson v. Ambrose, Doug. 337, 345; S. C. 3 Bro. P. C. edit. Toml. 416; Sayer v. Masterman, Amb. 344; Measure v. Gee, 5 B. & Ald. 910); or the estate of freehold is limited to the separate use of the devisee (a féme covert) (Lord Sey and Sele, 8 Vin. Abr. 262, pl. 19; S. C. in Dom. Proc. 3 Bro. P. C. edit. Toml. 458; Douglas v. Congreve, 1 Beav. 59); or a power of jointuring is given to the first devisee (King v. Melling, 2 Lev. 58; S. C. 3 Keb. 42); or the testator even proceeds to impose a restriction against alienation (Perrin v. Blake, 4 Bur. 2579; 1 W. Blackst. 672; Hayes dem. Foarde v. Foarde, 2 W. Blackst. 698); or there is an express direction that the ancestor shall take for life only (Thong v. Bedford, 1 Bro. C. C. 313); the rule will nevertheless apply, and in every instance vest the inheritance in the first taker. Neither will the application of the rule be prevented by words of superadded limitation being engrafted on the devise to the heirs. As, for example, a limitation to A for life, and the heirs male of his body, and the heirs male of the body of such heirs male. Shelley's case itself is indeed the leading authority in support of the latter construction in the case of a deed; and Goodright v. Pullen (Lord Raym. 1437) is an instance of the same doctrine applied to wills. (See also Hayes dem. Foarde v. Foarde, 2 W. Blackst. 698; Denn and Gearing v. Shenton, Com. 410; Wright v. Pearson, Amb. 358; Minshull v. Minshull, 1 Atk. 411.) Nor will a devise to the heir in the singular number (Burley's case, cited by Hale, C. J. Ventr. 230; Whiting v. Wilkins Bulstr. 219; Pausy v. Lowdall, 2 Roll. Abr. 794; Miller v. Seagrove, Rob. Gav. 96; Dubler v. Trollope, Amb. 453), (provided no words of limitation are superadded or engrafted on it), (a) prevent the application of the rule; although in the case of a deed the construction would be otherwise; for in the latter instance the ancestor would take a mere life estate, with remainder to the heir as a purchaser.

The particular estate being determinable on a contingency will not prevent the application of the rule.—The rule will also apply, notwithstanding the particular estate of freehold be determinable on an event which may happen in the lifetime of the first taker (Merrill v. Ramsey, 1 Keb. 888; S. C. Sid. 427; 4 Bac. Abr. 601); as where the particular estate of freehold is limited during widowhood, or the life of another person (Curtis v. Price, 12 Ves. 89); nor will it make any difference although the ancestor himself must die before the object of the gift to the heirs can be ascertained as to two persons as long as they jointly live, with remainder to the heirs of him that dies first (10 Rep. 30; 1 Roll. Abr. 839; Highway v. Banner, 1 Bro. C. C. 584); or the limitation to the heirs is on a contingency that may or may not happen; as for example, a gift to A. for life, and if she marries and has heirs of her body, then the heirs to have the lands. Neither is it of any consequence whether the estate of freehold is in the ancestor by express limitation or by implication (Hayes dem. Foarde v. Foarde, W. Blackst. 658), or results to him (Pibus v. Mitford, Ventr. 272; Wills v. Palmer, 5 Bur. 2615), as in either case the construction will be the same; for if the intention is once clear that the succession shall go and be confined to the heirs of the tenant for life, the notion that they shall take by purchase must be rejected for inconsistency; as all persons claiming in the character of heirs, must take in that quality, by descent and not by purchase.

Requisites to the application of the rule.—But in order that the rule may apply, it will be requisite, 1. That an estate of freehold be limited to the ancestor. 2. There must be a limitation to the heirs, or heirs of the body of the ancestor, in those terms, or by some equivalent substituted name; as issue for instance; and not the heirs as meaning or explained to be sons or children, or the like. 3. The heirs must take as the heirs of the ancestor to whom the freehold is devised, and not of him and another person. 4. Both limitations must give estates of the same quality. 5. Both limitations must be by the same instrument.

1. An estate of freehold must be limited to the ancestor.—In order that the rule in Shelley's case may apply, it is absolutely necessary that the ancestor should take an estate of freehold, either by express words or by implication; for if he takes no such estate, or merely a term of years, with remainder to his heirs, &c. the two estates will not unite in the ancestor, but will go to the heirs as purchasers. (Roe dem. Nightingale v. Quartley, 1 T. R. 630; Harris v. Barnes, 1 W. Blackst. 643.) Although the heirs will not derive their estate through their ancestor, they will so far take with reference to him as to pursue the same course of succession as if it attached and descended from him. (Fearne, Cont. Rem. 80.) An acquisition of this kind is styled an acquisition per formam doni, not being strictly a descent, because the estate never attached, or could by possibility attach, or be derived through him; and yet not operating as a purchase, because the estate goes in the same course of succession as it would have done under a descent, exclusive of persons to whom it would have gone if the heirs had taken absolutely by purchase. Thus a limitation to the heirs male of the body of B, where no estate is given to B himself, though it originally attaches in his heirs male under that special description, and so far operates as words of purchase, yet it not only gives such heir an estate tail male, without any express words of limitation to the heirs male of his own body, but such an estate tail as will, on failure of his issue male, go in succession to the other heirs male of the body of B, in the same course as if the estate had descended from B himself. (Manderly's case, Co. Litt. 266; Southcott v. Stowell, 1 Mod. 236; Wills v. Palmer, 5 Barr. 2615.)

2. There must be a limitation to the heirs, &c. of the person taking the previous estate of freehold by that or some equivalent substituted name, as issue for instance; and not the heirs as meaning or explained to be sons or children, or the like.—When it appears from the general context of the will the testator did not mean to employ the word heirs according to their strict technical import, that intention must be allowed to prevail, notwithstanding he has used such technical words in other parts of his will. Hence, although a testator should devise to B. and the heirs of his body, he will not be precluded from explaining by subsequent words in what sense he intended the words "heirs of the body" to be taken; if, therefore, to the limitation to the heirs of the body he were to add "that is to say, his first, second, third, and every son and sons successively, &c." the subsequent clause would not be considered as contrary to the preceding general limitation to B.'s heirs lawfully to be begotten, but explanatory of what heirs, &c. were meant, consequently the rule would not apply, and B. would take a mere estate for life. (Lisle v. Gray, 2 Lev. 223; Lowe v. Davis, 3 Lord Raym. 1561; Manderly v. Lackey, 3 Ridd. P. C. 352; Grothen v. Howard, 6 Taunt. 94; Goodtitle dem. Sweet v. Herring, 1 East, 264; Shorridge v. Croker, 5 B. & C. 866; Doe dem. Woodhall v. Woodhall, 7 Law T. 322.)

3. Effect of engrafted words of limitation varying the course of descent.—It has been said that although words of engrafted limitation annexed to the limitation to the heirs will not prevent the application of the rule, yet that it will be otherwise if by such engrafted words the course of descent be altered. This doctrine appears to be founded entirely upon the supposed case put by Anderson, J. in Shelley's case, where he says, that if the words of engrafted limitation describe an estate descendible in a different course and to different persons, as to special heirs, from what the first would carry the estate to, viz. to females instead of males, or vice versa, it will prevent the application of the rule, for in such case the general effect of the first word, heirs, is abridged and qualified by such subsequent express words of limitation, as cannot possibly be satisfied by considering the first words as words of purchase. This point does not, however, appear to have been as yet judicially decided; whilst, on the other hand, it has been determined, over and over again, that notwithstanding the words of distribution are annexed to the limitation to the heirs of the body, which, if literally carried into effect, would create an estate descendible in a different manner, they will be insufficient to control the legal import of preceding words sufficient to create an estate tail, as, for example, a limitation to A for life, with remainder to the heirs of his body as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. (Doe dem. Chandler v. Smith, 7 T. R. 531; Pierson v. Fickers, 5 East, 548; Doe dem. Cole v. Goldsmith, 7 Taunt. 209; S. C. 2 Marsh. 517; Bennett v. Tankerville (Earl of), 19 Ves. 170; Jesson v. Wright, 2 Bligh, 58; Doe dem. Bomall v. Harvey, 4 B. & C. 610.)

4. The heirs must take as heirs of the ancestor, and not of him and another person.—It is essential to the application of the rule in Shelley's case that the heirs should be the heirs of the person taking the estate of freehold, and not of him and any other person. Thus in Gosseage v. Taylor (Yelv. 131, S. C.; Sty. 325), an estate was limited to the wife for life, remainder to the heirs to be begotten upon the body of the wife by the husband, no estate being previously limited to the husband; and it was held that the heirs took as purchasers. (See also Lane v. Pannell, 1 Roll. Rep. 258, 438; Megmorton dem. Robinson v. Wherry, 2 Blac. Rep. 728, S. C.; 3 Wils. 144.) But if the devise had been to the wife for life, and the heirs of the husband on her body to be begotten, she would have taken no more than a life estate. For there is a fixed distinction between the terms "heirs of the body," and "heirs on the body;" the word "heirs" making the heirs, &c. words of limitation, the word "on" converting them into words of purchase. And however light and frivolous this distinction may now appear, yet it having originally, upon principles now obsolete, obtained ground in judicial decisions, the Courts hold themselves bound to observe it. (Fearne, C. R. 39 Litt. 26, 27, 28, 29; see Harg. note to 3 Co. Litt. 26, b.) At a cursory glance, indeed, Gossage v. Taylor, above referred to, may seem to militate against this doctrine, for there, as we have already seen, the remainder was to the "heirs to be begotten upon the body of the wife by the husband," but the word "of" was there omitted altogether, and consequently not applicable to the heirs of either of their bodies; the heirs, in fact, were not required to be of either of their bodies, and were therefore construed as if they were to issue from both; which construction has been since recognised and adopted. (Denn. dem. Trickett v. Gilloft, 2 T. R. 431.) It must also be kept in mind, that although to come within the operation of the rule in Shelley's case, the heirs must take as the heirs of the ancestor, and not of him and any other person; still this doctrine will not apply unless the parties from whose bodies the heirs are to issue are married to each other, or may lawfully intermarry; for if they are both of the same sex, or by reason of proximity of kindred or affinity are disabled from lawfully intermarrying with each other, as in such case it would be impossible they could have common heirs of their two bodies, a limitation in these terms would, under the latter circumstances, be construed, as to one moiety, to give the inheritance to the ancestor, and an estate for life in the other moiety, with a contingent remainder, to the person who has not any previous estate of freehold. (Huntley's case, Dy. 396; Bendl. 226; 1 Inst. 25; 2 Prest. Estates, 425.) This last proposition, however, supposes that the persons forbidden to marry by reason of consanguinity or affinity have not intermarried with each other; for, if they have done so, notwithstanding their marriage may be annulled by suit in the Ecclesiastical Court; yet, until so avoided, all the consequences of a legal marriage attach; and should they either of them die before the sentence declaring the marriage to be void shall be pronounced, the issue of the marriage will be capable of inheriting. (2 Prest. Estates, 433; 1 Thom. Co. Litt. 126.) As long, therefore, as the marriage continues, a limitation to them would, it is apprehended, have the same operation as if applicable to parties against whose marriage there was no legal impediment.

(a) That the rule will not apply when words of limitation are engrafted on a devise to the heir in the singular number, see Archer's case (1 Rep. 66); Clark v. Clark, or Clark v. Day or Davy, (Moor. 593; Cro. Elis. 313); White v. Collins (Com. 299).

5. Both limitations must give estates of the same quality.—Both limitations must give estates of the same quality; that is to say, the two estates must be either both legal or both equitable. (Jones v. Sey and Sale (Lord), 8 Vin. Abr. 262, pl. 19; S. C. 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 383; 3 Bro. P. C. edit. Toml. 458; Tiffin v. Cossin, Carth. 272; Hemy v. Purcell, 2 W. Blackst. 1002; Shapland v. Smith, 1 Bro. C. C. 75; Silvester dem. Law v. Wilson, 2 T. R. 444; Venables v. Morris, 7 T. R. 342, 438; Doe dem. Hallen v. Ironmonger, 3 East, 533; Curtis v. Price, 12 Ves. 89.) Mr. Fearne, indeed, has carried this doctrine still further, for he expresses an opinion (Fearne, C. R. 35) that the rule has not any application in those instances in which the ancestor has the freehold as a trustee, and taking no beneficial interest. Mr. Butler, however, in his valuable edition of Mr. Fearne's Contingent Remainders, very justly remarks (p. 35, n. (p)) that, "as courts of law cannot take notice of any trusts charged on legal estates, the trusts or purposes for which the ancestor's estate of freehold, in the cases proposed by him, is charged, cannot be a subject of their consideration. Courts of law, therefore," he adds, "must treat the case merely as a limitation of a legal freehold to the ancestor, and a limitation of the legal fee to the heir of his body, and of course hold it to be a legal estate under the rule in Shelley's case." Mr. Preston, also, in his elaborate observations on the rule in Shelley's case expresses a similar opinion. (See 2 Prest. on Estates, 311.)

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Wednesday, July 22.
Re WEBB, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Alleged lunatic abroad—Carriage of commission—Appointment of committee—Committee of the person—Liberty to attend the execution of the commission—Incumbrancer.

Remilly and Bask supported a petition for a commission of lunacy against Mr. John Webb, an alleged lunatic, who was then under medical treatment in a lunatic asylum in Paris. He was the illegitimate son of Sir William Webb, who had left three natural children, James, John, and Frederick. To James he had devised a large estate in Yorkshire, in strict settlement, with remainder in strict settlement to John, remainder in like manner to Frederick. To John he devised large estates in Lincolnshire, in strict settlement, with remainder to James, and the ultimate remainder to Frederick. To Frederick he devised estates in Northamptonshire, with remainder to James, and the ultimate remainder in strict settlement to John. James had died without issue and unmarried, and the alleged lunatic, John, was in the possession of the Lincolnshire and Yorkshire estates, as tenant for life. John had never been married, but a lady had lived with him as his wife for twenty-three years, by whom he had one daughter, Miss Clara Julia Webb, who opposed the issuing of the commission. Frederick had married and died, leaving one daughter, who was married to Captain Palmer; and a son, John William Webb, an infant, who was entitled in remainder to the Lincolnshire and Yorkshire estates, in the event of John Webb, the lunatic, dying without lawful issue. The petition was presented in the name of the infant. The yearly rental of the Yorkshire estate was 6,075*l.* and of the Lincolnshire estate, 5,870*l.*; together, 12,900*l.* John Webb had a passion for buying pictures, and in that way, before his insanity, had become indebted in 58,000*l.* which had been advanced by an insurance company upon a mortgage of the life interest and policies of assurance on John Webb's life. The interest on the mortgage, and the premiums on the policies of insurance, consumed about 5,000*l.* of the income; the expenses of management, repairs, and incidental outlays on the estate were, according to the affidavit of Mr. Walford, John Webb's solicitor and steward, 2,500*l.* Mr. John Webb had been residing abroad for many years. He had made a will several years since in favour of his natural daughter, of which Mr. Walford was appointed an executor, and about the validity of which there was no doubt. In November 1845 John Webb became insane, and was placed in a lunatic asylum in France, and intelligence of his illness was communicated to Captain and Mrs. Palmer, through Mr. Walford. At this time he had intervals nearly lucid, and hopes were entertained of his recovery on his removal to another asylum, kept by Messrs. Barber and Froisart, where an improved treatment was adopted. This removal occurred in April 1846. The petition was first opened before Lord Lyndhurst, on the 29th of May last, when his lordship ordered it to stand over until the next seal after Trinity Term, in order to ascertain what effect the change of treatment might have upon the patient's health. It now appeared by the affidavits of Sir A. Chermide and an eminent French physician, that there had been no improvement, and the prospect of the patient's recovery was almost hopeless. He had improved up to the 24th of June, and since then had relapsed.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Then why this contest?

Remilly.—There is a petition by Miss Clara Webb to suspend the commission.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If the unreasonableness of mind is not disputed, and the alleged lunatic is not under such care as the Court sometimes trusts persons in that condition without a commission, the commission must issue as of course.

Parker and Walford, for Miss Clara Webb, admitted the unreasonableness of mind, and that no material improvement had taken place; but contended that, as the property was well taken care of, and the personal estate of the alleged lunatic consisted only of a quantity of pictures, not likely to realize more than 10,000*l.* it was desirable to avoid expense. The patient was in a state to be aware of the inquiry and its nature; and that knowledge, it was believed, would have a most injurious effect upon his health. The lady with whom he had lived so long, and his daughter, attended him with the most affectionate care, and the estate to which the petitioner was entitled in remainder could not in any way be injured by the suspension of the commission. That the petitioner was only the son of the natural brother of the lunatic. There would also be a difficulty in executing the commission, the alleged lunatic being abroad. That if his lordship decided that a commission must issue, then Miss Webb and her mother contended that they should have the carriage of the commission.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—They may have an interest in shewing that he is not a lunatic.

Parker.—The petition is presented by Sir Samuel Scott, the lunatic's banker, as the next friend of Miss Webb, who is his sole residuary legatee. Sir S. Scott is an executor, with Mr. Walford, of Mr. Webb's will, which was made in 1840. They admit the lunacy.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—They may apply to have the personal care of Mr. Webb.

Parker.—There had been much vexatious opposition by Captain Palmer in Paris to the removal of Mr. Webb into an asylum, where improved treatment was adopted, and it was only after an appeal to the French tribunals, by which Captain Palmer was condemned in costs, that such removal was effected.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—All that relates to the state of his mind; I do not see that that is now material. The question now is as to the carriages of the commission.

Parker.—The persons who opposed measures calculated for the comfort of the alleged lunatic ought not to have the carriage of the commission.

Bacon, for the insurance office, being creditors on mortgage for 58,000*l.* offered that the company would undertake the carriage of the commission if the Court authorised them to do so.

Parker cited ex parte Tomkinson, 1 Ves. & Bea. 57, to shew that the nearest relations, though opposing the commission, will be intrusted with the carriage of it.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The only question is as to the carriage of the commission. It is admitted that he is in the same state of mind as in April last, when the petition of the petitioner, John William Webb, was presented. There is also a petition for the carriage of the commission by the West of England Insurance Company. But the directors of that office have no other interest in the matter, than from having lent money on the lunatic's life estate; they have no connection with the family, and they have no pretence for seeking the carriage of the commission. Then the natural daughter seeks to delay the issuing of the commission, and suggests that, with reference to Mr. Webb's state of mind, it is unnecessary. At any rate she seeks delay, and there is an indisposition, on her part, that the commission should proceed. The object is to bring the matter before the jury in the most unobjectionable mode. I think there is most chance of the matter being properly brought before the jury by the petitioner who is the next tenant in tail of the estate, though he is not by law related to the lunatic. It is another question who should have the care of the person and estate of the lunatic.

Bacon asked that the insurance company may have leave to attend the execution of the commission.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The company have that sort of interest that they may have liberty to attend upon the question of appointing the committee of the estate, but it must be at their own expense.

Walford.—It is the practice now to appoint the committees of the person and estate at the time of executing the commission; and it is an invariable rule to appoint the persons proposed by those having the carriage of the commission, unless a very strong cause is shewn to the contrary.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If that is the practice it is one which may be productive of great inconvenience; for if the finding of the jury should afterwards be contested, the property will have been taken away, although the person may eventually prove not to be a lunatic. It is a very improper practice, and I cannot permit it to exist.

Parker asked that Miss C. Webb might be at liberty to propose a committee of the person.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Such a proposal cannot be made without an order for that purpose; yet, if the practice said to have been adopted be allowed to exist, there is no opportunity of coming here for such an order. I cannot make an order for leave to propose a committee in anticipation of the finding of the jury. The only order I can make is, that she may be at liberty to attend the execution of the writ, and that no committee be appointed without a further order.

Parker asked for a direction that the estate may be managed in the same way as theretofore.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I have no jurisdiction to make any such order before the finding of a jury. There may be a commission to examine witnesses in Paris.

Bacon asked for the costs of the petition of the insurance company. The company have a large interest in the good management of the estate; there was a contest between the other parties, and the petition had put nobody to any unreasonable expense. They had offered to undertake the carriage of the commission.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is the petition of a creditor coming in after petitions pending by members of the family. If any one incumbrancer may come in this way, twenty or thirty may come. The company presented the petition for their own protection, and must pay the costs of it.

ROLLS COURT.

Feb. 18, 19, 20, and April 17.

SPARLING v. PARKER.

Will—Construction—Charities—Mortmain Act—Tenant for life—Income in specie.

The testator in the cause, after directing the payment of his debts, gave certain sums to his executors in trust for certain charities, and then after making a specific bequest, he gave all the residue of his real and personal estate to his executors in trust to invest all such moneys as should be uninvested at his death, and also all his mortgages, shares in the Liverpool Gas Light, and other companies, &c. that could be immediately sold without disadvantage, and otherwise as soon as may be in such manner, whether in the purchase of lands as they shall judge most advantageous, and convenient to the estates "I already possess;" and he directed his executors to receive the interest, rents, and profits from all his real and personal (until converted into real) estate, and after deducting expenses to pay over the residue to Mrs. P. for life, and after her decease, &c. The pure personality was not sufficient to pay all the legacies, and there was a delay of four or five years in converting the personality.—Held that the shares of the testator in the several companies, whether incorporated by Act of Parliament or not, but by the constitution of which the shares were made personal estate, and to devolve as such, were applicable for the purpose of paying the charity legacies, and did not come within the Mortmain Act.—Held also, that Mrs. P. the tenant for life, was entitled to the income of the residuary estate in specie, till conversion.

Richard Sparling Berry, by his will dated the 5th of October, 1837, after directing the payment of his debts, and the interment of his remains in a private piece of ground, gave to William Sparling and two other persons whom he made his executors four several sums of 500*l.* sterling, on trust to invest the same in such manner as should be most advantageous, and pay the interest thereof on the 1st day of October in each year, in rewards to such poor, honest, and industrious people, resident within four several places therein mentioned, as should without parochial relief or assistance meritoriously educate their children, and train them to the path of piety and virtue. The testator then desired that his relations, Colonel and Mrs. De Whelpdale, should have power to select such of his household goods, furniture, &c. and personal effects not being moneys or securities for money which should be at his usual place of residence at his death. He then gave all the rest and residue of his real and personal estate and effects to his executors, "on trust; that they should invest all such moneys as should be uninvested at the time of his decease, after providing for the bequests thereby given; and also all the amount of all mortgages, shares, &c. as could be immediately sold without disadvantage and otherwise, as soon as might be, in such manner, whether in the purchase of lands, as they should judge most advantageous and convenient to the estates he already possessed; and he directed that his said executors should receive the interest, rents, and profits yearly, or half-yearly, accruing from all and every part of his said real and personal (till converted into real) estate, as they severally should accrue due; and that, after deducting all charges and expenses in the management of the property, they should pay over the residue, yearly and every year, during the term of her natural life, to Eliza Helen (the wife of the Rev. William Parker, of, &c. heretofore Eliza Helen) Welch, youngest daughter of, &c." and the testator directed that her receipts should be sufficient discharges, and that the property should be to her separate use; and after her decease he devised to several persons in remainder, as therein mentioned. There was also, among others, a bequest to the executors of 500*l.* each.

The testator died soon after making his will, which was dated and signed in pencil only, and was not executed so as to pass real estate. Application being made to the Ecclesiastical Court for probate, it was refused, but this decision was reversed by the Privy Council, and probate was accordingly granted on the 2nd December, 1841, in the province of Canterbury, and on the 3rd of January, 1842, in the province of York. The executors then instituted a suit for the administration of the testator's estate; and on the 1st of February, 1843, a decree was made therein, referring it to the Master to make certain inquiries as to the state of the property, &c. On the 1st of March, 1845, the Master made his general report, whereby he found, among other things, that the testator's personal estate, not specifically bequeathed, consisted, at the time of his death, of mortgage securities, other chattels real, bonds, &c. but that there were no leaseholds. He also found that there were no chattels real but the mortgages and certain shares in railway and other companies, and that these shares were, by the constitution of the several companies, declared to be personal estate; and in the schedule to the report, the shares were fully described. They consisted of sixty 50*l.* shares in the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway Company, forty-five 20*l.* shares in the Edinburgh, Leith, and Newhaven Railway Company, five 100*l.* shares in the Liverpool Gas Light Company, ten 20*l.* shares in the Lancaster Gas Light Company, and forty 100*l.* shares in the Harrington Dock Company. The Liverpool Gas Light Company was incorporated by Act of Parliament (58 Geo. 3), and was thereby empowered to purchase lands and buildings, and the shares were to be deemed to be personal property, and transmissible as such. The Lancaster Gas Light Company is a partnership, constituted by deed of the 20th of January, 1836, whereby the stock to be raised was to be assignable in a prescribed form, and it was provided that the shares in the lands, &c. should be deemed personal estate. The Harrington Dock Company is also a partnership, constituted by deed, and it is thereby provided that the shares shall be deemed to be personal estates, and transmissible as such.

Some of the mortgages had been realized under the decree of the Court, but part of them, together with the whole of the railway and other shares, was still outstanding. The pure personality, independently of the mortgages and shares, was insufficient to pay debts and legacies, and hence a question arose as to whether, under the 9 Geo. 3, c. 36, the charity legacies should abate in proportion to the amount thereof, payable out of the proceeds of the shares. Several sums had from time to time been paid to Mrs. Parker, the tenant for life, in respect of the income of the personal estate; and a second question arose as to her right to the actual income of the personality as it stood at the death of the testator till conversion and investment by the trustees, or only to so much thereof as would be equal to the dividends, interest, or produce arising therefrom, if converted and invested. The cause now came on upon further directions.

Turner (with him Gildart), for the plaintiff, contended that the shares in the companies in England were applicable to the payment of the charity legacies, it being admitted on all hands that the Scotch shares were so. (Mackintosh v. Townsend, 16 Ves. 330; March v. Attorney-General, 5 Beav. 483; Attorney-General v. Giles, 5 Law J. N. S. Ch. 44; App. Shel. St. Mortm. 988; Du Houmelin v. Sheldon, 1 Beav. 79; Bligh v. Brent, 2 Y. & C. Exch. 268; Thompson v. Thompson, 1 C. C. C. 38).

Purvis (with him Walpole) contended that though the shares, for the purpose of devolution, were to be considered personality, yet that being aliquot parts of an aggregate whole, consisting of (among other things) land, they must be real estate. They cited Buckridge v. Ingram, 2 Ves. jun. 652; Knap v. Williams, 4 Ves. 430, n.; House v. Chapman, 4 Ves. 542; Re v. Bates, 3 Price, 341; Ex parte Lancaster Canal Company, Re Dilworth, 1 Deac. & Chit. 411; Bradley v. Holdsworth, 3 Mee. & W. 422; Baxter v. Brown, 7 Mnn. & Gr. 198; Barker v. Hay, 9 B. & Cr. 489; Attorney-General v. Mangles, 5 Mee. & W. 120. The testator intended to give Mrs. Parker the income in specie till conversion. (Barnard v. Sitwell, 6 Ves. 520; Bathune v. Kennedy, 1 Myl. & Cr. 114.)

Revell (with him Whitmarsh, jun.) for Charles Sparling, the first remainderman, contended that the charities must abate, and that Mrs. Parker was not entitled in specie to the income. (Harrison v. Harrison, 1 Russ. & My. 71, 1 Tam. 273; Alcock v. Soper, 2 Myl. & Cr. 699; Pickering v. Pickering, 4 Myl. & Cr. 289; Douglas v. Congreve, 1 Kee. 410; Caldecott v. Caldecott, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 312; La Zerrere v. Bulmer, 2 Sim. 18.)

Tirney (with him Perry), for John and William Sparling, cited Taylor v. Clark, 1 Hare, 161, and stat. 38 Geo. 3, c. 60, s. 99, by which the land-tax is made personal estate.

Turner in reply.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The question as to the Mortmain Act is one of considerable importance and great difficulty, and I must look into it further, and reserve my opinion upon it. As to the construction of the will, however, and the question raised as to the interest of the tenant for life, I do not think there is much difficulty. Every case of the kind must depend on its own peculiar circumstances. Questions of this kind continually arise, whether the tenant for life is entitled to enjoy property in specie, either during life, or during some particular limited period; and what is to be considered is, whether the tenant for life is entitled, under the circumstances of this case, to enjoy the property in specie, until the conversion is actually made. There is no point made here that this is perishable property, or that it is running out; though, it is true, it is not that sort of property in which the Court would direct investments to be made, it is, nevertheless, permanent property; and we are to find out what it is the testator intended should be done with it, till the time of conversion should arrive, which he himself has directed to be adopted. I find nothing in the will at all pointing to the notion that there was to be an immediate sale, and conversion and investment of the produce of the sale in stock, till it could be afterwards invested in land. What the testator says is this:—"I give, devise, and bequeath all my moneys, securities for money, and also all my real property," &c., to the trustees, "upon trust that they shall invest all such moneys as shall be uninvested, at the time of my decease, after providing for the bequests hereinbefore and hereinafter contained, and also all the amount of all mortgages, shares, &c. as can be immediately sold without disadvantage and otherwise as soon as may be, in the purchase of lands as they shall judge most advantageous and convenient to the estates I already possess." The estates were not devised by his will, because it was not duly executed, but he intended so to devise them, because he has so expressed it, and he has allowed a postponement of the time of sale with reference to the advantage of those estates which he intended to devise. He then directs the trustees to receive the interest, rents, and profits yearly, or half-yearly, arising from all and every part of his real and personal estate, until converted into real property. He does not direct an immediate sale; but having the word "immediately" connected with the words "without disadvantage," and having the words "so soon as may be" connected with the words "as they shall judge most advantageous and convenient to the estates I already possess;" and having regard to those causes of postponement which he had specially referred to, he directs that the interest, rents, and profits of his personal estate should be paid to this lady, Eliza Helen Parker, for her life, and then after her death he gives, devises, and bequeaths all his said real and personal estate not converted into real estate, to Charles (as he believed), the second son of William Sparling, then a captain in her Majesty's 15th Light Dragoons, and to his first and other sons in the usual mode of succession, failing whom he gives, devises, and bequeaths all his real and personal estate, until converted into real estate, to John, the third son of William Sparling, and so on, with another like limitation over. I cannot, certainly, collect from this will that the testator intended that there should be a conversion of his personal property into real immediately, come what might. Now, a trustee having a discretion to exercise his judgment in that way, and being called upon to exercise it, would not be allowed to do so in such a capricious manner as to be injurious; and a good deal of the discussion proceeded upon the supposition that there had been some want of discretion on the part of the trustees. That, however, is disavowed, and very properly; but the argument proceeded, in part, upon that footing. Nobody had any authority to sell for four years after the death of the testator, and therefore no fault is attributable to any one. The testator has said this:—"Let there be a conversion, if my estate requires it, but in the mean time, and until the conversion takes place, I give the profits to the tenants for life." The conversion which he contemplated could not take full effect, first of all, because his will was disputed and not proved, and then, when it was established, it did not affect the real estate; but that is no reason why we should try to escape from the intention which he has expressed, nor do I see my way, I confess, to escape from the direction which he gives. He expressly says, that he means to comprise all that he possesses, or that in any way belongs to him, of what nature, kind, or description soever; and that being the property which he calls his said real and personal estate, it is said that the rule of this Court is so absolute, that I must consider it the duty of the executors, who were not existing, to have converted it into real property within the year. I think I have no occasion here to revert to that doctrine which has been so much contested in this court, and as to which there have been so many decisions of different judges. It is very much to be regretted that there is no rule that can be relied upon on that subject. I think I am not at present called upon to decide it, because it appears to me that on the construction of this will the words of the testator authorize me to say, that the tenant for life shall have the income of the property, as it stood at the testator's death, from the time of his death till it shall be converted; and I think there should be directions for that purpose.

April 17.—THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case the testator bequeathed certain legacies for charitable purposes; and with a view to the question whether any abatement of those legacies ought to be made under the operation of the Statute of Mortmain, the Master was directed to distinguish such parts of the testator's personal estate "as at the time of his death consisted of leaseholds, mortgage securities, or other chattels, real or otherwise, arising from or connected with land." The Master has found that the testator was possessed of no leasehold estates, but was possessed of several mortgage securities; and that other parts of his personal estate consisted of chattels, real or otherwise, arising from or connected with land, which were particularized and stated in the second part of the third schedule to his report, and which are there particularized as consisting of five 100*l.* shares in the Liverpool Gas Light Company, sixty 50*l.* shares in the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway Company, forty-five 20*l.* shares in the Edinburgh, Leith, and Newhaven Railway Company, ten 20*l.* shares in the Lancaster Gas Light Company, and forty 100*l.* shares in the Harrington Dock Company. It is admitted that the Scotch railway shares do not fall within the provisions of the Mortmain Act; but with respect to the others, viz. the shares in the Liverpool Gas Light Company, the Lancaster Gas Light Company, and the Harrington Dock Company, a question is made whether they are interests in land of such a nature as to render them inapplicable for the purposes of charity under the statute. [Here his lordship described the constitution and objects of the companies, &c.] Each of these companies, and the Harrington Dock Company to a very large extent, is possessed of and entitled to land and real estate as part of its joint stock or capital, and each shareholder having an interest in an undivided portion of the aggregate of the joint stock capital, has, or must be supposed to have, some interest in the real estate which constituted part of that aggregate stock, that is, an interest that so much of the joint stock as consisted of land should be employed with the rest of the joint stock for the best advantage of the joint concern, and an interest in the clear produce which might arise from the sale of the joint stock, including the land, in case the company should be determined, and the affairs wound up and settled. The question is, whether this is such an interest in land as was contemplated by, or such as can be deemed to be within the true intent and meaning of the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 3. Is it such an estate or interest in land as can be brought within the meaning of the Statute of Mortmain? A shareholder in one of these companies, whether incorporated or not, has a right to receive the dividends payable on his shares, that is, a right to his just proportion of the profits arising from the employment of the joint stock, consisting partly of land; and he has also a right to assign his shares for value, but whilst he continues to hold his shares he has no distinct or separate right to the land, or any part of it. He is, indeed, interested in the employment of the land, but he cannot proceed against the land directly for any thing which is due to him, or make any part of the land his own in part satisfaction of any demand or claim he may have as a shareholder. He is not in the situation of a mortgagee, who has a legal interest in the land, and which land he may make his own absolutely by foreclosure; nor is he in the situation of a tenant in common, or a joint tenant, who may make part of the land his own; and if upon a dissolution or determination of the joint concern, he should become owner of any part of the land, it is only upon a new transaction, and by requiring a new title and right as a purchaser. If he dies, nothing descends to his heir, and his legal personal representatives do not acquire any share or any interest in the land different from that which the deceased shareholder himself possessed; and on the administration of the estate of a deceased shareholder, the shares which he may have possessed in the joint stock company, in the absence of special directions or circumstances, to be sold and converted into money to be otherwise invested. The Courts have held that if a man directs lands to be sold and the produce applied, either by itself or as part of a mixed fund, in payment of legacies to charity, the legacies, so far as their payment is made to depend on the produce of the real estate, must fall as being plainly contrary to the intent and policy of the Mortmain Act, and marshalling is not allowed; but no case has determined that such shares as are now in question are within the meaning of the Act; and on the whole I am of opinion that a shareholder in such joint stock companies as are now under consideration is not in that character, entitled to any such estate, or interest in the land, falls within the true intent and meaning and operations of the Mortmain Act of 9 Geo. 2, c. 36. If the company continues, the share is only transferrable for money, and the shareholder has no right to the land; if the company be dissolved the whole property is sold, and the concern is wound up, and the shareholder only obtains his share of any surplus which there may be after satisfying all the demands of the concern. I am of opinion in this case that so much of the testator's assets as consisted of shares must not be applied so as to cause an abatement of the charity legacies.

March 27 and 28.

HARGRAVE v. HARGRAVE, Practice—Injunction—Receiver.

A person claiming to be entitled to an undivided moiety of certain hereditaments, in common with another person in possession and receipt of the rents and profits, having moved for an injunction against the latter to restrain him from such receipt, and to appoint a receiver, the Court after consulting the authorities granted the motion.

The plaintiff and the defendant are brothers, or at least are supposed to be, but the defendant, denying the plaintiff's legitimacy, refuses to allow him the rents, &c. of an undivided moiety in certain hereditaments to which he is entitled if legitimate; and this suit is to enforce the claims.

Turner (with him Keyle), on behalf of the plaintiff, now moved for an injunction to restrain the defendant from receiving the rents and profits, and for a receiver. He cited Louder v. Baddington, 3 Dan. Ch. Pract. 417, 7th February, 1805, and Taylor v. Jardine, Reg. Lib. 8th March, 1840, not reported.

Perry opposed the motion, as being contrary to all principle as well as practice. It would be very inconvenient if such a practice were to prevail; and besides it had not been shown that the defendant was excluded. He cited Calvert v. Adams, 2 Dick. 478, and observed that the only case in which such an order could be found was that of Reely v. Reely, 2 Dick. 800; and in Tyson v. Fairclough, 2 S. & St. 142, Sir John Leach refused the motion. The right of the plaintiff was denied, though there had been an issue tried and the verdict was in his favour.

Turner, in reply.
The MASTER of the ROLLS said he would read the authorities, but saw no reason why it should not be done.

March 28.—His lordship made the order.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

July 8 and 17.

RANKIN v. HANWOOD.

Judgment creditor—Writ of execution—Decree—Priority.

When a judgment creditor has taken out a writ of execution against his debtor, although it may not have been executed in his lifetime, he notwithstanding acquires a priority of claim over the assets of his debtor in the hands of his executor, and a decree in equity for the administration of the debtor's assets will not interfere with his right of priority. Judgment creditors, however, not using due diligence in enforcing their claims may lose their right of priority over creditors where there is a decree for the administration of the debtor's assets in equity.

This was an application by creditors under a decree in equity for an injunction to restrain the sheriff of Surrey from proceeding to sell certain goods belonging to the testator in the cause, whose estate was directed to be administered by the decree for the benefit of creditors; the question turned on the effect of a judgment obtained, and writ issued in the lifetime of the testator, though execution had not been levied until after the death of the testator, whether the judgment creditor had thereby obtained a title to the goods of the testator prior to the creditors under the decree, which had not been obtained until after the death of the testator, but prior to the taking of the goods by the sheriff.

Judgment had been obtained against the testator on the 9th of December, 1845, and on the 10th of December next following a writ of execution issued, and nulla bona returned, on the 6th of April, 1846, a writ of execution again issued, and on the day following the testator died; and on the same day the writ of execution was placed in the hands of the sheriff, it appeared from the affidavits that the executors of the testator had locked up and concealed the goods in such a manner near Streatham that the sheriff's officer did not succeed in executing the writ by taking possession of the goods until the 2nd of July instant. The suit in which the decree had been obtained had been filed by a mortgagee against the testator, and when he died it was revived against his executor, and on the 6th of June, 1846, a decree was made by consent, which directed the mortgaged premises to be sold, and if they proved insufficient to pay the mortgage debt, then and then only, an account of the assets of the testator should be taken and distributed for the benefit of creditors. The executors gave the judgment creditor and the sheriff notice of this decree on the 2nd of July inst.

Romilly and Pole moved for the injunction.

Rolt and Taylor opposed the application, and contended that the title of the judgment creditor to the goods of the testator was complete on the issuing of the writ of execution; that the death of the debtor did not alter his right; and had it not been that the executor of the debtor kept the goods concealed, the sheriff's officers would have had them in possession on the 8th of July; that this decree was not sufficient for the Court to issue an injunction upon, even though the Court considered a decree in equity should not be thwarted by a proceeding under a judgment at law. This was not a decree for the general administration of the testator's effects, it was only provisionally so, in case the property held in mortgage proved insufficient to pay the mortgagee's debt. The decree, to justify the Court to interfere with the proceedings of a creditor at law, ought to be absolute and unconditional, which was not the case in this decree. It might so turn out that no account of the assets could be taken under it, and if an injunction was granted, the judgment creditor might lose his opportunity of securing his debt at law, and, after, all not have the power of coming in to prove it under this decree.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In this case the writ is in the hands of the sheriff, having issued in the lifetime of the debtor; the goods are also in possession of the sheriff; and if I refuse the injunction, the goods are gone, as there is no appeal. Should the plaintiff desire to have the Lord Chancellor's decision, I shall not give judgment in order to enable him to do so. My opinion is, that the creditor has a right to have his judgment executed.

Rolt and Romilly both agreed that they would be satisfied with his Honour's judgment.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (after stating the facts of the case).—At the death of the testator, Kirk, the judgment creditor had the option to sue out a scire facias against the executor, or take the goods of the testator. He adopted the latter course. The question, then, was, what was the position of the executor? Suppose the writ had been put into the hands of the sheriff in the lifetime of the testator, the goods would then have been bound at and ever since his death; there never could have been an instant of time during which the executor could have dealt with the assets, unless in market overt (an exception in favour of a purchaser only), so as to have prevented Kirk from taking them in execution; if the executor had sold them by private contract, to raise money for any purpose of administration, or had delivered them to a creditor of the testator in satisfaction of a debt, Kirk might have followed them without noticing the executor. It was therefore strictly true, whatever the consequences might be, that at the death of the testator, supposing the writ to have been then in the hands of the sheriff, Kirk had a dominion over the goods paramount to that of the executor; or, in other words, the amount of the assets of the testator over which the executor had dominion adverse to Kirk's right, was the amount of the gross assets, minus the amount of Kirk's claim. The circumstance that the writ was not put into the hands of the sheriff until after the death of the debtor did not in point of reasoning make any difference, because the writ, when put into the hands of the sheriff, took effect upon its date, and was effectual by means of the proceedings had in the debtor's lifetime. It is further to be observed, that the creditors have no equity independent of the decree, however Courts of equity might encourage suits for the general administration of estates, for the sake of equality amongst creditors. The equity arose wholly out of the decree, which was in the nature of a judgment for the benefit of all creditors, and proceedings at law were only stayed because the decree could not be carried if the creditors were allowed to proceed at law. These observations, however, were not conclusive upon all cases in which the question might arise. No doubt a creditor who at the death of the testator was in the same position as Kirk, might, for the purposes of a motion like this, be held to have lost his advantage by delay in prosecuting his right at law, and perhaps by other circumstances; but in this case the creditor having by diligence recovered judgment against the testator in his lifetime, in a way which gave him the option adverted to, the rights and powers of the executor were from the beginning subject to the rights which the diligence of the creditor had thus acquired, and the assets which the executor had the power to bring for administration were subject to those rights. My judgment is grounded upon the decision of the case of Lee v. Park, 1 Keen. There will also be some useful observations found in the case of Vernon v. Thelluson, 1 Phil. 466. Mr. Rolt's client must bear the costs of this motion against Mr. Romilly's client, who will be entitled to be paid out of the assets of the testator in the cause.

COVENTRY v. THE EARL OF LAUDERDALE.

Will—Construction—Unmarried—Next of kin.

The word "unmarried," when used in a will or settlement, is flexible in its meaning, and may be construed as meaning "never having been married," or "discovered at the time of the death," according as it appears to best carry out the intention of the parties.

Lady Coventry, by her will, dated the 21st day of July, 1838, under power reserved to her under her marriage settlement, devised and bequeathed all the rest and residue of her moneys, accumulations of income, stock, funds, and securities, and all her personal estate and effects whatsoever, over which she had power of limitation or appointment by will, unto the Earl of Lauderdale, and Viscount Maitland, and Sir Antony Maitland, upon trust to convert such parts as did not consist of money at her death into money, and invest the same in the public funds of Great Britain, and stand possessed thereof upon trust during the joint lives of her husband the Earl of Coventry, and her son Henry Aurelius Coventry, and to pay the dividends and interest to her said son, Henry Aurelius Coventry, during the life of her said husband; and after his decease, in the event of her said son surviving him, upon trust to invest the annual income of her said residuary estate during the life of her said son, and from and after his decease, upon trust for the child or children of her said son (other than his eldest son), equally between those who should live to attain the age of twenty-one years, or, being daughters, should attain that age or be married; and in case there should be no younger children of her said son, and there should be an eldest son, then upon trust to pay the whole of the said residuary estate and the accumulations to the eldest son of her said son on his attaining twenty-one years of age; and in case of the death of her said son without leaving any child or children who should attain twenty-one years of age, or, being daughters, should attain that age or be married, then upon trust to apply the annual proceeds to the separate use of her daughter, Lady Holland, during her life; and after her decease to apply the said residuary estate and accumulations amongst the children of Lady Holland in the same manner as she had directed them to be distributed amongst the children of her son, Henry Aurelius Coventry; and in case her said daughter should die, leaving no child who should attain a vested interest in her said residuary estate, she directed her trustees to stand possessed thereof in trust for the person or persons of her blood and kindred who would be entitled to the same as her next of kin under the statute for the distribution of intestates' effects in case she had died intestate and unmarried, and appointed the said Earl of Lauderdale and Sir Antony Maitland executors of her will.

Lady Coventry died on the 11th of September, 1845, without having revoked the above bequests in her will, leaving her son, the said Henry Aurelius Coventry, and Lady Holland, her daughter, her only children and next of kin surviving her.

On the 12th of February, 1846, letters of administration, with her will annexed, were granted to the Earl of Lauderdale and Sir Antony Maitland by the Prerogative Court of Canterbury.

Lady Coventry survived her husband. Henry Aurelius Coventry was married and had children at the death of Lady Coventry; there are six of those children now living, consisting of sons and daughters, all under the age of twenty-one years.

In consequence of several questions of construction, both upon the settlements and the will of Lady Coventry, having arisen, a bill was filed on the 20th of April, 1846, to have the trusts of Lady Coventry's estate carried into effect under the decree of the Court. The infant children (except the eldest son) of Henry Aurelius Coventry were the plaintiffs; and the executors of Lady Coventry's will, and other parties beneficially entitled under it, were made defendants.

On the cause coming on for hearing, it was ordered to stand over to amend the bill, by making Henry Aurelius Beauchamp Coventry (eldest son of Henry Aurelius Coventry) a co-plaintiff.

The bill having been amended, the cause again came on for hearing, when it was submitted to the Court by Mr. Rolt, who appeared for the trustees and executors, whether the bill should not be further amended by making the next of kin of Lady Coventry, other than her son and daughter, or her grandchildren, parties; in consequence of the peculiar limitation of the residuary estate after the death of her son and daughter, without leaving children who should attain twenty-one years of age, or daughter who should attain that age or be married, he considered that this was the proper time to decide that question. The words of the trust for the next of kin were,— "interest for the person or persons of her blood and kindred who would be entitled to the same as her next of kin under the statute for the distribution of intestates' effects, in case she had died intestate and unmarried." At the time Lady Coventry made her will she was married; she had two children living: at her death she was unmarried, having survived her husband and never married again; so that the construction turns upon the meaning of the word "unmarried." His Honour, without having the case argued, took a note of the cases from counsel, and said he would look into them, and give judgment another day.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The question here, as I understand it, arises upon the residuary clause of the will of the late Lady Coventry. The will begins by reciting a settlement under which she had a power of appointment over 19,000*l.* and then the appointment concludes with this clause:—"And in case my said daughter shall die, leaving no child who shall attain a vested interest in my said residuary estate, I direct my trustees to stand possessed thereof in trust for the person or persons of my blood and kindred who would be entitled to the same as my next of kin under the Statute of Distributions of intestates' effects, in case I had died intestate and unmarried." This question has already been decided by Lord Cottenham, upon an appeal from the Vice-Chancellor of England, in the case of Maughan v. Vincent, 9 Law Journal, 329; the only difference there was, that that was a case upon a marriage settlement; the Vice-Chancellor decided that the word "unmarried" must be construed as "never having been married," to the exclusion of the children of the marriage. Lord Cottenham, on the appeal, did not consider the word "unmarried" of so inflexible a nature; and nothing but absolute necessity should induce the Court to adopt a construction which would have such an effect; he said that was not the necessary meaning of the word, which, strictly speaking, would mean not being in a state of marriage; and, according to the authorities, it has been construed to mean "never having been married," or, "unmarried at the time of death;" and from these shewed that it has a flexible meaning, and may be construed according to the obvious meaning of the parties using the term; and though he decided that case upon different grounds, it is impossible to read that judgment without seeing that he thought the word "unmarried" had a flexible meaning. In that case, as well as in this, if the lady survived the husband, the property was to go to her executors, and the next of kin would take; that she contemplates the case of her dying before Lord Coventry, when the property would have gone to him, and there is an obvious reason why he should be excluded; there is no such reason why her children should be excluded from taking, and thereby benefit the more remote next of kin. Lord Cottenham, in the case I have mentioned, concluded that the word "unmarried" meant discover. There is no difference between that case and the present; in both the parent is making a disposition for children. I therefore feel justified in deciding, as in that case, that there is no necessity for making the more remote next of kin parties to this suit.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Friday, June 12.

REG. V. THE GREAT NORTH OF ENGLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Indictment.—Corporation.

An indictment will lie against a corporation as well for a wrongful act, as for a wrongful mission; for omission, as well as for nonfeasance.

Indictment.—The first four counts were at common law for obstructing a highway, the obstruction being alleged in the 1st and 2nd counts to consist of a trench dug across the highway. In the 3rd and 4th, to consist of a bridge erected over the highway. The 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th counts charged the defendants with the violation of a provision (setting it out) of the Acts of Parliament, which authorised the construction of their railway, in erecting a bridge over the railway with an ascent exceeding one foot in twenty; and in making the approaches thereto with a greater ascent than one in twenty. The 8th count charged also the erection of a bridge for the purpose of carrying the highway over the railway, with an ascent which exceeded one foot in twenty; but did not set out the clause in the Act of Parliament; nor did it allege that the bridge was made in and upon the highway.

This indictment was tried before Mr. Justice Wightman, at the Spring Assizes (1845) for the county of Durham; when a verdict was taken for the Crown.

Worley, Q. C. In the following Term, obtained a rule to shew cause why that verdict should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendants, or why the judgment should not be arrested. That rule was obtained upon the following grounds: First, that a corporation is not indictable for misfeasance, though it is for nonfeasance. Secondly, that the first four counts could not be supported, because the company, under their Acts of Parliament, had an absolute and independent power of entering upon and cutting up the road for the purpose of making a bridge; and the provision requiring the bridge to be built with a certain ascent was not a condition precedent to that right; but was to be enforced by mandamus. Thirdly, that there was a variance as to certain counts; and fourthly, as to others, that they were bad in arrest of judgment, for not alleging that the bridge, which caused the obstruction, was erected in and upon the highway.

Oliver, Granger, and Bovill (on Tuesday, May 26, and Monday, June 8), shewed cause.—I. A corporation is as much indictable for a misfeasance as for a nonfeasance; no valid distinction can be drawn between the two cases; and R. v. The Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Company, 3 Q. B. 223, in effect decides the one point as well as the other. It cannot be disputed, that, for a private injury, trespass or trover will lie at the suit of an individual against a corporation; and if an action can be maintained for a private injury, an indictment will lie for a public wrong. (R. v. Trafford, 1 B. & Ad. 874.) [PATTERSON, J.—That decision was reversed in error.] But not as to the point for which it is now cited. (Moxon v. The Monmouthshire Canal Company, 4 M. & G. 452.) If the act be done in discharging their corporate duties, then the corporation is liable (Yarborough v. The Bank of England, 16 East, 6); for a corporation is just as capable of doing an act as an individual; they do the act by their servants; as, in this very case, the corporation is expressly formed for the purpose of making a railway; and actions are constantly maintained against corporations for acts done by their servants, as for wrongful distresses, and the like. Smith v. The Birmingham Gas Company, 1 Ad. & Ell. 526; Matthews v. The West London Waterworks Company, 3 Campb. 403; Parnaby v. The Lancaster Canal Company, 11 Ad. & Ell. 223; Tilson v. The Warwick Gas Company, 4 B. & C. 962; and Henley v. Lyme Regis, 5 Blig. 91, 108; and S. C. (in error) 3 B. & Ad. 77; in which last case it was argued, that though a corporation might be liable for misfeasance, they were not for nonfeasance—the converse of the argument used in the present case. Formerly, the rule that corporations could do no act except by deed, was very strictly acted upon; the exceptions were very few; but a change in the state of society, and the creation of a large number of trading corporations, have introduced new considerations and numerous additional exceptions to that ancient rule. This change is much discussed in Beverley v. The Lincoln Gas Company, 6 Ad. & Ell. 829, 838; and The Mayor of Ludlow v. Charlton, 6 Mee. & W. 815; and the principles there laid down are applicable here. This being a corporation, created by Act of Parliament, for the purpose of making a railway, they must confine themselves within the limit of the powers given by the Act (Murray v. The East India Company, 5 B. & Ald. 204); and if their agents exceed that limit, the ordinary rule of respondent superior must attach, and inasmuch as an indictment is no more than an action by the Queen for a public injury, there is no ground for contending that such a corporation is not liable to an indictment. No difficulty can arise as to the judgment, for the judgment may be fine or imprisonment, or both; and the fine may be levied by distress. In R. v. The Severn and Wye Railway, 2 B. & Ald. 646, an indictment would not have been an efficient remedy; and in the Sutton's Hospital case, 10 Rep. 1 a. 32 b, the animus was the gist of the offence. The dictum of Holt, C. J. in Anonymous, 12 Mod. 559, is of little weight without a knowledge of the circumstances under which it was uttered. [On this point they also cited Salmon v. The Hamborough Company, Cas. Chanc. 204; R. v. Medley, 6 Car. & P. 292; and Hall v. The Mayor, &c. of Swansea, 5 Q. B. 526.] Secondly, it is argued that the common counts cannot be maintained, because the Act of Parliament justifies the obstruction. Now the Act of Parliament (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 105), by s. 11, gives a general authority to cut the road, and to erect the bridge; but by s. 73 it is enacted, that "where any bridge shall be erected for carrying any public carriage road over the said railway, the road over such bridge shall be formed, and shall at all times be continued of such width as to leave a clear and open space between the fences of such road, of not less than fifteen feet, and the ascent of every such bridge for the purpose of such public carriage road (if a turnpike road) shall not be more than one foot in thirty feet, and, with respect to any public carriage road not being a turnpike road, shall not be more than one foot in twenty." That clause, therefore, limits the general power previously given; and according to the principles laid down in R. v. Scott, 3 Q. B. 543, the statute gives no protection, unless its provisions are complied with. A mandamus might, perhaps, be obtained to compel the erection of a proper bridge; but that affords no answer to this indictment, which it would not have afforded to that in R. v. Scott. Lastly, the 8th count is good; for first, it follows the words of the 73rd section of the Act; and, secondly, it does sufficiently allege that the bridge was made over the railway, and along and upon the highway.

Knowles, Q. C. Bliss, and Addison, contra.—Although an action may lie against a corporation for the acts of its servants, if done under the authority of the corporate seal, or if expressly directed to be done, and although an indictment for nonfeasance may lie against a corporation, yet for misfeasance it will not; and the authority of R. v. The Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Company (3 Q. B. 223) was expressly limited to cases of nonfeasance, to the omission to perform some duty imposed by law. For an indictment against a corporation, charging the positive commission of a wrongful act with violence, as here, there is no precedent; and the distinction between the two classes of cases is founded in reason. If a corporation is bound to do a particular act, as to repair a road by prescription, the neglect to do it could not be made the subject of an indictment against any individual member; but with regard to the commission of a wrongful act, the law can always be put in force against him who does the act, and if the corporation employ a beggar, still the liability may be traced back to the individual who gave the order. A corporation has no visible existence, and cannot be guilty of felony or treason, as is admitted even by the other side; and it is laid down in Hawk. P. C. (lib. 1, c. 65, s. 13), that a corporation cannot be indicted for any offence involving violence. The dictum of Lord Holt (Anon. 12 Mod. 559), quoted by Patterson, J. in R. v. The Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Company, though meagre, is also an express authority in support of the same view. A corporation might have no property, and then no fine could operate; and certainly no former conviction or acquittal of the corporation could be pleaded to an indictment against an individual member for the same offence. A corporation cannot sue for force; it cannot beat or be beaten, or do any corporal wrong (see 4 Man. & G. 453, Note of Cases from the Year Books); but force is a necessary part of this indictment. It is argued that if an action will lie, the injury being private, an indictment will lie, the wrong being public; but that is not so. Trespass will lie for an injury done by a lunatic, but not an indictment; or for a personal injury done out of the kingdom; or if a party assent is a trespass for his own benefit. Viner's Ab. Corporation (2). The cases of treason and felony are sought to be distinguished, on the ground that they involve the animus or intention of the party charged; but the intention is involved in every criminal case. They also cited Becker's case, 8 Rep. 69; 2 Ben. Ab. Corporation, E. 2. In Ducelin P. Secondly, the common counts are not supported. They charge the obstruction of a highway in the course of erecting a bridge; but that obstruction is clearly justified by the 11th section of the company's Act; and it is no answer to say that a subsequent section requires certain gradients to be observed in the construction of the bridge; because the obstruction of the road is precedent to making the ascent of the bridge; it first takes place, before even the foundations of the bridge are laid. R. v. Scott was a very different case; because there, by the terms of the Act of Parliament, a new road of a certain kind was to be made before the obstruction of the old road was permitted. The question here is, whether the company had not a right in the first instance to obstruct this road, for the purpose of building a bridge thereon; because, although in some cases parties may, after the commission of an act, become trespassers ab initio, no act can be made criminal by relation. Lastly, the 8th count does not point out the offence with sufficient precision. It charges the defendants with causing a bridge to be erected for the purpose of carrying the road over the railway, which was not of a proper ascent according to the Act of Parliament; but it does not allege that the bridge was erected over the railway, and in and upon the highway; so that if the company, as they lawfully might, had caused an iron bridge to be constructed at some iron works for the purpose of carrying the road over the railway, the terms of that count would be satisfied. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—R. v. Scott is evidently not precisely in point; because there the construction of the new road in a certain manner was expressly made a condition precedent to the right of obstructing the old road; but the question is, whether the general principle may not be drawn from it, that in cases like the present the Act of Parliament only authorises the obstruction in the particular mode pointed out.]

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court. There was an argument the other day upon a rule for a new trial in this case, in which the whole point which arose on the discussion was, whether an indictment will lie at common law against a corporation for a misfeasance, it being admitted, and in conformity with undisputed decisions, that an indictment may be maintained for nonfeasance. Allowing that the preliminary difficulties as to service and execution of process and modes of appearing and pleading are, by this decision, removed, the argument was, that for a wrongful act the corporation is not amenable in an indictment, though for a wrongful omission it is, assuming, therefore, in the first place, that there is a plain previous distinction between the two species of offence. No assumption can be more unfounded. Many occurrences may be easily conceived even of annoyance and danger to the public involving blame in some individual or some corporation, and in which the most acute person could not define the cause, or ascribe it more properly to one than the other, such annoyance or such an act being rendered improper by nothing but the want of some safeguard. If the company is authorized to make a bridge with parapets, but makes it without them, does that constitute no injury or neglect to secure it? But if the distinction were discoverable, why should the corporation be liable for one and not the other? The startling incongruity is too strong an argument against it. It is as easy to charge one person or a body corporate with erecting a bar against a public road, as with the non-repair of it, or breaking it up; and they may as well be compelled to pay a fine for one as for the other. Some dicta occur in old cases, that a corporation cannot be guilty of treason or felony; it might be added, nor of perjury, or offences against the person. In the Court of Common Pleas lately, it was held that a corporation might be sued in trespass, but nobody has sought to fix it with acts of immorality; they derive their character from the corrupted mind of the person who violates the social duties; but though a corporation, which, as such, has no such duty, cannot be so guilty, they may be guilty, as a body corporate, of commanding acts to be done to the nuisance of the community at large. We are told this remedy is not required, because the persons who interfere—whether those who order the act to be done or those who do it—may be made answerable for it by criminal proceeding. Of this there is no doubt; but the public knows nothing of the former, and the latter, if they can be identified, are persons of the lowest rank, and wholly incompetent to make the least reparation. There can be no effectual means of deterring parties from the improper exercise of power for the purposes of gain, except the remedy by indictment against those who really commit it, that is, the corporation acting by its majority; and there is no principle which places them beyond the reach of the law for such purposes. The verdict for the Crown, therefore, on the first four counts, will remain undisturbed.

Rule discharged.

BARRITT V. OLIVER.
Seduction—Loss of service.

As between parent and child, the very slightest acts of service are sufficient to entitle the parent to maintain an action for the seduction of his child.

Trespass for the seduction of the plaintiff's daughter, Elizabeth.

Plea.—That Elizabeth was not the servant of the plaintiff.

At the trial it appeared that the daughter Elizabeth had been in service, but had come home to Salskash to attend upon her aged mother; that when at home, she and her sister set up a school, but that she also was engaged in the management of the domestic affairs, and rendered numerous acts of service and attention to her mother; that the daughter and a son jointly paid the rent of the house in which the family lived, and that the mother went away to live at Plymouth about one month before the loss of the service occurred. Afterwards the school failed, and the daughter Elizabeth followed her mother to Plymouth, and lived with her there. Upon these facts the learned judge (Coleridge, J.) told the jury that they could not doubt that the relation of mistress and servant subsisted between the mother and daughter; and a rule nisi for a new trial had since been obtained, on the ground of misdirection.

M. Smith now shewed cause.—The question is, whether there was any evidence of service; for any evidence would be enough. It is not to be denied that some service must be shewn (Grinnell v. Wells, 14 L. J. N. S. C. P. 19; 8 Scott, N. R. 741); but the slightest acts of service are sufficient; per Buller, J. in Bennett v. Allcott, 2 T. R. 166; particularly in the case of parent and child. (Rose. N. Pri. 467). Occasional assistance (Mann v. Barrett, 6 Esp. 32); and even a right to service has been held enough (Maunder v. Venn, M. & M. 324; per Littledale, J.); but here the evidence is much stronger.

Crowder, Q. C. contra.—After the case of Grinnell v. Wells, the decision in Maunder v. Venn is not law; for the former decides that the loss of service is the gist of the action. Here, 1st, there is no evidence of service; but rather the contrary; and 2ndly, there is no loss of service, for the plaintiff had left one month at least before her daughter was confined. (He cited Robert Marys' case, 9 Co. R. 113). [WIGHTMAN, J.—Is there not a case in which the loss of innocence in a servant was held to be a sort of constructive loss of service, in the absence of proof of any actual loss of service? M. Smith mentioned Joseph v. Cavander, Rose. N. P. 467.]

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The recent case in the Common Pleas (Grinnell v. Wells) only decides that the loss of service is the gist of the action, and that a declaration not averring it could not be supported. Of that there is no doubt; and that which is averred must be proved to the satisfaction of the jury; but where the relation of parent and child subsists, very little will suffice; for an aged parent has a certain right to command the services of a child, and possesses a certain control over her; and here, though the plaintiff was not paying her daughter any wages, she was availing herself of the kindness and attentions, which the daughter, it appears, rendered to her. Then a question is raised whether there was any loss of the service; but after the service is once established, the loss may be said to follow almost as a matter of course. I am not disposed to say that Mr. Justice Littledale went too far in Maunder v. Venn, and that if there is the constant opportunity for a parent to avail himself of the services of his daughter, that is not sufficient, because the constant render of services in a family may make it impossible to shew service. Nor do I think that the being deprived of the services of a decent person is immaterial in considering whether the plaintiff has sustained a loss. Indeed, the practice of the law has been, for many years, to lay hold of any pretext, with the view of affording some remedy, however inadequate, for the greatest of all injuries.

PATTERSON, J.—The case is in the Common Pleas on a question of pleading is no authority here; and my only doubt arises as to the loss of service. It appears that the plaintiff left about a month before her daughter's confinement, and that the daughter afterwards followed her. That matter is not very satisfactorily explained; but at all events it is certain that the plaintiff required the attendance of some person during all the time; and that her daughter was unable to give that attendance.

WIGHTMAN, J.—In Grinnell v. Wells an attempt was again made which had been unsuccessful once before in Sutterhouse v. Duerst, 5 East, 47 (n.); where it was decided that service and the loss of service must be shewn. Very slight acts of service are enough; but here they were not very slight; and, as to the loss of service, is it not at all events an inference which the jury might draw, that even a month before her confinement she was less capable of rendering service than she would have been?

Rule discharged.

WOOD V. COCKRELL.

Assignment of copyright.—Action by assignee.—Readiness and willingness—Variance.

In an action by the assignee of a copyright, upon an agreement for permission to publish, in which the declaration averred that the plaintiff was ready and willing, pursuant to the agreement, to deposit with a third person the deed of assignment, it was proved that the plaintiff offered to deposit the assignment, upon receiving an undertaking from that third person that he would not part with it until a certain event: Held, a fatal variance.

Semble, that letters offered in evidence to prove the terms of a contract, ought to be stamped, though they purport to refer to an agreement previously made, to terms previously accepted.

Quære, whether a licence to publish a book, granted by the assignee of the copyright, is a sufficient consideration for a promise to pay money, unless the assignment of the copyright be registered, and the licence be in writing.

Assumpsit.—The declaration, after reciting that one Charles Pope was the author of a book called the "Yearly Journal of Trade," and that he had assigned the copyright to the plaintiff for 100l. set out an agreement by the defendant, in consideration that the plaintiff would grant him his licence and permission to print and publish the said book, and would deposit with one W. the deed of assignment of the said copyright, to pay a sum of 30l. and to give a bill. It then averred that the plaintiff did grant to the defendant his licence and permission to use the copyright, and was ready and willing to deposit with W. the said deed of assignment; but that the defendant did not pay, &c.

Plea.—Non assumpsit; and traverses of the material allegations in the declaration.

At the trial it was opened, on the part of the plaintiff, that the agreement was by parol, but to be proved by letters; and those letters, when produced, contained either the proposal of terms only, or the acknowledgment that certain terms had been previously agreed upon; but did not themselves constitute the agreement, or contain any acceptance of terms. The verdict being for the plaintiff, a rule nisi for a nonsuit or new trial had since been obtained; and the four questions to be argued were settled between the parties.

Temple shewed cause.—1st. Were the letters inadmissible for want of a stamp? The Stamp Act only requires the note or memorandum of an agreement to be stamped, that is, the paper which contains the terms of the agreement; and it must be stamped, whether it be obligatory as an agreement, or as evidence of an agreement only; but a proposal in writing, accepted by parol, need not be stamped; and many cases shew the distinction between letters used as direct evidence of an agreement, and those used as containing an acknowledgment only of a previous agreement. (Robinson v. Drybrough, 6 T. R. 317; Drant v. Brown, 3 B. & C. 665; Whelden v. Mathews.

2 Chitt. 399; Edgar v. Blick, 1 Stark, 464; Beeching v. Westbrook, 8 M. & W. 411.) [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Suppose a letter in this form: "You and I have agreed," &c.] That would be an acknowledgment only, and would not require a stamp. [WIGHTMAN, J.—Then do you contend that whatever terms are used, there must be the expression of consent by both parties, in order to render a stamp necessary?] Yes. [WIGHTMAN, J.—Suppose, then, one letter containing a proposal, and another letter in this form: "You having accepted in writing my proposal, let the agreement be so."] There a stamp would be necessary; the plaintiff could not upon that evidence call upon the jury to infer a previous parol contract, because he had himself admitted it to be in writing. [WIGHTMAN, J.—The question as to the necessity of a stamp arises before the jury can be called upon to draw any inference from the document tendered.] But the effect of the instrument must be considered in every case. [PATTERSON, J. referred to Hughes v. Budd, 8 Dowl. 478.] Secondly, was the plaintiff bound to shew, either on the record or by evidence, that the assignment of the copyright was registered pursuant to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45? The objection is that there was no consideration for the promise, unless the plaintiff had title to the copyright; and that if the assignment was not registered he had none; but the omission to register does not affect the copyright, it only affects the right to sue for an infringement. [WIGHTMAN, J.—May not the registering take place at any time?] Certainly. (Chappell v. Purday, 12 M. & W. 303.) Thirdly, is the licence valueless to the defendant, because not in writing? Admitting that the defendant might be sued for infringement of the copyright, if the licence were not in writing, still there is a sufficient consideration for the agreement. The agreement is that if the plaintiff will suffer the defendant to publish a certain work, the defendant will pay a certain sum; and the declaration alleges that he did suffer him. That agreement, though not in writing, binds the plaintiff; and the adequacy of the consideration is not to be considered. (Haigh v. Brooks, 10 Ad. & Ell. 309.) A court of equity would restrain a plaintiff under such circumstances from proceeding for an infringement; and would decree a writing, if that should be necessary, for specific performance. (Pemher v. Mathers, 1 Brown, P. C. 51; Lady Herbert, app., Ld. Powis, resp., 1 Brown, Parl. Ca.; Aylett v. Bennett, 1 Anst. 45.) Neither is there any thing to prevent the owner of the copyright from binding himself by parol not to publish that work; but in the present case there is the further consideration that the plaintiff is to part with the deed of assignment, and consequently with the means of registering it, if it had not then been registered. Lastly, is the allegation that the plaintiff was ready and willing to deposit the deed proved? [WIGHTMAN, J.—Can you contend that it is? The evidence was that he was ready to deposit the deed on W. giving him an assurance that he would not part with it until the bill was paid.] The original agreement was fulfilled, if he was there with the deed. [WIGHTMAN, J.—So far from being ready and willing, he refused to deposit the deed unless he got an undertaking.] That undertaking was involved in the word deposit, which implies that the thing deposited is to be kept in the possession of him who receives it. This is like an allegation of readiness to pay, with proof of readiness to pay upon a receipt being given; and would that be any variance? Further, it amounted to a request only, not a condition.

Pearson, contra, was not called upon. Lord DENMAN, C. J.—I do not see how a man can be said to be ready and willing to do an act, when he says I will only do it if you will give me a particular undertaking, that undertaking forming no part of the agreement, though it may be within the spirit of it. There is a clear variance between the declaration and the proof.

PATTERSON, J., and WIGHTMAN, J., concurring, Rule absolute for a nonsuit.

ADMIRALTY COURT.

Wednesday, March 25.

(Before Dr. LUSHINGTON.)

THE SARACEN.

A sailor proceeding against a ship to recover a demand due to him, and obtaining a decree in her favour, is not bound to submit to a distribution of the proceeds to liquidate other demands, of the same species as his own, in favour of claimants who had not proceeded till the decree was made, or who commenced their proceedings on the same day.

The facts of this case are sufficiently stated in the following

JUDGMENT.

Dr. LUSHINGTON said this was originally a cause of collision, and the Court condemned the Saracen in the damages occasioned by it, which were then sued for. The action was brought by the owners of the Diligent, and the owners of part of the cargo laden on board her. The owners of the rest of the cargo were no parties to that action, but they claimed to share in the proceeds of the ship which were not sufficient to defray the amount of the value of the vessel and cargo destroyed. On the 6th of May, the Court, by interlocutory decree, pronounced for the damage and costs; and on the same day another action was entered by Mr. Bowdler, on behalf of the owners of the bulk of the cargo, in the sum of 2,500*l.* On the 24th June, Mr. Moore, in the action originally entered, brought in the proceeds, amounting to 1,037*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* The proctor who first appeared prayed that the proceeds of the sale should be decreed to his party; but Mr. Bowdler, on behalf of his party, objected to it, and prayed to be heard by act on petition. Counsel having been heard thereon, it was now the duty of the Court to consider the grounds on which Mr. Bowdler's party claimed a right to participate rateably in those proceeds. That claim was, if well-founded, founded on the ordinary law and practice of this Court, or on the special circumstances of the case. Was it the law of this Court that a suitor proceeding against a ship to recover a demand due to him, and obtaining a decree in his favour, was bound to submit to a distribution of the proceeds to liquidate other demands, of the same species as his own, in favour of claimants who had not proceeded till the decree was made, or who commenced their proceedings on the same day? How did that question stand in analogy to the principles and practice of other courts? The class of cases which approximated most nearly were proceedings by the creditors of a testator to recover claims for his executors. In substance the proceedings were the same. The whole law, so far as it was necessary to examine it, for the elucidation of this case, would be found in Williams's Treatise on Executors, vol. 2, second edition, book 2, part 3, sect. 5. Without going through the law, as there stated, it was abundantly clear that the law in all the courts favoured those who were most active in seeking her aid. Amongst claims of equal degree the creditors who first obtained judgment must be paid first, and in preference to all others. To insure an equal distribution of the estate amongst creditors a bill must be filed against the whole. If the proceedings in rem in this Court were to be assimilated to those in courts of law and equity, then in this case the claimants of the bulk of the cargo must fall in their prayer. He would endeavour to find a distinction if there were one. No bill had been given on the present occasion; the vessel arrested had been sold under the decree of the Court; the party who had obtained a judgment gave what might be deemed nominal bill, when he received payment, to answer according to the usual expression, "all latent demands." He was not aware that any judicial construction had been put on the document that was then executed. To assist the present claimant it must mean that he was entitled to come in, and so far as the contents of the instrument were concerned, at any time, and share accordingly. He doubted whether the instrument applied to any such claims as this at all, either in equal or prior degree. He believed that the expressions referred only to original interests in the subject-matter as title to the ship where the proceedings had been had in rem, but it was not necessary to decide that point. Possibly the words might extend to prior liens, but assuredly he could not find expressions which, by any construction, however extended, he could interpret to mean that the prior petens, who had obtained his money, should bring it back to share with a subsequent suitor, who had no preferential claims. If he were correct in the interpretation he put on the instrument itself, there was no sufficient ground for this claim to be found within the four corners of it. But all reasoning might and ought to give way to established practice; that practice, however, must be proved, and he could discover none, nor had any cases been mentioned. Could there be an established practice without a single instance to prove it? He thought not. Reference, however, had been made to the 53 Geo. 3, c. 159, the Act for limiting the responsibility of ship-owners, and it had been argued that by the adoption of the principles of that Act, the Court might give the relief prayed for. That Act gave the owners power to file a bill in equity, and bring in the value of the ship, which value was to be distributed to the claimants proportionably; still he was met by a difficulty that he could not surmount—for the right of so filing a bill was given to the owners for their protection, and not to the claimants for their advantage. He was of opinion that he could not do that at the instance of co-claimants, if such they were to be called. The Court would have done it de facto, had application been made in due time, but not to deprive a party of the benefit of a decree already made. The whole of the discussion would receive a more satisfactory solution if he looked at first and simple principles. How stood the law originally? Where the owners were answerable for damage done by collision, they were bound to pay the whole amount, whatever might be the value of the ship which did the damage. Those whose ship and cargo had been destroyed or damaged by the collision, might proceed at common law, and recover the whole damage from the owners of the ship occasioning it, be the damage what it might, and though ten times the value of the ship which occasioned it. The same persons might commence actions in this court by arrest of the ship, which in fact was only a proceeding to compel the owners to appear, and if they did not, also to afford the means of payment. But one suit in this court did not prevent another in it, save that the owners by leaving the ship to its fate left no means of obtaining further redress. If they bailed the action, he conceived that another party might arrest the ship; certainly they might sue at common law. The only preference in all those cases was the preference of prior petens. Why should he who was vigilant be compelled to surrender the benefit of it to another who was less active? When all were equally active, or so as to bring their suits before decree, it was possible that this Court might so have regulated its proceedings as to distribute the funds rateably to all having similar claims, but not after decree, which in itself conferred a preferable title. What made a difference in the present case? The Diligent was a foreign ship, and the owners abroad. The right of action remained to the parties injured; perhaps that right could produce no fruits, as the wrongdoers were not within the jurisdiction. Would that circumstance give a right to a party who had not availed himself of the law to proceed in rem to share with him who had? He was of opinion that it gave no such right. He knew of no shadow of ground for making a distinction in the case of a foreign vessel—a distinction which, if once introduced, would be bound by no limit which he could conjecture. But there was another ground alleged by the prayer, now preferred to the Court, on behalf of the owners of the bulk of the cargo, namely, an agreement between the proctors. He thought he had no jurisdiction to carry into effect such agreement; they were more fit for the cognizance of the Courts of Equity. If there were an agreement, the only proper course was for it to be alleged in acts of court, when it became the act of both parties, but he had never yet heard of the Court inquiring into any private agreement not evidenced by the minutes of the Court. The learned judge then referred to the statements made by the respective proctors, one of whom alleged, and the other denied, that there was any such agreement. He thought it no part of his duty to decide upon that alleged agreement, for he was of opinion that, if proved, he could not act upon it. He was called upon to alter a decree made by this Court, without opposition from the present party, to deprive those who had obtained such decree of a large part of the benefit to be derived therefrom; to deprive those who had been vigilant to support their own claims, and had run the risk of failure and the chance of costs, besides those which they themselves incurred. He was of opinion that he was not authorized so to do by law, or by the practice of this Court. As the question which he had had to decide had come before the Court in the present shape for the first time, he did not think that he was called upon to make any order for costs.

PREROGATIVE COURT.

(Before Sir H. JENNER PUST.)

GREGORY v. THE QUEEN'S PROCTOR.
Circumstances under which the Court will hold certain papers to be testamentary, and executed in compliance with the Wills Act.

The Court gave sentence in this long cause. It respects the validity of certain papers brought forward as the last will and testament of Mr. John Thompson, who died on the 6th March, 1843. The deceased was about eighty-five years of age, and his property in freehold and personality was very considerable. He left behind him a niece or grand-niece, Mrs. M. Le Bas, and several great grand-nephews, or great grandsons, who would have divided the property had no will been brought forward. The documents of March, 1843, were opposed by Mr. Gregory, who had been admitted as a contradicter to a previous will, dated 24th February in the same year. The case had come before the Court under very extraordinary circumstances. The first parties in the case were Mrs. Le Bas and Mr. Gregory. During the proceedings in the cause Mrs. Le Bas and Gregory intermarried. An appearance had been given on the part of Frances, James, and John M'Collock (two of whom were minors), &c. The case was by no means free from difficulties. Mr. Gregory now rested on the plea of Mrs. Le Bas, as their interests were united. In proof of the will before the Court, three witnesses had been examined—Charlotte Thompson, a confidential servant of the deceased, Mary Clarke, and Mr. Amos Gann, the solicitor of the testator. It appeared to have been the intention of the deceased to give a large proportion of his property to the M'Collocks. The deceased was a very vacillating person, writing frequently his intention on slips of paper. The paper of the 24th February, 1843, was important. It appointed Mr.

Gregory executor, gave an annuity of 300*l.* a-year to Mrs. Le Bas, besides other annuities, legacies, &c.; but it was clear that if it stood the great bulk of deceased's property would centre in Mr. Gregory. By the other will, that of March, 1843, Commissioners May, the Rev. Webb Ellis, and Mr. Amos Gann were appointed trustees. It divided his estates, &c. into eight equal parts. To Francis M'Collock he gave three-fifths, to James one and a half eighths, to John five-eighths (the figures were in pencil), and "on the same terms and conditions I give, demise, and bequeath to all their children." The papers before the Court were all in the handwriting of the testator, and they made a full distribution of the whole property. They were executed provisionally, in case of the death of the testator, and it appeared that they were delivered to Mr. Gann in the same plight and condition as when handed to him. The Court then had to determine whether these papers contained the real testamentary intentions of the deceased, and if they were executed with the formalities and the requirements called for by the Act of Parliament. The two witnesses to the execution were Charlotte Thompson and Mary Clarke, and they differed as to the fact whether the last sheet was signed when they attested it. When the witness Clarke took up a pen to sign her name, the testator said a pencil would do, observing, "It will be all right on Monday." He said to these witnesses that the paper was his last will and testament. Both witnesses signed the paper in pencil. It was clearly established that the testator at this time was capable of any act of an important nature, and that he was not so on Monday. The question was one of simple fact—had there been due execution? The papers were all laying flat on the table when the deceased said, "This is my last will and testament;" and the witnesses state that they might have read their contents. On Sunday the deceased was not well. The Court, in a case like this, must judge for itself. What did the testator write to Mr. Gann after the two witnesses Thompson and Clarke had signed their names? He told Mr. Gann, in a letter sent to him, "I have made my will, and my maids have attested it in pencil, so that it may be altered." He could hardly have forgotten that he had made a will only a short time before. These were circumstances that led the Court to the conclusion that the will in question was signed before it was attested. According to the principles upon which the Court had been governed in former cases, where there was a combination of circumstances in proof of an act done, it must consider these circumstances altogether, to see if the requirements of the Act of Parliament had been complied with. Then there was a letter to Mr. Gann, in which he states that he had been coughing from ten at night until eight in the morning, and had strained every nerve to make a will that would please him. This proved that the act had been done. Then did the will consist of one or three sheets of paper? It was sufficient for the present purpose that all the papers were on the table, where nothing to the contrary was shown. The event to be guarded against by the testator, in making the provisional will—that of death—before a more formal one was completed, did occur. Mr. Gann, the confidential friend of the deceased, deposed to the handwriting; some of it in pencil. How could the Court hold the contrary in the absence of adverse testimony, and say the papers were not in the handwriting of the testator? The Court regretted that it had not more facts before it, and that it was left to find its way to a correct decision. Mr. Gann had sworn that the will was in the same plight and condition as when he received it from the testator. After great anxiety and doubt, the Court was bound to hold that these papers were testamentary, executed in compliance with the Wills Act; and it was, therefore, bound to pronounce for them. The costs to be paid out of the estate.

Notice of appeal was immediately given.

REG. v. BADLOCK.

Aron—Straw, sedge, and rushes.

Sedge and rushes are not "straw," within the meaning of the stat. 7 Wm. 4, & 1 Vict. c. 69, which is confined to the straw of wheat, oats, barley, and rye. The indictment charged that the prisoner maliciously set fire to a certain stack of straw, on, &c. at, &c.

Burchem, for the prisoner, satisfactorily proved that the prisoner set fire to the stack in question, but in the course of the case it was discovered that the stack was composed of sedges and rushes, the produce of the fens, which had been cut and stacked.

WILLIAMS, J. thereupon stopped the case. The property here proved to have been destroyed did not fall within the provisions of the statute under which the indictment was framed. The prisoner was charged with having set fire to a stack of straw; but it appeared that the material of which this stack was composed was not straw, in the usual and legal acceptance of that term, which, as used by the legislature in that statute, meant the straw of wheat, barley, oats, and rye. Under these circumstances, therefore, the offence contemplated by the statute had not been committed, for the prisoner had not set fire to a stack of straw, but of sedge, which was a totally different thing, and no more straw than it was timber. It was sufficient, therefore, to say that the case did not fall within the terms of the Act, and the prisoner must be acquitted.

Tozer, for the prisoner.

Not guilty.

NICHOLSON, Clerk, v. RICHMOND PARSONAGE.
Incumbent—Nominée, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 62—Right to sue for breach of contract, in whom vested.

Semble that where a loan has been raised to re-build a parsonage-house, and a nominee appointed under the provisions of statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 62, who has entered into contracts with a builder, the right to sue for a breach thereof is vested in the incumbent, and not in the nominee, who is a mere agent in the matter.

Accomplish for breach of a contract to build the parsonage-house of Great Paxton, according to certain plans and specifications, and with good and workmanlike materials.

Plan, inter alia—Non accomplish.

Dyke, Serjt. (with him Birch) stated that the plaintiff was the incumbent of Great Paxton, in the city of Huntingdon, and that this action was brought to recover compensation from him for the breach of a contract entered into by him with the Rev. Mr. Lee, as the nominee of the bishop (under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 62), whereby he undertook to rebuild the house in question, according to certain plans, sections, and specifications, and with good, substantial, and workmanlike materials. The breaches assigned were that the defendant had departed from the said plans, sections, and specifications, and that the work had been done in a bad and unsubstantial manner, and with improper materials. It appeared that the vicarage, being greatly in want of a new house, application had been made for a loan to the commissioners under the statute in question; whereupon the Rev. Mr. Lee was appointed the nominee of the bishop, and the vicarage duly mortgaged in the usual way to the Commissioners of Queen Anne's Bounty, by whom the sum of 1,000*l.* was advanced. Mr. Lee thereupon entered into a contract in his own name with the defendant to do the necessary work. The old house was accordingly pulled down and a new one erected, but in so bad and improper a manner, as was alleged by the plaintiff, as to render it utterly worthless to him as a residence, and this action was brought to recover damages from the builder for such breach of his contract. It was understood that one defence would be that the action ought to have been brought by Mr. Lee, and not by the present plaintiff, who was the incumbent, and for whose benefit therefore the contract was made. As this question will turn on the terms of the statute, it might not be amiss to examine them now. The two sections applicable to this case are the 62nd and 66th.

The former of these renders it "lawful for the bishop to procure a plan or estimate of the work fit and proper to be done for building or repairing such house of residence, with all necessary and convenient offices, and thereupon by mortgage of the glebe, tithes, rent, and rent-charges, and other profits and emoluments arising or to arise from such benefice, to levy and raise such sums as the said estimate shall amount to." The 64th section enacts that "every such mortgagee shall execute a counterpart of every such mortgage, to be kept by the incumbent for the time being, and a copy of every such deed of mortgage shall be registered in the office of the registrar of the bishop of the diocese, after having been first examined by him with the original, which officer shall register the same and be entitled to demand and receive the sum of 5*s.* and no more for such register: and every such deed shall be referred to upon all necessary occasions; the person inspecting the same paying 1*s.* for every such search; and the said deed, or a copy thereof, certified under the hand of the registrar, shall be allowed as legal evidence in case any such mortgage deed shall be lost or destroyed." By the 66th section it is enacted, that "the money so to be raised shall be paid into the hands of such person or persons as shall be nominated and appointed by the bishop of the diocese, by writing under his hand, to receive and apply the same for the purposes aforesaid, in the form for that purpose contained in the said schedule, after such nominee shall have given a bond to the Ordinary, with sufficient security in double the sum so to be borrowed or raised, with condition for his duly applying and accounting for the same according to the directions of this Act. And the receipt of the person or persons so to be nominated shall be a sufficient discharge to the person or persons who shall advance and pay the money; and the person or persons so to be nominated shall enter into contracts, with proper persons, for such buildings or repairs as shall be approved by the said bishop, and shall be specified in an instrument written upon parchment, and signed by him, and shall inspect and have the care of the execution of such contracts, and shall pay the money for such buildings and repairs, according to the terms of such agreement; and also the expenses of preparing the mortgage deed, and incident thereto, and of making such certificate, plan, and estimate, and copies thereof as aforesaid, and shall take proper receipts and vouchers for the same; and as soon as such buildings or repairs shall be completed, and the money paid, shall make out an account of his receipts and payments, together with the vouchers for the same, and enter them in a book fairly written, which shall be signed by him; and when allowed by writing under his hand, such allowance shall be a full discharge to the person so nominated in respect to the said accounts. And if any balance shall remain in the hands of such nominee or nominees, the same shall be laid out in some further lasting improvements in building upon such glebe, or shall be paid and applied in discharge of so much of the said principal debt as such balance will extend to pay, at the discretion of the bishop, by order signed by him; and an account shall also be kept, made out, and allowed, of such further disbursements, in manner aforesaid; all which accounts, when made out, completed, and allowed, shall be deposited, with the vouchers, in the hands of the said registrar, and kept by him for the use and benefit of the incumbents of such benefice for the time being, who shall have a right to inspect the same whenever occasion shall require, paying to such registrar or deputy registrar the sum of 1*s.* for every such inspection." It is submitted, that under the provisions of this statute, it is not necessary that the present action should have been brought by Mr. Lee; though it may be admitted that it might have been so brought. The question will be whether he alone can sue the defendant for the breach of the contract into which he, Mr. Lee, had entered, merely as a nominee, and without any personal interest in it at all, but as the legally appointed agent of the incumbent. Being an agent, it is clear that Mr. Lee had a right, if he saw fit, to sue in his own name; but if he chose to disclose his principal, and disavow any interest in the contract, that principal has an undoubted right of action on the contract so entered into by another for him.

Certain matters having been then proved by the plaintiff,

O'Malley, with whom was Couch, objected, on the part of the defendant, that the action had been improperly brought by the plaintiff. The learned serjeant had himself admitted that the bishop's nominee might have sued the defendant; and it had been proved that Mr. Lee paid the defendant some money on account of this contract, which he had himself received in the character of bishop's nominee, from the Commissioners of Queen Anne's Bounty. He was, therefore, clearly the only and most proper person to sue, as the case for the plaintiff assumed that the contract had been made with him and him alone. Indeed, the language of the section is too clear to admit of a doubt, for it requires that all contracts shall be entered into by the nominee in his own name, and the incumbent, though they may be for his advantage, has yet actually nothing to do with them. If not, why should the legislature have recourse to the intervention of a third party, by whom the money is to be administered and the Act carried out in all respects? Under these circumstances, and for these reasons, it is submitted that the plaintiff must be nonsuited.

WILLIAMS, J.—The point raised by the learned counsel for the defendant may admit of a doubt, and is one which ought to be raised for the opinion of the full Court above; but I cannot take upon myself to decide it here peremptorily by nonsuiting the plaintiff on it. It does not strike me that the admission of my learned brother, that Mr. Lee might have sued, is conclusive that he, and he alone, ought to have sued; and as I find that the plaintiff on the record is the vicar of the parish for the accommodation of the incumbent of which this work was done, and that the funds were raised by mortgage of the preferment to the Commissioners of Queen Anne's Bounty, it certainly does appear to me that the plaintiff is the party really and beneficially interested in the contract which was entered into for the performance of that work by the defendant with Mr. Lee, the nominee under the Act authorizing the loan. As such I think, as at present advised, though the question is by no means free from doubt and difficulty, that the action is well brought in the incumbent's name, and that the case ought to proceed.

Ultimately the questions in dispute between the parties were referred to a member of the Bar, with power to raise the point for the opinion of the Court, and a verdict taken by consent for the plaintiff.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

SLAVE TRADE.—By a parliamentary document procured by Mr. Hume, it appears that there were in the year 1845 (the return being made up for the 1st of July, as an average for the force employed for the whole year) 56 ships, of 886 guns, and 9,289 men, employed in the suppression of the slave trade; of which, 27 of the vessels, with 382 guns and 3,334 men, were employed on the west coast of Africa station. Although the ships were furnished with slave-trade instructions, they were only employed in cruising against slave vessels as the other duties of the station on which they were respectively employed would permit. By the second branch of the document it seems that the charge for the ships of war employed in the suppression of the slave trade in the course of last year was 706,454*l.* and the deaths of officers and men numbered 259, and others invalided to 271; making a total of deaths and invalids in one year 530. The mortality in vessels on the west coast of Africa was 166, and the invalids 104; and the vessels not exclusively employed on the west coast of Africa, respectively 93 and 167. Thus it will be seen that the expense of vessels to suppress the slave trade in one year was 706,454*l.* and the deaths and invalided officers and men 530.

BRITISH SHIPPING.—A return has been obtained by Mr. Bouverie, of the number and tonnage of British shipping entered inwards at ports of the United Kingdom, from British colonial ports and from ports of foreign powers in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America, and cleared outwards to such ports in each year since 1820. It appears, that in 1821 the ships entered inwards at ports of the United Kingdom from British colonial ports numbered 2,532, and their tonnage 656,213; whilst those cleared outwards numbered 2,698, and their tonnage 663,145. In the year 1845 the ships entered inwards were 5,685, and the tonnage 1,895,529; and those cleared outwards 5,046, and the tonnage 1,706,835. In 1821, the number of British vessels entered inwards from ports of foreign powers in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America, respectively, was 6,669, and their tonnage 863,891; whilst those cleared outwards numbered 5,766, and their tonnage 757,295. In 1845 the number of the first description was 13,817, and their tonnage 2,289,744; and of the second 14,008, and the tonnage 2,427,552.

STATISTICS OF VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.—On Saturday last some interesting tables were printed in a Parliamentary document respecting Van Diemen's Land. In 1844 the convict population was 24,824 males, and 4,367 females. The entire population in 1842, was 58,902. In 1844 the total colonial revenue was 109,452*l.* and the expenditure, 169,215*l.* The amount paid by the home government in the same year, towards the maintenance of convicts was 166,690*l.* and the amount paid by the colonial government for police and gaols, 32,954*l.* The value of the imports in the year was 449,988*l.* and of the exports, 408,799*l.* The coin or bullion in the banks amounted to 136,364*l.* and their liabilities to 448,820*l.* In 1844 there were 121,938 acres in cultivation, which produced 807,924 bushels of wheat, 174,405 of barley, 221,105 of oats, 13,349 tons of potatoes, and 29,880 tons of turnips. The live stock consisted of 15,355 horses, 85,302 horned cattle, and 1,145,089 sheep. There were 493 convictions in the year before the Supreme Court and courts of quarter session, of which 172 were crimes against the person, and 321 for crimes against property.

LEGACY DUTY.—A return obtained by Mr. Hume has been issued of the capital on which legacy duty has been paid, and amount of revenue received in the United Kingdom for stamp duty on legacies, &c. in the year ending on the 5th of January, 1846. The hon. member has procured similar returns for several years. It seems that in the last year the capital on which legacy duty was paid in Great Britain, was 45,599,714*l.* 3*s.* 3*d.*; the total amount since 1797 was 1,339,419,511*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.* In Ireland the amount of duty on legacies was 61,629*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.*, and on probates and letters of administration (both in the year 1845), the amount of duty was 66,862*l.* The revenue received in the year ended on the 5th of January last was, in England and Wales, on legacies, 1,178,866*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*; and on probates, administrations, and testamentary inventories, 963,322*l.* 12*s.* In Scotland it was respectively 88,073*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* and 68,821*l.* 10*s.*; in Great Britain, 1,266,940*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.* and 1,029,954*l.* 2*s.*; and in Ireland it was 61,629*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.* and 66,862*l.* The total duty received since 1797 in the United Kingdom on legacies now amounts to 39,725,493*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.*; and on probates, &c. 31,814,896*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* In Ireland the stamps on legacies since 1797 amount to 899,494*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*; and on probates and administrations, to 1,182,706*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*

HOUSE OF LORDS.

WEDNESDAY, August 26.—The House met at two o'clock this day, when the Royal assent was given by commission to fifty-one public and private bills. The Lords Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Minto, and the Earl of Shaftesbury. The subjoined are the titles of the various bills:—Spirit Licenses, &c. Duties; Income Tax Deductions; Ecclesiastical Patronage; Tithe Amendment Act; Naval and Military Departments; Patent Commissions; Poor Removal; Baths and Washhouses; Burial Service, No. 2; Death by Accidents Compensation; Commons Inclosure, No. 3, or Commons Inclosure Act Amendment; Public Works and Fisheries; Public Works, Fisheries, &c.; Lunatic Asylums and Pauper Lunatics; House of Commons Offices; Naval Medical Supplemental Fund Society; Marriages, Ireland, Act Amendment; Lunatic Asylums, Ireland; Exclusive Privilege of Trading Abolition, Ireland; County Works Presentments, Ireland, No. 2; County Works Presentments, Ireland, Amendment; Turnpike Roads, Ireland; Public Works, Ireland, No. 3; Public Works Commissioners, Ireland; Baths and Washhouses, Ireland; Joint Stock Banks, Scotland and Ireland; Citations, Scotland; New Zealand Loan Act Amendment; London and South-Western Railway, London-bridge Extension; Glasgow and Belfast Union Railway; Taff Vale Railway; Newcastle-upon-Tyne and Carlisle Branch Railway; Caledonian Railway, Clydesdale Junction Railway Deviations; East and West India Docks and Birmingham Junction Railway;

Cork and Waterford Railway; Metropolitan Sewage Manure Company; Legal Quays, London; Dublin Wide Streets; Sion College; All Hallows Tithes; Duke of Cleveland's Estate, Bathwick and Wrington; Duke of Norfolk's Estate; Lord Kenyon's, Congreve's Estate; Jesus Hospital, Newcastle Estate; Bond's Estate; Sir Richard B. Phillips's Estate; Virgin Mary Hospital, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Estate; Dr. Macfarlane's, or Glasgow College, Estate; Farquharson's Divorce, India; and Humphrey's Divorce.

On the motion of the Earl of CLARENDON, the Bill for the Recovery of Small Debts was ordered to be printed as amended by the other House, and to be taken into consideration on Thursday.

THURSDAY, August 27.—The LORD CHANCELLOR, in moving the consideration of the Commons' amendments to the Small Debts Bill, observed that several amendments, not affecting the general principle of the Bill, had been introduced in the other House, but there was one clause which had been there introduced to which he wished to call their lordships' attention. That clause was, he believed, the 17th, and restricted the qualification for judges of the courts to be created under the bill to barristers-at-law. This was, he considered, a most satisfactory amendment. The jurisdiction of the Small Debts Courts was extended by this Bill, and though the sums involved in the cases brought under their jurisdiction might be comparatively small, the cases might involve legal questions of great difficulty. Now, though he (the Lord Chancellor) was perfectly ready to admit the qualifications, and learning, and ability, of many attorneys, yet undoubtedly the general course of education of that class of the Legal Profession did not render them equally well qualified with gentlemen who had been regularly educated for the law as barristers, to act as judges in matters involving doctrines of law. The noble and learned lord then proposed an amendment to enable several judges of existing courts for the recovery of small debts, who had practised as conveyancers, to continue their chamber practice (but not to practise in the courts), in the event of their being appointed judges of the new courts.—The amendment was agreed to, as were the amendments introduced by the Commons.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

MONDAY, August 24.—The report on the Small Debts Courts Bill was brought up. Several amendments were then agreed to.—Mr. WAKLEY proposed, at page 7, line 41, after the word "pleader," to introduce the words "or as an attorney-at-law." His object was to render a class, possessed of great legal experience, eligible for appointments as judges of the new courts. Their exclusion stamped them with degradation. The choice of the Lord Chancellor ought not to be restricted to the class of barristers.—Sir G. GREY observed, that the House having already decided by a large majority against the amendment, he did not feel at liberty to agree to it now. He did not see that any degradation was cast upon attorneys by their exclusion. There must be some line drawn. It might as well be said that attorneys should be eligible to the office of Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench. The amendment was then withdrawn.

LEGAL EDUCATION.

TUESDAY, August 25.—Mr. WYSE brought up the report of the select committee on legal education, which was ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC RECORDS.

Mr. PROTHERO then moved that it having been reported to her Majesty by the deputy-keeper of the public records, that all the record repositories in the metropolis are subject to such an amount of risk from fire that they could be insured only at the following premiums:—Rolls' Chapel, at 1*s.* 6*d.* per cent.; Chapter House, Rolls' House, and Wakefield Tower, at 2*s.* per cent.; Carlton Riding-house, and White Tower, in the Tower, at 5*s.* per cent.; it being observed of the latter repository by Mr. Braidwood, superintendent of the Fire Brigade, that no merchant of ordinary prudence would keep his books and accounts in the same situation in which the records are placed in the said repositories; that a large annual expenditure is incurred for temporary arrangements and repositories, and for watching the same; that the public records are justly deemed of such national interest and value as to occasion a large yearly grant of public money for their custody and administration; it is the opinion of this House that no further delay should take place in the erection of a suitable record repository, pursuant to the Act for keeping the Public Records, passed on the 14th day of August, 1838.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER promised the subject should have the immediate attention of the government.—Sir G. GREY said he believed the chief difficulty of providing a more suitable repository for the public records arose from the want of funds for that purpose. The motion was then withdrawn.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

On the motion that this Bill be read a third time, Mr. WARBURTON inquired whether any alteration had been made in the Bill with reference to barristers holding judgeships under it being permitted to practise. If they were so permitted, he thought they should forfeit all right to compensation.—Sir G. GREY said the barristers were restricted from practising in the districts where their judgeships were situated, but at all events the Lord Chancellor was of opinion that their duties as judges would fully occupy their time. Bill read a third time and passed.

THURSDAY, August 27.—Mr. WARBURTON obtained leave to introduce a Bill to amend the law of debtor and creditor. The Bill was brought in and ordered to be printed.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

This Bill was brought down from the Lords; the amendments made by their lordships were agreed to.

4 & 5 Vict. c. 35; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 23; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 55; Copyhold Commission continued till 31st July, 1847.—Whereas by an Act passed in the fifth year of the reign of her Majesty, intitled "An Act for the Commutation of certain Manorial Rights in respect of Lands of Copyhold and Customary Tenure, and in respect of other Lands subject to such Rights, and for facilitating the enfranchisement of such lands, and for the Improvement of such Tenure," it was amongst other things enacted, that no commissioner or assistant commissioner, secretary, assistant secretary, or other officer or person appointed under the said Act, should hold his office for a longer period than five years next after the day of the passing of the said Act, and thenceforth until the end of the then next session of Parliament; and whereas the said Act was amended and explained by an Act passed in the seventh year of the reign of her Majesty, and by an Act passed in the eighth year of the reign of her Majesty: and whereas it is expedient that the said commission should be further continued; Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That so much of the first-recited Act as is hereinbefore recited shall be repealed, and that no commissioner or assistant commissioner, secretary, or assistant secretary, or other officer or person so to be appointed, shall hold his office for a longer period than until the thirty-first day of July in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-seven, and to the end of the then next session of Parliament.

2. Act may be amended, &c.—That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

CAP. LIV.

An Act to extend to all Barristers practising in the Superior Courts at Westminster the Privileges of Serjeants at Law in the Court of Common Pleas. (August 18, 1846.)

Barristers-at-Law to have and exercise equal rights and privileges in the Court of Common Pleas as serjeants-at-law.—Whereas it would tend to the more equal distribution and to the consequent despatch of business in the superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster, and would at the same time be greatly for the benefit of the public, if the right of barristers-at-law to practise, plead, and to be heard extended equally to all the said courts; but, by reason of the exclusive privilege of serjeants-at-law to practise, plead, and have audience in the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster during Term time, such object cannot be effected without the authority of Parliament; Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That from and after the passing of this Act all barristers-at-law, according to their respective rank and seniority, shall and may have and exercise equal rights and privilege of practising, pleading, and audience in the said Court of Common Pleas at Westminster with the said serjeants-at-law; and it shall be lawful for the justices of the said Court, or any three of them, of whom the Lord Chief Justice of the said Court shall be one, to make rules and orders, and to do all other things necessary for giving effect to this enactment.

CAP. LV.

An Act to defray until the 1st day of August, 1847, the charge of the Pay, Clothing, and contingent and other expenses of the disembodied Militia, in Great Britain and Ireland; and to grant allowances in certain cases to subaltern Officers, Adjutants, Paymasters, Quartermasters, Surgeons, Assistant Surgeons, Surgeons' Mates, and Sergeant Majors of the Militia; and to authorize the employment of Non-commissioned Officers. (Aug. 18, 1846.)

CAP. LVI.

An Act to provide Forms of Proceedings under the Acts relating to the Duties of Assessed Taxes, and the Duties on Profits arising from Property, Professions, Trades, and Offices in England. (Aug. 18, 1846.)

43 Geo. 3. c. 99. The forms contained in the schedule to this Act to be used in all proceedings under the Acts relating to the assessed taxes and the property and income tax.—Whereas by an Act passed in the forty-third year of the reign of King George the Third, intitled "An Act for consolidating certain of the Provisions contained in any Act or Acts relating to the duties under the Management of the Commissioners for the Affairs of Taxes, and for amending the same," the duties of assessed taxes then under the management of the Commissioners for the Affairs of Taxes, so far as the same related to England, Wales, and Berwick-upon-Tweed, were directed to be assessed, raised, levied, and paid under the regulations of the said Act: and whereas divers Acts of Parliament have from time to time been passed for explaining, altering, or amending the said recited Act and the laws relating to the duties of assessed taxes: and whereas since the passing of the said first-recited Act divers duties of assessed taxes and duties on profits arising from property, professions, trades, and offices have from time to time been granted by Parliament, and directed to be assessed, raised, levied, collected, and paid under the rules and regulations of the said first-recited Act, and the several other Acts relating thereto, or for explaining, altering, or amending the same; and such of the said several duties as are now in force, and payable to her Majesty, her heirs and successors, are placed by law under the direction and management of the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes: and whereas in and by the said several Acts hereinbefore recited, mentioned, or referred to, and other Acts relating to the said respective duties, the commissioners and officers acting in the execution of the said Acts are required and authorized respectively to make and allow divers assessments, and to make, sign, and issue certain warrants, certificates, notices, and other official documents in the assessing, levying, and collecting of the said duties, and otherwise in relation thereto; and it would tend to promote and facilitate the due and uniform execution of the said Acts, if proper forms of proceedings for that purpose were provided and established by law: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That from and after the passing of this Act, in the assessing, charging, levying, and collecting of the said several duties hereinbefore mentioned, and on all other occasions in the execution of the several Acts relating to the matters hereinbefore mentioned, or any of them, in England, it shall be lawful for the respective commissioners, officers, and other persons acting in that behalf to cause their respective assessments, duplicates, charges, warrants, orders, notices, and other proceedings to be drawn, prepared, and made out according to the several forms contained in the schedule hereunto annexed, or to the effect thereof, mutatis mutandis, as the case shall require; and every such assessment, duplicate, charge, warrant, order, notice, or other proceeding which shall be so drawn, prepared, or made out, shall be good and effectual to all intents and purposes whatsoever, without stating the case, or the facts or evidence, in any more particular manner than is required in and by such forms respectively; and no information, summons, conviction, or other preliminary proceeding shall be deemed to be necessary to authorize or justify the making or issuing of any warrant, order, or other proceeding, whereof a form is contained in the said schedule, other than such preliminary proceeding as is recited or mentioned in such form; and the said schedule, and the several forms, rules, and directions therein contained, shall respectively be deemed to be part of this Act.

2. Proceedings not to be void or voidable for want of form, or affected by any mistake, &c. therein.—Provided always, that no assessment, charge, warrant, or other proceeding which shall be made, or shall purport to be made, by virtue or in pursuance or in execution of the said several Acts hereinbefore recited, mentioned, or referred to, or any of them, or of any other Act or Acts relating to the said several duties hereinbefore mentioned, shall be quashed or deemed to be void or voidable for want of form, or be impeached or affected by reason of any mistake, defect, or omission therein, provided the person or property charged or intended to be charged or affected by any such proceeding be designated therein to common intent and understanding, and such proceeding be in substance and effect in conformity with or according to the intent and meaning of the said Acts.

3. Construction of terms in this Act, or in schedule annexed: "Duties of assessed taxes," &c.—"Commissioners of assessed taxes."—"Additional Commissioners of the Property and Income Tax."—"Additional Commissioners of the Property and Income Tax."—"Special Commissioners of the Property and Income Tax."—"Commissioners for Offices."—"Oath."—"England."—"Parish."—That wherever the terms and expressions following occur in this Act or in the schedule hereunto annexed, and wherever the same terms and expressions respectively shall occur or be used in any form of proceeding to be drawn, prepared, or made out according to the respective forms contained in the said schedule, the said terms and expressions shall be construed to have the meanings hereinafter assigned to them respectively; (that is to say,) the several expressions, "Duties of assessed taxes," and "Duties on profits arising from property, professions, trades, and offices," shall respectively mean and include as well the said respective duties as all compositions for the same, and all sums of money which may lawfully be included in or added to any assessment of the said respective duties; the expression "Commissioners of Assessed Taxes" shall be construed and deemed to mean commissioners for putting into execution the several Acts relating to the duties of assessed taxes; the expression "Commissioners of the property and income-tax" shall be construed and deemed to mean commissioners for the general purposes of the Act passed in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intitled "An Act for granting to her Majesty Duties on Profits arising from Property, Professions, Trades, and Offices, until the sixth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and forty-five;" the expression "Additional commissioners of the property and income-tax" shall be construed and deemed to mean additional commissioners for executing the powers of the said last-mentioned Act; the expression "Special commissioners of the property and income-tax" shall be construed and deemed to mean commissioners for the special purposes of the said last-mentioned Act; the expression "Commissioners for offices" shall be construed and deemed to mean commissioners for executing the said last-mentioned Act in relation to the duties chargeable under schedule (E) of the same Act, in respect of offices or employments of profit in any court or public department of office, or in any corporate city, borough, town, or place, or in any cinque port; the term "Oath" shall mean and include an affirmation in the case of Quakers or other persons entitled by law to make an affirmation in lieu of an oath; the term "England" shall mean and include England, Wales, and Berwick-upon-Tweed; the term "parish" shall mean and include any parish, ward, or place for which a separate assessment of the duties of assessed taxes, or of the duties on profits arising from property, professions, trades, and offices, may lawfully be made, or for which any assessor or collector may be lawfully appointed for the purpose of assessing or collecting the said respective duties; and any word or words importing the singular number or the masculine gender only shall respectively be understood to include several persons, matters, and things, as well as one person, matter, or thing, and females as well as males, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction.

4. Act may be amended.—That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

The Schedule to which this Act refers, containing the Forms of Proceedings for carrying into execution the several Acts relating to the Duties of Assessed Taxes, and the Duties on Profits arising from Property, Professions, Trades, and Offices; (that is to say,)

1. Form of Appointment of Assessors.

THE GAME LAWS.

The Select Committee appointed to inquire into the operation of the Game Laws, and to report their observations and opinions thereon to the House, and who were empowered to report the minutes of evidence taken before them, have considered the subject referred to them, and have agreed to several resolutions, which they beg leave to report to the House, together with the minutes of evidence taken before them.

1. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that the common law of England has always distinctly recognized a qualified right of property in game; and that, from a very early period, it has been found necessary, by statutory enactment, to make some special provision against the attempt to steal or destroy a species of property peculiarly exposed to depredation.

2. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that the stringency of the game laws has been from time to time materially qualified and relaxed.

3. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that the recent Act, 1 & 2 Wm. 4, cap. 26, vested the property in game in the occupier of the soil, and distinctly recognized in game, as the subject of sale, one of the essential qualities of private property.

4. Resolved, That under these circumstances, the tenant has at all times the power to secure the game to himself, or to reject the tenancy, if the proprietor of the lands insists on a reservation being made of the game in his (the proprietor's) favour.

5. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee that to exclude game from the protection of the law would be inconsistent with a due regard to the security of other property.

6. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that the taking of game by persons who have no right of property in it should continue to be the subject of penal legislation.

7. Resolved, That in reviewing the statutes now in force with reference to the pursuit and sale of game, it appears to your committee that alterations may be suggested which, without impairing their efficiency for the repression of crime, would prevent the unequal or excessive punishment of persons who violate their provisions.

8. Resolved, That it is expedient to abolish summary penalties for poaching.

9. Resolved, That your committee are not, however, prepared to recommend such an alteration of the law as would exempt from more severe penalties those who, in the illegal pursuit of game, commit at the same time a breach of the revenue laws, or those who, in the day-time, being armed, and in numbers, are guilty of violence.

10. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that the penalty imposed by the statute 52 Geo. 3, c. 43, for sporting without a certificate appears excessive.

11. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that the space of three days allowed by section 44 of 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 32, for giving notice of appeal against any summary conviction under this Act, should be extended.

12. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that it is expedient that so much of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 20, which allows a moiety of the penalty levied under 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 32, to go to the informer, should be repealed.

13. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that no person convicted of night poaching, under sec. 1, 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, whose offence is unattended by circumstances of aggravation, should be subjected to the punishment of transportation.

14. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that no person convicted of night poaching, under the first section of 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, should be required to find sureties for not repeating such offence.

15. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that, apart from considerations of revenue, every owner or occupier of land having the right to kill the game on that land, should have such right without being required to take out a game certificate.

16. Resolved, That your committee further recommend the abolition of certificates as regards the pursuit and destruction of hares by means of packs of hounds, or by greyhounds; and also to recommend the reduction of the duties on greyhounds to those imposed on common dogs.

17. Resolved, That your committee regret to find that great facilities still exist for the disposal of stolen game.

18. Resolved, That it has been suggested to your committee, that by imposing additional legislative restrictions upon the sale of game, such facilities might be diminished, if not altogether removed; but the practical difficulty of enforcing any such regulations appears to your committee to be almost insurmountable, and the regulations themselves would necessarily be of so stringent and vexatious a character, that your committee cannot recommend their adoption.

19. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that the powers of constables should be better defined and enlarged, in regard to the search and detention of persons found under suspicious circumstances with game in their possession; and that power should be given to constables to search public-houses and beer-shops (licensed to sell off as well as on the premises) for game, it having been proved before the committee that they are extensive receptacles for stolen game.

20. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that the present time fixed for the period at which feathered game becomes a marketable article, and saleable by the dealer, should be postponed; and they recommend that the sale of each species of game should be deferred until one day after the season for shooting it has commenced.

21. Resolved, that your committee has received evidence to show that the preservation of large quantities of game has been the frequent cause of damage to the neighbouring crops.

22. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that in cases where the damage done to the growing crops of the occupier is caused by game being to or reserved by the owner of the land, such damage may be made the subject of pecuniary compensation.

23. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that although instances to the contrary have been proved to your committee, evidence has been adduced before them which warrants the conclusion that, in general, a tenant's just claim for compensation is compelled by his landlord.

24. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that great difficulty must always exist in determining the amount of damage which has been inflicted by game on growing crops, and that the estimate of such damage, however skillfully made, is rarely satisfactory to both parties.

25. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that where, from the vicinity of the preserves of adjoining proprietors, such damage must be attributed to the game bred and preserved therein, the reparation for such damage cannot generally be made the subject of previous agreement.

26. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that under these circumstances, cases of hardship may be expected to recur; but the extreme difficulty of establishing the liability of any particular party for the damage done, or correctly assessing the amount of such damage, have induced your committee to reject the suggestion that an action on the case would be a fitting or practical remedy for damage done to growing crops by game.

27. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that this species of damage is to be attributed mainly, if not entirely, to hares and rabbits, and that no appreciable proportion of such damage can be ascribed to feathered game.

28. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee, that the law in Scotland with regard to game differs from that in England in many essential particulars, and that little evidence respecting that part of the subject has been adduced before your committee.—July 6.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE Deodands Abolition Bill will be found in the division of our journal which comprises the New Statutes. It is singularly brief, therefore we have given it entire. The "Report of the Committee on the Game Laws" will be found subjoined. Another attack on these laws, we are informed, is contemplated by Mr. BRIGHT and his party next Session. In the meantime, the public mind is to be worked on by a learned Barrister, who, we know, is at this time preparing a pamphlet on the subject, with the co-operation, we believe, of Mr. BRIGHT.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE Small Debts Bill has passed both the Lords and Commons, and will receive the Royal Assent by Commission this day (Friday). Some remarks on the subject will be found in a leading article. Mr. WARBURTON has brought in a Bill, which was read a first time on Thursday, to amend the Law of Debtor and Creditor. We believe that the leading feature of the intended measure is a proposition to restore arrest on mesne process in civil actions under certain limitations. The Bill, we presume, will be re-introduced to the House next Session. It is a step backward which we do not think the Legislature will consent to make.

THE PRACTICE OF WILLS.

By G. S. ALLNUTT, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

BOOK II.

PROBATE OF WILLS.

CHAPTER III.—BY WHOM TO BE PROVED.

THE executors named in the will are the proper parties by whom the will should be proved, and they may be cited, at the instance and on the oath of any person who has an interest, or, ex officio, by the Ordinary or party having the power to grant probate, to prove the will, and take upon themselves the execution of it, or to renounce the same. Where, however, the party at whose instance a citation issued concealed from the executor the fact of there being assets within the jurisdiction of the Court, he was compelled to pay the costs of the proceeding, which had been incurred solely by his conduct. (Lyon v. Balfour, 2 Add. 501.)

Administration cum testamento annexo.—If the executor appointed by the testator renounce or die before the testator, or before proving the will, or be incapable to act, the Court will grant letters of administration cum testamento annexo, and the will must be proved by the person to whom such administration is granted.

By the 21 Hen. 8, c. 5, s. 3, it is enacted, that "in case any person die intestate, or that the executors named in any such testament refuse to prove the said testament, then the said Ordinary, or other person or persons having authority to take probate of testaments as is abovesaid, shall grant the administration of the goods of the testator, or person deceased, to the widow of the same person deceased, or to the next of his kin, or to both, as by the discretion of the same Ordinary shall be thought good, taking surety of him or them to whom shall be made such commission for the true administration of the goods, chattels, and debts which he or they shall be so authorised to minister; and in cases where divers persons claim the administration as next of kin, which be equal in degree of kindred to the testator or person deceased, and where any person only desireth the administration as next of kin, where indeed divers persons be in equality of kindred, as is aforesaid, that in every such case the Ordinary to be at his election and liberty to accept any one or more making request where divers do require the administration."

The above statute, it will be observed, does not apply to any of the cases before mentioned, but that of the refusal of an executor to act; and therefore the Court was left to its discretion in the other cases as to the person to whom the administration should be granted.

In the exercise of this discretion, the Court considers the right of administration to follow the right to the property, and this it appears is now the rule, whether the case is within the statute or not. (In the goods of Gill, 1 Hag. 341; see also Repton v. Holland, 2 Cas. temp. Lee, 254; Dodson v. Crackerode, 2 Cas. temp. Lee, 326; Elwes v. Elwes, 2 Cas. temp. Lee, 573; Weidrill v. Wright, 2 Phill. 248; and Tucker v. Westgarth, 2 Add. 352.)

The residuary legatee, therefore, is the person to whom the Court will grant an administration cum testamento annexo, in preference to the next of kin (Atkinson v. Barnard, 2 Phill. 318); and if there be several residuary legatees, the Court will grant the administration to any of them. (Taylor v. Shore, T. Jones, 162; Com. Dig. "Administrator," B. b.)

In Thomas v. Buller (1 Vent. 217), it was observed by the Court (p. 219), that "the reason that the statute 21 Hen. 8 required that administration should be granted to the next of kin, was upon the presumption that the intestate intended to prefer him; but now the presumption is here taken away, the residuum being disposed of to another; and to what purpose should the next of kin have it, when no benefit can accrue to him by it; and it is reasonable that he should have the management of the estate, who is to have what remains of it after the debts and legacies paid." (See also Pierce v. Perks, 1 Sid. 281; Linthwaite v. Galloway, 2 Cas. temp. Lee, 414; West v. Willby, 3 Phill. 381; Taylor v. Diplock, 2 Phill. 276; and In the goods of Gill, ubi supra.)

The residuary legatee, whether there be a prospect of a residue or not, is entitled to this administration, and that, not only before the next of kin, but before legatees and annuitants named in the will. (Atkinson v. Barnard, 2 Phill. 316.)

Where a person claims as residuary legatee in trust, it appears that he is entitled to the administration (Hutchinson v. Lambert, 3 Add. 27); but see, contra, Carymaker v. Chamberlayne, 2 Cas. temp. Lee, 243; Boddicott v. Dalzeel, 2 Cas. temp. Lee, 294; and Fawcener v. Jordan, 2 Cas. temp. Lee, 327.)

The representative of a deceased residuary legatee has the same right to this administration as the residuary legatee himself. (Jones v. Beytagh, 3 Phill. 365); Weidrill v. Wright, 2 Phill. 243; Ysted v. Stanley, Dyer, 372, a; Sparks v. Denne, W. Jones, 225; Wentw. Off. Ex. 82; Godolph. pt. 1, c. 20, s. 2.) But where the deceased residuary legatee was a mere trustee, the administration is generally granted to the person who has the beneficial interest in the property. (Hutchinson v. Lambert, 3 Add. 27; and Carymaker v. Chamberlayne, 2 Cas. temp. Lee, 243.)

The residuary legatee has not, however, such a legal right to this administration as to be able to compel the ordinary to grant it to him. (Rex v. Bettensworth, 2 Strange, 956.)

Where the residuary legatee declines to take this administration, it is usually granted to the next of kin; but where he has no interest, he will be excluded, and the administration will be granted to any person who has an interest in the estate. (West v. Willby, 3 Phill. 381.)

If the next of kin decline the administration, it will be granted to a legatee or a creditor. (Kooystra v. Buyskes, 3 Phill. 531; Snapes v. Webb, 2 Cas. temp. Lee, 411.)

Custody of testamentary papers.—The Prerogative Court will order all testamentary papers, including the duplicate of a will, to be brought in when required. (Killiam v. Parber, 1 Cas. temp. Lee, 662.)

In a case of disputed wills, they should be lodged in the registry of the Court which has the right of granting probate; and if wills are withheld, the parties withholding them will be liable to the costs necessary to get them out of their possession. (Cunningham v. Seymour, 2 Phill. 250.)

Where another person than the executor once had the will in his possession, and it is so proved, the presumption is that he still holds it, unless he affirms by affidavit to the contrary. (Swiab. pt. 6, c. 12, pl. 2; Godolph. pt. 1, c. 20, s. 2; Bethun v. Dinmore, 1 Cas. temp. Lee, 158.)

Solicitor's lien on testamentary papers.—If a will be in the hands of the testator's solicitor, it appears that he cannot claim any lien upon it. In Georges v. Georges (18 Ves. 294), Lord Eldon said, "I never heard of a lien upon a will. The effect of it would go to a great extent. The executor having a right to retain his own debt, consider the use to which such a lien might be perverted by an attorney with a large debt, himself preparing the will, and a subscribing witness, under this doctrine of lien, keeping that will, and setting himself above the executor. He cannot refuse the production for the purpose of establishing the character of all persons claiming under the instrument." (See also Balch v. Symes, Turn. & Russ. 87.)

In Ex parte Law (2 Add. & Ell. 45), where a testator died indebted to an attorney for law expenses, including the preparation of his will, which was left in the custody of the attorney, the Prerogative Court having, at the instance of the personal representatives, cited the attorney to bring in the will and leave it in the registry of that Court, the Court of King's Bench refused, in that stage of the proceedings, to interfere by prohibition, on the ground of the attorney's claim to a lien on the will.

Spoilation or suppression.—Where an executor has destroyed a will, a legatee has a remedy in the Court of Chancery. In Tucker v. Phipps (3 Atk. 269), Lord Hardwicke said, "As to the spoliation, I consider it generally as a personal legacy, where the will is destroyed or concealed by the executor; and I think, in such a case, if the spoliation is proved plainly (though the general rule is to cite the executor into the Ecclesiastical Court), the legatee may properly come here for a decree, upon the head of spoliation and suppression. There are several cases where, if spoliation or suppression are proved, it will change the jurisdiction, and give this Court a jurisdiction which it had not originally; as in the case of Lord Hunsdon (Hob. 109).

CHAP. IV.—WHAT INSTRUMENTS NECESSARY TO BE PROVED.

As the Ecclesiastical Court has jurisdiction only in wills of personal estate, it is not necessary, where the will relates to real estate alone, that probate of it should be obtained. (Anon. 2 Salk. 22; Habergam v. Vincent, 2 Ves. 230.) Where, however, the will relates to both real and personal estate, the whole must be proved in the Ecclesiastical Court (Partridge's case, 2 Salk. 553), though the proof in that court does not establish the will of the real estate against the testator's heir-at-law. (Netter v. Brett, Cro. Car. 395). As a court of equity considers money directed to be laid out in land, as land, the Ecclesiastical Court has no jurisdiction over a devise of property so converted. (Pullen v. Ready, 2 Atk. 590.) In case of doubt, whether the whole of the testator's estate was real estate (which would occur where it was not known whether a portion of the property was freehold or leasehold), it has been considered that the Ecclesiastical Court ought to grant probate. (Thorold v. Thorold, 1 Phill. 8; Durkin v. Johnstone, 1 Phill. 8, n.) There is no occasion to prove the will in the spiritual court to entitle a legatee to recover a legacy out of real estate. (Lord Hardwicke, in Tucker v. Phipps, 3 Atk. 361.)

Will made in exercise of power.—Where a will made in execution of a power relates to personality, it must be proved in the Ecclesiastical Court. (Hume v. Russell, 6 Madd. 331; see Sugden on Powers, vol. ii. p. 21, 6th edition). This rule extends to the will of a married woman which is made in execution of a power. In Ross v. Ewer (3 Atk. 156), Lord Hardwicke said (p. 160), "I am of opinion, that though, in the notion of law, a wife cannot make a will, yet where a feme covert has a separate power over her estate, and may dispose of it by will, whatever sort of writing she leaves, it ought first to be propounded as a will in the spiritual court." See also Goldsworthy v. Crossley (4 Hare, 140).

It may here be observed, that the Ecclesiastical Court has no jurisdiction to determine whether an instrument is a good execution of a power (Watt v. Watt, 3 Ves. jun. 246), but only to decide that the act is testamentary. In Rich v. Cockell (9 Ves. 369), Lord Eldon said (p. 376), "Where a feme covert had the power by will, according to the terms of the instrument requiring witnesses, to dispose of personal estate, it was necessary to prove, first, that the instrument was in nature of a will; secondly, if so, that it was attested in modo, in which the power required it to be attested. For the former purpose it has been hitherto deemed necessary that this Court should be satisfied by the judgment of the Ecclesiastical Court that the instrument is in nature of a will. But this Court has never been contented with that judgment, as to the circumstances of attestation; for after that proof in the Ecclesiastical Court, this Court always requires the witnesses to be examined, in order to prove that it is her act, and will not trust the Ecclesiastical Court with this conclusion; that because it is her act, and in nature testamentary, therefore this Court is of necessity to hold it an appointment."

Sealed packets.—Where a testatrix directed her executors to deliver certain sealed packets, unopened, to the persons to whom they were addressed, the Court held that the executors could not safely do so, on account of the inventory they had to deliver, and of the possibility of a deceit. The packets were, therefore, opened in the presence of the Registrar, and a schedule containing the amounts enclosed, and the names of the persons were added to the will, and probate was granted of the will and all the papers. (Hughes v. Turner, 4 Hagg. 30.)

Declaration of trust.—A declaration by deed or writing distinct from the will of the trusts upon which a legacy given by the testator is to be held, has not in particular cases been required by a court of equity to be proved in the Ecclesiastical Court. (Inchiquin v. French, 1 Cox, 1; and Smith v. Atterall, 1 Russ. 266.)

COURT PAPERS.

SITTINGS OF THE INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT.—This Court will again sit for bail cases on Friday next, and for cases on the 14th of September, when the sittings are appointed to be resumed.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

ESSEX COUNTY COURT, August 4.

Practice of Attorneys.

A Court was held at the Shire Hall, Chelmsford, on Tuesday, before T. M. Gepp, Esq. as county clerk, and after some business, which possessed as public interest, had been disposed of,

Old applied for a summons for a party under the new Act.

Durrant, who happened to be present, took an objection to his appearing for the party, and submitted that it was neither respectful to the Court, nor fair to the regular practitioners that he should do so. Mr. Dennes, in whose name Mr. Old acted, was not in Chelmsford, and here was Mr. Old pretending to advise a client without, as he believed, his having seen the principal at all. The Court of Queen's Bench had said, it was a very disreputable thing for a person like this to give advice and act for a party without the personal intervention of the principal; and he quoted a case which came before Mr. Justice Erie, at the recent Hampshire assize, in which a person was indicted for making certain representations relating to a case in which he interfered as the clerk of Mr. Warneford, who was himself severely reprimanded, and his agent was not convicted through belief of the prisoner's ignorance of the wrong he was doing. He hoped that unless Mr. Old could show that this case had had the advice of Mr. Dennes, the Court would refuse to hear the application.

Gepp asked the result of a similar application to the Insolvent Debtors' Court.

Durrant said Mr. Dennes was present on that occasion conducting a case in person, and chose to say Mr. Old was his clerk. Mr. Dennes, in the present instance, was not in Chelmsford at all.

Old said Mr. Durrant made an application to Mr. Chief Commissioner Reynolds, and he turned away and treated it with contempt.

Durrant said that was incorrect. He made the application to Mr. Commissioner Law, who made some strong remarks and promised to report the matter to the other commissioners. That afterwards he asked another commissioner on circuit the result, but Mr. Commissioner Law had forgotten to mention the subject, and it consequently dropped. He (Mr. Durrant) had in the petty sessions, in this town, objected to the principle of clerks being heard in court at all, and been successful in resisting it. It was never allowed for clerks to appear, except in the metropolis, and there it was done under a special order of the Secretary of State.

Old said he had pleaded in cases before Mr. Gepp. Gepp.—But he had felt a strong objection to it; he thought it was wrong that a person should practise, never having seen the principal relative to the case.

Old asked if Mr. Dennes could come there for the fees of that court?

Gepp.—He should employ a professional gentleman as agent; I think it is irregular that you should make the application.

Old said in Mr. Knipe's time he practised.

Gepp.—But Mr. Knipe was much more in the town than Mr. Dennes was.

Durrant said it was laid down in a case in the LAW TIMES, that it was in the hands of the officer of the County Court to check this practice; and he strongly contended that as Mr. Old interfered with the rights of regularly educated professional men, and people were led by unqualified persons into all sorts of difficulties and absurdities, it ought to be checked by that Court.

Gepp said he had always disapproved of the practice; but he was rather taken by surprise on the present occasion, and he should let it stand over till the next court, and then decide what should be done.

Gepp, on looking over Mr. Old's papers, said the case was not in form. Mr. Old had not read the Act of Parliament he was afraid, or Mr. Dennes had not instructed him rightly. A request, of which a form was given in the Act, must be signed by the party, but that was not done here.

Durrant said this was a proof of the mischief which ensued to the unfortunate persons who were led into the place where Mr. Old lived by the name—"Dennes, Solicitor," on the door, and where no Mr. Dennes was to be found.

Gepp.—Mr. Dennes had better come here himself next time, or make this application through some solicitor as his agent; that will avoid all further discussion. But at the same time, I shall be prepared next court, if the matter is spoken to, to give my opinion on it.

The subject then dropped.

THE LATE SIR CHARLES WETHERELL.

INQUEST ON THE BODY.—Mr. Dudlow, the coroner for West Kent, held an inquest at the George Inn, Aylesford, on Wednesday afternoon, on the body of the late Sir C. Wetherell. Mr. W. Rudge deposed that he had been valet to the late Sir C. Wetherell for nineteen years. On Monday, the 10th instant, he accompanied him in a phaeton from the Star Hotel at Maidstone, on their way to Rochester. Shortly after leaving the former town, the deceased remarked that he would get out and ride upon the box, as he wanted to talk to the driver. He did so, witnesses remaining inside. They then proceeded a short distance, when his attention was attracted to the deceased, who was calling out to the horses to stop, and was otherwise endeavouring to check it. He then felt the vehicle rise, and immediately it was overturned. The deceased was thrown to the ground, and, on raising him, saw that he was suffering much pain. On medical aid being procured, Sir Charles was conveyed to Preston-hall, the seat of C. Milner, Esq., where he remained up to the time of his death.—Eliza Jones, a labouring woman, said, going along the main road, she was overtaken by the phaeton that met with the accident. The horse was not going very fast when it passed her. It however went a little quicker immediately afterwards. She then noticed the phaeton overturn, and the gentleman riding with the driver thrown to the ground. She immediately, at the request of Rednor, proceeded to Aylesford, and procured Mr. Dennis, a surgeon, with whom she returned. She then saw Sir Charles supported by his valet.—John Brazier, a post-boy connected with the Star Hotel, Maidstone, stated that the deceased had been staying at the hotel, having come from Smarden. On Monday, Sir Charles hired a phaeton to take him over to Rochester. Witnesses was the driver. On leaving Maidstone, deceased directed him to go by the lower road, as he wished to see the country, and subsequently rode on the box, to have a better view. On passing the carriage-gate of Preston-hall, the reins got under the horse's tail. The deceased instantly stooped forward, and endeavoured to displace them. In his efforts, however, he unfortunately caught hold of the off-rein, and a sudden jerk he gave it caused the horse to run out of the roadway. The wheels of the vehicle then passed over a large stone, and the phaeton was overturned and much broken. Sir Charles pitched upon his head. They were going at the rate of about five miles an hour when the rein passed under the horse's tail. It then started and quickened its pace. When the accident happened, it was travelling at the rate of not more than eight miles an hour. The day was very sultry, and the flies had much troubled and irritated the horse.—Mr. Ralph Dennis, surgeon, of Aylesford, deposed that on being called to the deceased, he found him seated on the cushions of the phaeton. He immediately ordered his removal to Preston-hall. Deceased was labouring under a concussion of the brain. He attended Sir Charles up to his death, and the injury he sustained was quite sufficient to have caused it. The coroner said it was evident it was the result of pure accident.—The jury returned a verdict "That the deceased died from concussion of the brain, by being thrown to the ground by the accidental overturning of a phaeton." At 11 o'clock on Tuesday morning, the remains of the late Sir Charles Wetherell were interred in the church of the Inner Temple, in the vault appropriated to the interment of benchers, of which society he was the senior member. He was followed to the grave by his relations, the Rev. Richard Wetherell, the Archdeacon Wetherell, Mr. N. Wetherell, Rev. Edward Frere, — Spooner, Esq., M.P., Rev. E. Rowden, and also by Mr. Bosch, his clerk, and Mr. Rudge, his valet, who were in constant attendance upon Sir Charles from the time of the accident up to the moment of his death.

THE SMALL DEBTS BILL.

The following petition from the Incorporated Law Society has been presented "to the Right Hon. the Lords Spiritual and Temporal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled."

"The humble petition of the Incorporated Society of attorneys, solicitors, proctors, and others, not being barristers, practising in the Courts of Law and Equity of the United Kingdom,

"Sheweth,—That very late in the present session of Parliament, a bill was introduced in your right hon. house, and is now pending, entitled 'An Act for the more easy Recovery of Small Debts and Demands in England.'

"That it is intended under such bill to create various courts for the purposes thereof, and to vest the appointment of judges of such courts in the Lord Chancellor.

"That various bills have from time to time been introduced into Parliament for the above purpose previously to the present session of Parliament, and that in such bills it was proposed and intended that the judges to be appointed should either be barristers-at-law or attorneys-at-law.

"That, by the bill now pending in your right hon. house, the Lord Chancellor is so restricted in the appointment of judges as to be prevented in future from the appointment of any attorney-at-law, however well qualified to be a judge of any court, to be created under such bill in case the same should pass into a law.

"That new clauses have been introduced in such bill in the other House of Parliament, and various restrictions in the jurisdiction and powers of such intended courts, and of the judges to be appointed under such bill.

"That your petitioners humbly represent to your right hon. house that many attorneys-at-law are qualified to be appointed judges under such bill.

"Your petitioners humbly pray that in such bill the Lord Chancellor may be empowered to appoint any attorneys-at-law to be judges in the court to be created thereunder whom his Lordship may consider duly qualified to be such judges."

The Parliamentary Committee of the Corporation of London met on the 10th inst. at Guildhall, to take into consideration the proposed Act of Parliament "For the more easy Recovery of Small Debts and Demands in England." Mr. Hartley in the chair. After a considerable discussion as to such of the rights and privileges of the Corporation of London as were likely to be affected by the measure, its general principles were observed upon. Mr. Lott said this was one of the samples of the Free Trade System which was now trafficking in the construction of new Courts of Law; but how far the enactment proposed carried out the promise held forth in the title of the Act—namely, that it was a measure for the "more easy recovery of small debts"—he would leave to the judgment of the respectable merchants and traders of London (whom he then had the honour of addressing) to determine. He begged leave to draw the attention of the committee to the 40th clause of the Act, wherein it is propounded that the summons is to issue in the district in which the defendant dwells, or carries on his business. Now the effect of this legislation would be, that the London creditor, summoning his country debtor (for instance) residing at York, must, if the action be resisted, send down, at great expense, his whole cortege of travellers, warehousemen, porters, booking-office keepers, &c. &c. to York—perhaps taking his traveller off his journey to Cornwall, or elsewhere, for the purpose. In trials of referred issues, before the sheriff, in actions under 20*l*. it is amazing what a number of witnesses are sometimes required; and if a plaintiff has to follow a defendant to his own home, the expense would be enormous, and which ultimately might fall on the plaintiff—creditor, if the defendant avails himself of an escape through the loose meshes of the web of the Insolvent Court. In legislating upon "debtor and creditor," it was astonishing what partiality was shown to the former, who always appeared in the eye of the senator an aggrieved person, whereas statistics would show that ten out of every twenty defended actions were defended for vexation or delay. He (Mr. Lott) recollected that upon an interview with Sir James Graham, upon the subject of a County Courts Bill, the hon. baronet had stated that the principle of it was to bring justice home to every man's door; but he (Mr. Lott) took the liberty of telling Sir James that they brought the justice to the wrong door, viz. to that of the resisting instead of the complaining party. Mr. Lott thought it would prove anything but an "easy" mode of recovering debts, and ought to be opposed by the mercantile and trading interest.—Mr. Wood took a similar view of the subject, instancing the recent legislation as to bankruptcy, whereby the creditor was compelled to go to the district in which his debtor carried on his business to summon him.—Mr. Richard Taylor condemned this principle of the measure, as creative of expense in the pursuit of "fugitive vagabonds." A deputation was ultimately appointed to attend the Home Secretary, upon the clauses of the Bill affecting the city, consisting of the Chairman, Alderman Hughes, Mr. Lott, Mr. Wood, and Mr. Taylor.

The office of Chancellor of the County Palatine of Durham has become vacant by the melancholy death of Sir Charles Wetherell, as well as the recordership of Bristol.

JUDGE WILLIS.—The Governor (Sir G. Gipps) and Council of Australia having removed Mr. Justice Willis from his office, he appealed to her Majesty in Council. The report of the Privy Council having been laid before the Queen, her Majesty has been pleased to confirm the same, and has directed the order of removal by the Governor and Council to be reversed, on the ground that the appellant was not allowed an opportunity of being heard in his own defence. The hearing of this appeal has been postponed from time to time, until three years have elapsed since the colonial authorities committed this illegal act.—Globe.

EARNINGS BY CONVICTS.—In the year 1844, upon a daily average of 874 prisoners in Millbank prison, the earnings amounted to 3,748*l*. 6*s*. 3*d*.; and deducting the expense of the manufactory, 1,002*l*. 2*s*. 1*d*. the net earnings were 2,746*l*. 4*s*. 5*d*. showing the annual earnings per head to have been 3*l*. 2*s*. 10*d*. Last year, upon a daily average of 964 prisoners, the earnings amounted to 5,191*l*. 15*s*. 11*d*. of which 925*l*. 17*s*. 11*d*. were the expenses of the manufactory, leaving a net profit of 4,265*l*. 18*s*. 0*d*. shewing the annual earnings per head to have been 4*l*. 9*s*. 5*d*. The inspectors of the Millbank prison, in their report for the year 1845, state that the conduct of the prisoners, taken as a body, has been orderly and submissive.

THE COMMERCIAL AND CIVIL TRIBUNALS OF FRANCE.—The Monde publishes a report, addressed by the Minister of Justice to the King, respecting the general administration of civil and commercial justice in France in 1843. According to that document the 27 Royal courts had to decide on 16,583 civil or commercial affairs, and terminated 10,620; 1,976 were amicably adjusted, and the remainder were not disposed of till 1844. The civil tribunals, 361 in number, had to try 117,134 new suits, independently of 54,173 lying over since 1842, in all 171,307, of which 123,650 were brought to a close in the year. The number of acts of adoption in 1843 was 88, and that of applications for divorce or separation, 1,077, or 115 more than in 1842; 80 of these applications were made by husbands, and 997 by wives. The marriages had endured—10 less than a year, 203 from a year to 5; 235 from 5 to 10 years, 328 from 10 to 20, 218 during upwards of 20 years, &c. Children were born of 573 of those unions, and 466 had been sterile. The tribunals pronounced on 906 demands, admitting 808, and rejecting 98; 171 had been struck off the list from various causes, 104 in consequence of a reconciliation between the parties. The commercial affairs brought before the tribunals in 1843 amounted to 183,326, including 6,876 remaining to be judged on the 31st of December, 1842. There were 3,071 failures in 1843, or one fifth more than in the preceding year. The liabilities of 1,829, which alone could be exactly ascertained, were 166,116,436*l*. The cases submitted to the decision of justice of the peace were 767,926, of which they succeeded in conciliating 568,000. The notaries in France were 9,846 in number in 1843.

DEODANDS.—On Tuesday next the Act of Parliament which received the Royal assent on the 18th inst., to abolish deodands will come into operation.

ANECDOTE BY COUNSEL.—At the Cork assizes Mr. G. Bennett, canvassing the term "temperate habits" in a policy of insurance, said, "The late Sir Hercules Langbrith was exceedingly fond of drinking, and being ill he consulted the celebrated Dr. Pjunkt, who advised him to drink only a glass of wine in the day. Sir Hercules promised to obey, but the doctor called in upon him a day or two after, and seeing his patient a little out of order, said to him, 'I hope you followed out my advice.' 'I did,' replied the other. 'Well,' says the doctor, 'I am anxious to see the size of the glass,' upon which Sir Hercules brought in a glass which contained two quarts! (Laughter.) The doctor then restricted Sir Hercules to a pint of wine in the day; and on the following one, having called on his patient told him to stick to that quantity, and it would lengthen his days. 'I believe you,' said Sir Hercules, 'for yesterday was the longest day I ever spent.'—Globe.

THE LONG VACATION.—A pastry-cook in Fleet-street, finding he did not sell a bun a day, has shut up shop, and written on his shanties, "Gone to America during the Repairs."—Punch.

THE CHARITY COMMISSION.—It appears from a return, that the expenses which have been incurred by the Charity Commission in each year, from the commencement, in 1818, to the final termination in 1838, amounted to 261,836*l*. 1*s*. 0*d*. Mr. Hume wished to know the expense incurred in each year, which could not be given, as the accounts were made up to certain periods. There are nineteen periods embraced in the return.

HEIR-AT-LAW, NEXT OF KIN, &c. &c.

THE LAW TIMES.

NOTES UPON CIRCUIT.

CRIMES AND PUNISHMENTS.

THEY who, by their professional duties, are called into the criminal courts at the assizes and the quarter sessions, can scarcely fail to be struck with the extraordinary difference which exists between these tribunals in the amount of punishment inflicted by each for the same degree of crime. Whatever the cause, the fact is certain, that the judges are vastly less severe than the magistrates. The former wield with moderation and leniency the great power with which the law has entrusted them. The latter love to push their restricted power to its utmost limits. If a return could be procured by Parliament of the number of years of transportation and imprisonment inflicted both by the magistrates in quarter sessions and by the judges at the assizes, we are confident that the average of sentences for crimes of the same class would present a ratio of at least six to five in excess of magisterial over judicial punishment, even although the latter try only the more serious cases, and the trifling offences are chiefly entrusted to the former.

Why the magistrates should be generally so much more severe than the judges, is a problem rather for the ethical philosopher than for the jurist. We have to deal only with the fact. It is one of very great significance; for it serves to shew the propriety of placing in the judgment-seat only such men as have been trained by long practice of their Profession to that habit of viewing a case upon its intrinsic merits, without reference to extraneous considerations, which is essential to the due administration of justice. The magistrate is usually a resident in the neighbourhood. He knows or suspects a great deal more than comes out in the course of the trial. He believes, it may be rightly, but it may also be wrongly, that the accused is a poacher and a thief. He punishes for the crime, of which he believes the prisoner to be guilty, in addition to that for which he has been convicted. Position naturally prejudices him, and he is not trained by a legal education to cast his prejudices away. The result is precisely such as might have been anticipated. His sentences are far more severe than those of the lawyer-judge, who punishes the particular crime, and not from the general reputation of the criminal.

This excess of severity by the magistrates is the more to be lamented, because from their decisions there is no appeal. When the judges, with all their learning, listen to a point raised in favour of a prisoner, which they deem to deserve consideration, they do not venture at their own view to decide it; they reserve it for the consideration of the whole Bench of Judges, who hear the arguments, and bring their united wisdom to the determination of the question. But the unlearned magistrate does that which the learned judges do not venture to do. He decides on the instant, and from that decision there is no appeal; for his wrong judgment there is no redress. This consideration alone should induce the magistrates to be more lenient instead of more severe than the judges, because they are more likely to err, and their errors are irretrievable.

We have directed attention to this subject with a twofold purpose. First, in hope that it may attract the notice of the Press generally, and thus lead the magistrates to adhere more to the example of the judges. Secondly, that the Profession may feel still more strongly the necessity for placing in the judgment-seat only trained and practised Lawyers. The proper business of a lay magistracy is that of a tribunal of the first instance, as it is termed in France. Judgment should always be the province of experienced judges.

Will one of the Lawyers in the House of Commons ask next spring for such a return of the sentences of the quarter sessions and assizes for the last two years as may set the question beyond dispute?

THE SMALL DEBTS BILL.

THIS important Bill, after amendments in both Lords and Commons, has passed both Houses, and probably by this time (Friday noon) has received the Royal Assent and become law. As the Statute cannot be printed until late to-morrow—perhaps not before Monday—we are unable to lay it before our readers in this number, as we wished to have done. The amendment proposed by Mr. WAKLEY to render Attorneys eligible for appointment as Judges of the New Courts, found in the House not a single friend to sustain it, and, meeting with an ungracious reception from Sir GEORGE GREY, the mover was compelled to abandon it. Nor was Mr. WARBURTON's suggestion that Barristers holding these Judgeships, and having permission to retain their chamber practice, should therefore forfeit all claim to compensation, entertained, much less adopted. The totally defenceless position of the Attorneys as regards the assaults of the Legislature was never made more apparent, than by the progress of this Bill through Parliament. Not only have they no champion of their own in the Commons to resist aggression, and protect them by the shield which their rights afford, but out of the House they have no centre round which to assemble, and where their counsel and energies may be united for the common good. The Law Institution, every one admits, does not answer this requirement. The supineness of this body with reference to the interests of the Profession, up to the last, has been unaccountable. On Tuesday, indeed, they presented a petition, praying for power to be delegated to the Lord Chancellor to appoint attorneys to the Judgeships of the new Courts; but the petition, unsupported by friends, was useless—it was even worse, since it gave evidence of the helplessness of the body whose prayer it offered. It is worthy of remark, too, that the petition did not find its way to the House until the night when the Bill was read a third time—a sure proof that an earnest desire to protect the interests of Attorneys was not at the root of it. In short, this was palpably a feint, and will do more to lower the Institution in the estimation of the Profession, than total silence and inaction could possibly have effected.

Unable as yet to obtain the Bill, of course we cannot speak positively to its enactments; but we believe the suggestion of the deputation from the meeting held at Gray's-inn Coffee-house, recommending the insertion of a clause to give concurrent jurisdiction in the superior courts, has not been adopted. Among the alterations which have emanated from Mr. KEANE's letter to Sir GEORGE GREY (noticed in our last number), are the removal of doubt as to the necessity for freeholders of the county attending to constitute the County Court; the abolition of writs of error by directing determination "according to equity and good conscience;" the giving an absolute inviolability to the rules and forms which the judges are to frame, thus getting rid of the clause empowering "search of the female;" and the withdrawal of all executions under this statute from the operation of 8 Ann. c. 14, s. 9, so as to avoid the difficulties threatened by the decision in the recent well-known case of Cocker v. Musgrove.

The assumption of the LORD CHANCELLOR, "that the general course of education of Attorneys does not render them equally qualified with gentlemen who had been regularly educated for the law as Barristers, to act as Judges in matters involving doctrines of law," would carry with it more weight, could assurance be given that only men who had so been educated, and who had furthermore seen practice, would be appointed. As it is, we hold that Attorneys of high and honourable standing, who are well acquainted with the wants of creditors, and the character and manœuvres of local practitioners, should be eligible to these judicial offices, especially as in some districts there will be difficulty of obtaining Barristers of competency and standing. When the Act is printed, we propose to go through its clauses seriatim, and shall make on them such comments as they appear to deserve.

SHAM LAWYERS.

THE following comprehensive and alluring advertisement appeared in the Bristol Mercury of the 22nd inst. We recommend Messrs. THOMPSON and Co. to the surveillance of the Profession in Bristol, whose province these worthies so boldly invade.

THOMPSON and CO. Accountants and Agents, having for many years been concerned in legal and commercial transactions in London and Bristol, and being familiar with the method and means of carrying out important operations of business to a successful termination with a single-eye view to the benefit of their employers, offer themselves as a convenient medium of communication, and their confidential services to persons desirous of obtaining efficient aid in any of the following matters, on moderate terms:—

Partnerships negotiated.—Partnership and disputed accounts adjusted, and the results deduced in a style perfectly intelligible to any capacity.

Petitions, memorials, statements, or letters, composed and written, in the best manner, for individuals who happen to be unacquainted either with the mode of addressing men of distinction, or who are unable to give proper expression to their ideas in becoming language—especially for persons seeking, through the medium of influential friends, to procure benefits from, or the patronage of, Members of Parliament, public boards, railway directors, and similar powerful companies; and for persons who have occasion to propitiate or apply to the Lords of the Treasury, Secretaries of State, Secretary at War, Commissioners of Customs or Excise, the Trinity Board, &c. for remission of penalties incurred under the revenue laws, in mitigation of sentences, for information respecting absent naval or military men, prize-money, &c. or to obtain appointments of a subordinate kind under Government at home or abroad.

Wills made at any hour.—Contracts and agreements drawn.—Notices to quit prepared and served.

Deeds analysed, abstracted, and copied.

The accounts of trustees, executors, and administrators with beneficiaries, legatees or claimants under wills, &c. carefully prepared, and the items ranged with legal precision.

Residuary estate accounts and legacy receipts drawn up in conformity with the regulations of the Stamp-office.

Books of accounts opened and kept by double entry, systematically balanced, and proved by an ascertained profit and loss statement.

Builders and traders generally may be materially assisted by the friendly suggestions, and avail themselves of the advertisers' legal experience, respecting arrangements with mortgagees at the least cost—from whom it is most prudent to borrow money—adverse creditors—accounts—correspondence, &c.—without incurring danger by disclosures which, too frequently, are caught at by unprincipled men, and result in ruin.

Lengthy calculations of interest, discounts, &c. made.—Parliamentary stock and foreign moneys reduced into British currency and checked.

Club articles handsomely copied for framing, and club accounts adjusted.

Authors' manuscripts, estimates, specifications, accounts, averages, log-books, and every kind of writing copied with neatness and accuracy.

Rent and debts collected, and the proceeds promptly handed over.

A register kept of vacant situations for clerks, foremen, and respectable artisans.

LAW TIMES EDITION OF IMPORTANT STATUTES.

THE COUNTY COURTS BILL.

THIS Bill having received the Royal assent to-day, the edition of it announced in our last and preceding numbers, with practical notes, and a copious index by Mr. PATERSON, will be brought out with all practicable despatch. It will form one of the Law Times Edition of Important Statutes, will be carefully got up with an eye to facility for use, and may be expected in a few days.

A COURSE OF LECTURES ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS.

By PROFESSOR CAREY.

Delivered at the University College.

LECTURE XVI.

In the last lecture we considered the right of stoppage in transitu, and we may consider delivery in a twofold point of view. When the goods go from the hands of the seller, into the hands of a middleman, they are delivered, as far as an action for goods sold and delivered goes; but they are not delivered so as to put an end to the right of stoppage till they have got out of the hands of the middleman to the end of their destination. If the goods in the course of their transit are sold to a third person, this in general does not affect the right of the consignor. A sells goods to B; before they are in his possession, B sells them to C; B can give no better right to C than he had himself, and if B become insolvent while they are in transitu, the goods being sold to C cannot affect the right to stop them. This is on the principle that the vendee of a chattel cannot stand in a better situation than the vendor. To this there is an exception in mercantile transactions, where there is a transfer by a bill of lading. Where goods are sold on board what is termed a general ship, that is, a ship that takes goods into port by virtue of a charter-party from several merchants, a bill of lading is given. A bill of lading is an instrument containing the terms of the contract between the master of the ship on behalf of the owner on the one hand, and the individual merchant on the other. It is given by the master, and contains a specification of the goods sent in the name of the merchant, and it also designates the person to whom they are to be delivered,—the consignee. Of this instrument there are several copies; one is transmitted by the shipper to the consignee, and this instrument gives notice of the consignment, and operates as a transfer of the property, but it has not the effect of vesting the possession of the goods in the consignee. It is not equivalent to a delivery, so as to defeat the right of stoppage,—the goods are still in transitu.

Now it is a general rule that a chose in action cannot be assigned; a bill of lading is in the nature of a chose in action; it is a title to the property which is on board the ship, just as a bill of exchange for 20*l.* gives you a right to claim the 20*l.* from the person who is bound to pay it. To this there are several exceptions. First, a bill of exchange and promissory note by statute, and one or two other kinds of property. It has lately been decided that a dividend warrant, that is, a warrant for the receipt of dividends at the Bank of England, is assignable. Questions are raised upon this point, and very probably it may be held that railway scrip, or scrip in public companies, is assignable; but that, I do not think, is altogether settled. The question is involved in the case of Ackermann v. Cooper. So it is of a bill of lading. A bill of lading, like a bill of exchange, passes by indorsement, and thereby the property in the goods that are on board the ship passes; the person who is the indorsee of the bill of lading is entitled to the goods. The effect of this transaction is, that the master holds the goods that have been shipped for the benefit either of the consignee, or of any person who may, by indorsement, have acquired a right to the bill of lading; and thus, by indorsement of the bill of lading, the goods may be sold, and the right of possession immediately on their landing be transferred to the purchaser. There is an early case in which the transferability of this document is decided; Evans v. Bartlett, 1 Lord Raym. 271. You will observe that the goods are to be delivered "by E. F. merchant, there, to his assigns here, on the paying the freight for the same goods." Now, the question arises, what is the effect of that clause? E. F. the merchant, indorses the bill of lading for a valuable consideration to another person; that other person goes and gets possession of the goods. Is he here bound to pay the freight? and if he is, what is the nature of the obligation? He is no party to the original contract; the contract is between other persons, to deliver unto E. F. or to any person to whom E. F. shall assign; that person is no party to the original contract. And then there are two questions raised. First of all, does he make himself a party to the contract, so as in point of law, without any thing done on his part, that he is answerable for the freight? That is one question. If he merely becomes the indorsee of a bill of lading, and takes the goods, it is not a deduction of law from his doing that, that he is liable to pay the freight. But there comes another question. It has always been usual, as a matter of dealing between man and man, that the person who becomes entitled to the goods under the bill of lading, should pay the freight, and it is done, and that has become so usual a thing, and so much a matter of course, that this question arises—Does not the person who takes the bill of lading by indorsement, and who acts upon it by receiving the goods—does he not thereby, by implication, in fact, undertake to pay the freight? This is a question which draws a distinction, which is not often drawn, between a promise simply implied in law, and a promise to be inferred in fact from the circumstances. The Court held thus:—There is no promise implied in law, and the facts do not raise the implication. But there is a very strong implication of a promise, and the jury would, under all ordinary circumstances, find that there had been such a promise, and that he had by his action made the undertaking. There is the case of Cock v. Taylor, 13 East, 399. "The master of a ship having contracted by a bill of lading with a shipper to deliver goods to certain persons, or their assigns, he, on the paying freight for the same and demanding and taking of such goods from the master by a purchaser or assignee of the bill of lading without the freight having been paid, is evidence of a new contract and promise on the part of such purchaser as the intimate appointee of the shippers for the purpose of delivery to pay the freight, and he is liable for the amount in an action of indebitatus assumpsit brought against him by the shippers of the owner." Now, the interpretation to be put on that case by a very recent case is this—that the facts there stated do not of themselves create the liability; it is not held to overrule the other case (Cock v. Taylor), namely, that there may be more or less, according to the circumstances, evidence of a new promise. Then there is the recent case of Saunders v. Venerula, 4 Q.B. 267. The wool was transferred to the defendant Vanzeller, who had made advances upon it, and when it came to his hands, it was found not to be wool such as he had ordered, and he said—"I do not accept this wool; I will sell it for the benefit of you, Bell, taking to myself first—to repay my advances." In point of fact, the wool, when sold, did not cover the advances. The jury said, "We do not know whether this defendant is liable to pay for the goods which he himself lost under these circumstances." The way in which they expressed it was this—"Whether the defendant promised the plaintiffs to pay them we do not know; we leave that to the consideration of the Court." Then the Court said, that raises simply this issue, and it is a matter of law to be inferred from the facts stated, that there was such a promise; it was for the jury to decide whether there was any evidence of a promise, and they had not done that. The Court of Queen's Bench gave judgment for the defendant. In error the Court said—"We are of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench is right, and that the special verdict was not defective, and that the defendant is liable to judgment in his favour. Such facts as are found by the jury are found without any ambiguity; and there is no defect in the verdict in that respect, and the question referred by the jury to the Court was one of law; viz. whether the law would, upon these facts, imply a contract by the defendant with the plaintiff to pay the freight at the rate specified. We are satisfied that it would not, even if this were the case of an indorsee of a bill of lading, which specified that the goods were to be delivered by the shipowner, or to the consignee or his assign, he or they paying a certain and specified sum for freight, without any reference to a charter-party, and the indorsee had received the goods by virtue of that bill; there would have been no evidence to warrant the jury in finding there was such a contract; and it has been so much the practice for the indorsee of such a bill of lading to pay the specified freight, if he accepts the goods under it, that there is little or no doubt that the jury would, upon such a question, have found in favour of the shipowner, if the indorsee received the goods without a disclaimer of his liability to the freight. But there is no authority for saying that under such circumstances there is a contract, raised by law, to pay the freight which another, viz. the consignor, has contracted with the shipowner to pay; upon principle, it cannot be contended that the contract runs with the property in the goods, and is transferred with it; and there is no decision to that effect. We do not dispute the propriety of the judgment in Cock v. Taylor which may be treated as the origin of questions of this nature; but that decision was merely that the receipt of the goods under the bill of lading was evidence of a new agreement; and it is so spoken of by all the judges. In the subsequent case of Wilson v. Kymer, the previous mode of carrying on business between the parties was held to be evidence of the same nature; and it was left to the jury to consider whether they would imply a promise from the former habits of dealing, by the evidence of the defendant having obtained the goods under orders from the consignee, but having paid the freight; and though some of the judges, particularly Mr. Justice Le Blanc, in the subsequent case of Mooros v. Kymer, speak as if the case of Cock v. Taylor had decided that the law would imply a promise, it is evident that the expression is an inaccurate one, and not justified by the case itself. The ground on which the latter case is distinguished from the former by all the judges except Lord Ellenborough, viz. that there was a remedy for the same freight by the shipowner against the consignee, cannot certainly be supported. We are therefore of opinion that the law would not imply any contract in this case, if the bill of lading had made no reference to the charter-party, but had specified a certain sum of money to be payable for freight, and consequently that our judgment should be for the defendant."

Supposing A consigns goods to B; B indorses the bill of lading to C, and afterwards B becomes insolvent; can C still exercise the right of stoppage in transitu? How does C acquire a right to the possession of the goods against A, the original vendor? A, as the vendor, has a right to stop the goods in transitu; and has any thing occurred to divest him of the right? C, as the indorsee of the bill of lading, has the right to take possession of the goods independently of the title of B; has any thing occurred to defeat that right? These rights cannot stand together; one of them must give way. That question can only arise where the claim of C is valid and bond fide. If the bill of lading was indorsed or negotiated without consideration, the indorsement and negotiation confer no right of property. Again, if the indorsee was aware that the goods were unpaid for, or that the consignee was insolvent, or if there had been any other circumstance indicating fraud or collusion between the two, the indorsement or negotiation would confer no right against the original consignor. The question only arises where C, the indorsee, is a bond fide purchaser; where he has purchased for a valuable consideration, and without notice of the circumstance of the insolvency. Such a purchase having been made, B becomes insolvent; A claims the goods; A has sold the goods for the insolvent, and has not been paid for them; C has paid for the goods, and has not got them; which is to prevail? The case of Lickbarrow v. Mason is in point, in which this question was decided. Turing and Son purchased at Middlebourg goods, and shipped them to Liverpool, on account of Freeman, of Rotterdam. Freeman assigned the bills of lading to Lickbarrow, who indorsed them. Lickbarrow paid Freeman for the goods; Freeman became bankrupt. Turing and Son, the original shippers, had not been paid; Turing and Son indorsed their copy of the bill of lading to Mason, as their agent, and gave him a note, saying, "we have shipped these goods on account of Freeman, and Freeman has become insolvent; stop the goods." Mason, on the arrival of the vessel at Liverpool, produced the bill of lading, and took possession of the goods. Mason sold the goods on account of Turing and Son, and an action of trover was brought against Mason by Lickbarrow to recover the goods, or the value of the goods. Lickbarrow asserted that, by the assignment of the bill of lading, the property was absolutely transferred to him, and that he was entitled to the possession; that the goods were his, and that he was entitled to recover the goods themselves, or the value of them, in trover. Mason, the defendant, as the agent of Turing and Son, relied on the right of the consignor to stop the goods in their transit, on account of the bankruptcy of Freeman, the original consignor; and he contended that Freeman could convey to Lickbarrow no better title than he himself possessed. (2 T. R. 65.) In the King's Bench judgment was given for Lickbarrow, the plaintiff. It was held that, by the assignment of the bill of lading, the property in the goods was transferred to the purchaser; and that as the property is in the purchaser, and he has paid the price, he is entitled to the possession. Upon this writ of error was brought in the Exchequer Chamber, and the judgment of the King's Bench was reversed. (1 Hy. B. 357.) It was there held, that an assignment passes such right, and no better (as the person assigning it had); that, therefore, the right of stoppage in transitu still existed. Upon this judgment of the Exchequer Chamber a writ of error was brought in the House of Lords; the judges delivered their opinion; three were for reversing the judgment in the Exchequer Chamber, and six were for affirming it; that is, three were in favour of the judgment of the King's Bench (which was for Lickbarrow), and six were for the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber. However, a demurrer to the evidence was put in, the objection was put on record, and the demurrer was held to be informal; and upon that ground a venire de novo was directed to be awarded. The case was tried again, was again brought under the consideration of the King's Bench on a special verdict, and the Court then, understanding that the case was to be carried to the House of Lords, merely stated that they retained their former opinion; judgment was accordingly given for the plaintiff, that is, in favour of the bill of lading. A writ of error was brought on the judgment, but it was afterwards abandoned; and although on the former occasion a majority of the judges had held it as their opinion, that the right of stoppage still continued in that case, yet the King's Bench still persisted in holding that it was at an end. And the doctrine of the Court of King's Bench prevailed against the opinion of the majority of the judges; and it is now the admitted doctrine in our courts, that a consignee may, under the circumstances before stated, confer an absolute right of property upon a third person indefeasible without any claim on the part of the consignor.

It is a singular circumstance, that as a question of jurisprudence the actual nature of this right should have long remained a matter of dispute, and at this moment it should remain unsettled. What is the effect of stoppage in transitu? Does the vendor retain his property in the goods, or does he merely retain possession of them? Upon the one hypothesis, the stoppage is said to rescind the contract; upon the other hypothesis, the right of stoppage has sometimes been denominated an equitable lien. The right of the vendor over the goods in respect of the price has sometimes been called a lien. As long as the goods continued in his possession, it was termed a legal lien; but, at law, the lien ceases, in all cases, with the right of possession, the actual right of property over the goods. When they have left the possession of the vendor and are in transit, it has been termed an equitable lien. The term lien does not seem to be correctly applied to the right of the vendor over the goods, either while they remain in his possession or after they have left. The term lien properly signifies the right which a man acquires over goods in his possession, by reason of something which he has done. The right which the vendor has, is the result of legal principles, with respect to the property in possession; and it is said in Bloxam v. Sanders, 4 B. & C. 948, "The seller's right in respect of the price, is not a mere lien, without which property would pass with the possession; but it grows out of his original ownership, and therefore the payment of the price is a condition precedent on the buyer's part, and until he make such payment or tender he has no right to the possession. This right is not like a lien, a right acquired by a person who is to exercise it, but it is a right to the possession, which he originally had as owner, of that which the purchaser has not yet put himself in a condition to claim: it grows out of the original ownership. If goods are sold on credit, and nothing is agreed upon as to the time of delivering the goods, the vendee is immediately entitled to possession, and the right of possession of property rests at once in him, but his right of possession is not absolute; it is liable to be defeated if he becomes insolvent before he obtains possession. (Book v. Hollingworth.) Whether default in payment, when the credit expires will destroy his right of possession, if he has not before that time obtained actual possession, and put him in the same situation as if there had been no bargain for credit, it is not now necessary to inquire, because this is a case of insolvency; in the case of insolvency the point seems perfectly clear. If the seller has despatched the goods to the buyer, and insolvency occurs, he has a right, in virtue of his original ownership, to stop them in transitu. Why? Because the property is vested in the buyer, so as to subject him to the risk of any accident; but he has not an indefeasible right to the possession, and his insolvency without payment defeats the right." According to this view, if the vendor sells for ready money he is not required to give up possession; the purchaser is not entitled to demand it until the price is paid or tendered; if the goods are sold on credit he may be required to give up possession, and the purchaser is entitled to demand possession immediately. If, before the goods come into the possession of the purchaser, he becomes insolvent, his insolvency defeats the right of possession. If the goods are in the hands of the seller still, the seller may retain them; if the goods are in the hands of a third person, the seller may stop them. And the question arises, where they are stopped, whose goods are they? How are they to be dealt with? If the contract has been rescinded by the stoppage, the goods are in the same situation as if there had been no sale; they are the goods of the vendor, and he may deal with them accordingly. If the stoppage does not rescind the contract, if it operates only as an equitable lien, then the goods are after the stoppage the property of the purchaser, or the assignee who stands in his place. If the purchaser agreed to give up the contract, or if by not claiming the goods such an agreement could be inferred, I apprehend the vendor would be authorised in treating the goods as his own. But in the first instance he is only entitled to hold the goods for the assignees in case they choose to claim them. There is the recent case of Gibson v. Carruthers, 8 M. & W. 321, in which it appears that if goods are still actually or constructively in the possession of the vendor, and the vendee becomes insolvent, the goods are still the property of the assignees, provided they choose to claim them. That is a case which seems still to leave the question very much open. The bench were not agreed, and there is a very learned argument by the Lord Chief Baron, who differed from the rest of the Court. The result, however, of that would appear to be that until such an agreement has been made, or can be implied, the goods are the property of the assignees; credit is given, but still they may claim possession on payment of the price; and even where they have not claimed the possession, they may be still the owner's, so as to bring an action if any thing has been done contrary and inconsistent with their right. So it is with respect to goods upon which the vendor is said to have a lien; that is to say, which he is entitled to retain according to Bloxam v. Sanders. "The buyer, or those who stand in his place, may still obtain the right of possession, if they will pay or tender the price; or they may still act upon their right of property if anything unwarrantable is done to that right. If the original vendor sell when he ought not, they may bring a special action against him for the injury they sustain by such a wrongful sale, and recover damages to the extent of that injury; but they can bring no action, in which right of property and right of possession are both requisite, unless they have both those rights." (Wentworth v. Owlhwaite, 10 M. & W. 436; Wilmshurst v. Bowker, 15 Bing. 541.) This question may arise: goods are insured by a consignee; the consignee becomes bankrupt; the goods are stopped by the consignor; before the stoppage the ship was wrecked. Now you cannot recover upon goods unless you have an insurable interest in them: who had the insurable interest in the goods there? In Clay v. Harrison, 10 B. & C. 99, "the question was, whether the bankrupt had an interest in the goods insured at the time of the loss; and that depended on the effect which is to be given to the stoppage in transitu. It was argued, on the part of the defendant, that its effect was to rescind the contract, and to revert the property to the original owner; on the part of the plaintiff, that it only restored to the owners the right of possession, and placed them in the same situation as if they had not parted with the goods. There does not appear to be any case in which this point has been expressly decided." Supposing the goods to have been stopped in transitu, then if the stoppage rescind the contract, the goods from the beginning to the end have been the property of the person who sold them. If, on the other hand, it only gives to the vendor a right to retain them till he be paid the price, the goods still remain the property of the consignee, though he cannot claim them without payment. If the latter is the case, then he has an insurable interest; but if the contracts are rescinded, and the goods were as if they had never been sold to him, then he has no insurable interest. The judgment of the Court, having said that the question in this case depended upon the effect which is to be given to the stoppage, nevertheless goes on to say—"we are of opinion that, under the peculiar circumstances of the present case, the bankrupt after the stoppage in transitu had no property in the goods insured, and therefore this action cannot be supported." This judgment, although it seemed to proceed on the assumption that the contract was rescinded, leaves the question as doubtful as it was before. There is another question to which I have before adverted, on the general rights of the vendor, on which the language that is used, like the language in the case of Bloxam v. Sanders, seems to imply that the right exercised is one only of stopping the goods in order to hold them until the price is paid, and that its effect is not to rescind the contract. (Dixon v. Yates, 5 B. & Ad. 313.) The right of Dixon, as vendor, to retain the goods, had been suspended by the bills given: when the bills were dishonoured the right revived, and Dixon was held entitled to possession. No very strong conclusion can be drawn from that case, but it was strongly expressed that there was only a right to retain the goods.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

Law Tracts. By J. MOSELEY, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. Summonses and Orders, Practice of. London: Stevens and Norton.

MR. MOSELEY has hit upon a happy thought in these tracts. There are many subjects of great importance to the practitioner, not sufficiently extensive to occupy a volume, and therefore upon which there is always extreme difficulty in procuring information when it is most wanted. A collection of tracts, treating of such brief topics as are of frequent reference in the office or in chambers, cannot but be acceptable to the Profession.

And the first of them gives ample assurance that not only will the subjects be in themselves attractive, but that they will be handled with due learning and labour. This little treatise on Summonses and Orders is an acquisition to the law library. All the practice is collected and arranged, so that the instructions required can be found with the utmost readiness. Having investigated the power of judges at chambers, Mr. MOSLEY proceeds to describe the summons, its form, its service, the proceedings at chambers, orders, and lastly, how the decision of the judge may be impeached.

As a specimen, we extract the introductory section on the POWER OF JUDGES AT CHAMBERS.

The history of the authority of the judges at chambers is somewhat obscure and uncertain. (Vide per Wilmot, C.J. in Res v. Almon, Wilmot's Notes, 264.) It is said to have been exercised time out of mind, and to have arisen from the overflow of business to the court (Per Yates, J. in Res v. Wilkes, 4 Burr. 2571), so to be a constant and immemorial usage, sanctified and recognized by the Courts of Westminster Hall, and in many instances by the Legislature; and now become as much a part of the law of the land as any other course of practice, which custom has introduced and established. (Per Wilmot, C.J. in Res v. Almon, Wilmot's Notes, 264.) So it is said to be matter of tradition, to be learnt of the officers of the Court. (Per Lord Mansfield, 4 Burr. 566.) But, however ancient the power of a judge at chambers may have been, the extensive practice to which it is now applied is of comparatively recent date. Thus it is said by Wilmot, C.J. (in Res v. Almon, Wilmot's Notes, 264), that after careful search by himself and Mr. Denning, no account of the practice of summonses had been found, and the case of the Mayor of Maidstone (Fopham, 180) was the earliest in which mention was made of them, and that, though reference to them is made by Lord Coke, these appear to have been rather like highly irregular instances than an established lawful practice. (Vide per Wilmot, J. in Wilmot's Notes, 264.) And it would appear that summonses and orders did not form any important part of the practice of the Courts till the time to which Burnes's Notes in C.P. refer, for, except the case above referred to, there appears to be no mention of summonses or orders in any of the reports anterior to these. And indeed, on reference to Vin. Abr. (title, Venue.—Change of), it will be seen that up to the time to which those reports extend, the venue was changed by motion to the Court, and after that time by application to the judge at chambers. So it appears that amendments of pleadings were formerly made by motion to the Court, as late as the time of King William and Queen Ann. (Vide 10 Mod. 88.—Salk 47.) And there is no doubt that, till recently, whenever the Court were sitting, or in Term time, the proper course was to apply to the Court and not to a judge.

But at whatever time the practice of judges at chambers may have come into use, it is pretty clear for what object it was introduced, viz.: "for the ease and convenience of the suitors of the Court—to accommodate them at a much easier expense, and with less trouble in a great variety of cases, especially in vacation time when there was a great multiplicity of business; and the saving of the time of the Court in adjusting trifling matters, which might be so much better employed in momentous ones, was no inconsiderable motive in establishing it." (Per Wilmot, J. in Res v. Almon, Wilmot's Notes, 264.) And in adopting this easy and expeditious mode of regulating the proceedings in actions, the Courts only exercised their ordinary powers. For all judges have, by common law, authority to alter and modify the proceedings of their courts, a power so frequently used by them by means of rules and orders, &c. And this in pursuance of that general authority which they have by implication of law, of doing all things necessary for carrying out the jurisdiction which they hold, as of appointing necessary officers (Metcalf v. Worsley, 1 Roll. Abr. 526)—of issuing process (2 Roll. Abr. 277)—of granting imparlances (1 Salk. 408)—even where no such power on the creation of the Court is granted to them. And this probably in pursuance of the civil law maxim, cuius jurisdictionis data est, ea quoque omnesque esse videtur sine quibus jurisdictionis explicari non possit. D. 2, 1, 2.

And it is to this power, probably, to which Baron Bayley refers, when he says "that since the Uniformity Process Act, a judge at chambers is in a very different situation to what he was before that Act: a great deal of new business is now thrown upon him, and, though the Act does not certainly give power to a single judge in express terms, it seems impliedly given him in some cases, as where the declaration is delivered in vacation and is irregular, cannot an application be made to a judge to set aside the declaration with costs?" (Hughes v. Brand, 2 Dowl. 132.)

As to the light in which a judge, sitting at chambers, is to be considered, and whether he represents, or rather constitutes, a whole Court, or is to be considered rather as an officer appointed by the Court to decide upon incidental questions which may arise in the course of an action, appears to be a point of difficulty. In Res v. Almon (Wilmot's Notes, 265, 266), the Court clearly seemed to hold, and indeed acted upon the first position, viz. that a judge at chambers exercised the full authority of the Court, and fully represented it the same as if the Court itself were there, and the same as he would at the side bar. So it was said by Tindal, C.J. that "The authority of a judge sitting in chambers to make orders, when considered on principle, is the authority of the Court itself, for no order which is made can be enforced by attachment until it has been first made a rule of Court; and the party who disputes the propriety of the order, has the opportunity, in the present instance, to question its validity by application to the Court. On any other principle it is difficult to account for the validity of many acts done by a single judge at chambers, such as setting aside irregular judgments, signed in vacation, which judgments are to be considered on principle the acts of the whole Court, discharging persons under writs of execution improperly taken out, and the like." (Per Tindal, C.J. in 9 Bing. 104; 2 M. & Sc. 119.) It does not, however, clearly appear in this last decision to have been held that the Court itself is to be supposed as actually sitting at chambers, for the judge's authority may be "the authority of the Court itself, and his judgments considered as the acts of the Court," as done through him as the deputy of the Court, without supposing the Court actually present, the same as many other acts done by the officers of the Court, as the masters, prothonotaries, &c. are considered substantially as the acts of the Court. The words, however, would appear, perhaps, on the whole, as confirming the principle laid down in Res v. Almon, and as such are liable to some objections. For if the Court must "adopt" the decision of the judge at chambers, by making it a rule of Court before they can act upon it, as by issuing an attachment for disobedience to it, it would appear that it was not originally the act of the Court. Again, if any one judge can thus completely represent the whole Court, the Court may be sitting in five different places at once. So if the decision of a judge at chambers is the decision of the whole Court, an appeal from his decision must be to a court of error. And lastly, as has been already observed, that originally a judge at chambers only had authority to act out of Term time, when the Court had no power to sit at all, much less by a judge at chambers, so that if his power were only that of the Court it could never have existed. The two first of these objections were adverted to in Res v. Almon (Wilmot's Notes, 264, 265), but scarcely appear to have been satisfactorily answered.

Besides this authority of a judge at Chambers by common law, they have an extensive authority cast upon them by various statutes, to act in certain matters not of sufficient importance to require the judgment of the whole Court, or of a nature requiring a speedy and summary decision. And whenever such power is conferred by statute, or otherwise, the judge will have just precisely so much original power as is contained within the words of the statute and no more, for all delegations of judicial power are construed strictly. And, therefore, if he exceed his authority in any degree, or do not act up to it in a manner pointed out, or in any way deviate from the authority as given, his acts will be void. (Vide post, "Summonses," by whom, at what time, in what form, granted.) But when once the extent of the original power granted is ascertained, everything necessary for carrying out that power will be implied. And, therefore, where an authority is given to a judge at chambers to hear and determine certain matters, he will have power of summoning the parties, &c. and doing all things necessary for carrying out the powers granted. (Vide ante, and Metcalf v. Worsley, 1 Roll. Abr. 526; 2 Roll. Abr. 277; 1 Salk. 408.) But probably only such powers as judges at chambers usually have in like matters.

As above remarked, the authority of a judge at chambers, whether it accrue to him by custom of the court, by statute, or rule of Court in pursuance of such statute, must be pursued strictly; and to do this, since the power which he holds is for the public benefit, he must exercise it up to the full limits to which it extends, and yet not one tittle beyond it. And when it appears from the practice, or from express or implied words of a statute (as where he is to use his discretion) that the decision of a judge at chambers is to be final, the Court above cannot and will not interfere. (Parkes v. Edge, 1 Cr. & M. 429; Res v. Archbishop of York, 1 Ad. & El. 397; vide post, Order, how impeached, by motion.) So, also, it must be used in the manner pointed out by custom or Act of Parliament, &c. by which it is created. And it is said by Lord Mansfield, that the practice of the judge at chambers is matter of tradition, resting on the memory of the officers of the court, of whom the judges, as in other matters of practice, will enquire. The books, however, such as the reports, are evidence, no doubt, of what the judges, by the advice of the officers, have heretofore determined to be the practice. And this practice is binding on the judge, for though in deciding on the merits of the application, &c. he may and does in most cases use his discretion; yet so far as the bringing the application before him and dispensing it, &c. is concerned, he is bound by the practice of the Court, which is part of the law of that Court. So the power of a judge at chambers must be used in accordance with the line pointed out by the custom or statute creating it. And, therefore, where by a custom or statute a judge at chambers has power to grant an order only out of Term, an order made in Term time will be void. (Vide post, Summonses, at what time, &c.) So, no doubt, if the particular place for making a summons or order, as on circuit, or at chambers, were pointed out, it must be followed. (Vide post, Summonses, form of, where returnable.) So the power of judges at chambers, to grant summonses and orders, whether it accrues by statute or by custom, like all other powers in law, can be exercised only by those on whom, by statute or by custom, it is strictly conferred.

A PRACTICAL COMMENTARY

ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS RELATING TO REAL PROPERTY.

By WILLIAM HUGHES, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

6. Both limitations must be by the same instrument.—Both limitations must be by the same instrument; or, in other words, the ancestor must take an estate of freehold under the same instrument which contains the limitation to his heirs. Hence, if A be tenant for life under a deed, and the lands of which he is so tenant for life be granted by another deed, or devised by will, to the heirs of the heirs of his body, the two estates will not unite and vest the inheritance in him. (Moore v. Parker, 1 Lord Raym. 37; Snave v. Cutler, 1 Lev. 134; Des dem. Fomerrey v. Fomerrey, Doug. 487.) But a schedule, or a codicil annexed to or referring to a will in which an estate is limited to the ancestor, being considered to form a part of the will itself, does not prevent the application of the rule; notwithstanding the limitation to the ancestor should be in one paper, and the limitation to the heirs should be contained in another. (Hayes and Forde v. Forde, 2 W. Blackst. 693.)

As to instruments creating and executing powers.—Whether, when an estate is limited to a man by one instrument, and afterwards to his heirs, &c. in his lifetime under an execution of a power of appointment contained in such first instrument, the two limitations would unite, so as to vest the inheritance in the ancestor, seems, for a considerable time, to have been open to doubt; and, although the prevailing opinion of those best calculated to form one upon so important a subject, seems to have been in favour of the application of the rule (see Ferne, C. R. 75), no judicial opinion appears to have been ever delivered on the point, until the question again arose in the case of Venables v. Morris (7 T. R. 342, 439). The nearest case in the old books is Pybus v. Milford (1 Vent. 372), where a limitation to the heirs of the body of A was held to unite with an estate for life, which resulted to him by the same deed. In Venables v. Morris (ubi sup.), however, the precise question arose. In that case, under a settlement, the husband was tenant for life, remainder to trustees, to preserve, &c. (after several uses which never arose) to such uses as the wife should appoint. She appointed to the right heirs of the husband. The Court ultimately held that the fee-simple vested in the trustees, so that the estate under the power being merely equitable, could not unite with the limitation to the husband for life in the deed, which was a legal estate; but Lord Kenyon treated it as quite clear that the appointment was to be considered in the same light as if it had been inserted in the original deed, by which the power of appointment was created; and he therefore held, that if the limitation to the heirs of the husband had been a legal estate, it would have enlarged the estate of the ancestor, and have given him a fee.

Application of the rule as to equitable estates.—The rule in Shelley's case will comprehend equitable as well as legal estates; that is, provided both estates are equitable; but, with this exception, however, viz. that where the trusts are only executory, courts of equity, in order to effectuate the testator's intention, in framing the settlement of which the will is directory, more according to the spirit and intention than the strict letter of the will, have so far departed from what would be the legal operation of the words limiting the trust, if reduced to a common law conveyance, as sometimes to construe the words "heirs of the body" into words of purchase, and not of limitation. As, therefore, questions occasionally arise upon this subject, it may not be improper to define the distinction between trusts executed, and executory trusts; which seems to be as follows, e. g. when the trusts are wholly and directly declared: as if lands are limited to the use of trustees in trust for B, and after his decease, in trust for the heirs of his body, such trusts being wholly declared will be executed in B, and the Courts will not, in that case, depart from the general rule of construction to effectuate the presumed purposes of a settlement, contravening the effect of the previous limitations. But where the trusts are only directory, and prescribing the intended limitations of some future settlement, they will be considered as executory: as, for example, where trustees are directed to purchase or convey lands; in which case the directions are not considered as complete and conclusive, but rather as minutes, from which more full and correct limitations are to be framed; and in such case the Court, in decreeing such settlement, will depart from the strict technical words in order the better to effectuate the general object which the testator had in view. Hence a clause exempting the ancestor from impeachment of waste, Papillon v. Voice (2 P. Wms. 471); Glenorchy (Lord) v. Boveille (Ca. temp. Talb. 3); Ashton v. Ashton (1 Coll. Jar. 525); the insertion of trustees to support contingent remainders, Papillon v. Voice (2 P. Wms. 471); Earl of Stamford v. Hobart (3 Bro. P. C. edit. Toml. 31); Horne v. Barton (Coop. 257); or any other clause which denies the power of barring the entail. Leonard v. Sussex (2 Vern. 525) furnishes evidence of such intention; in which case the Courts, in directing a conveyance, will order a strict settlement, and by that means confine the estate of the first taker to a mere life-interest, notwithstanding the words of limitation to his heirs, &c. would have been sufficient to have vested the inheritance in him in the case of a legal estate, or a trust executed. But even in the instance of executory trusts, there must be some expression in the will besides the mere limitation to the ancestor for life, to enable the Court to discover that the testator meant his heirs should not take in that right, and under the strict technical import of that term; for the Court must necessarily follow the testator's words, unless he has shewn that he did not mean to use them in their proper sense, and have never gone so far as to say that merely because the direction was for an entail they would execute that by decreeing a strict settlement. It must also be kept in mind that, in order to enable the Court of Chancery to interfere in directing the mode in which the trust is to be performed, it must appear in express terms that the trustees are to settle, convey, &c. for a mere direction to purchase has been holden to be insufficient. (Seale v. Seale, Pre. Cha. 421; S.C. 1 P. Wms. 290; Austen v. Taylor, Amb. 376; Blackburn v. Stables, 2 Ves. & Bea. 367.)

Of the cy pres doctrine.—And as on the one hand courts of equity, in order to effectuate the testator's intention, have restricted a limitation in terms sufficient to pass the inheritance to a mere life estate, so, on the other, they have for the same cause extended a limitation which in express terms would only have passed a life estate, to an estate of inheritance, in order to embrace more remote objects of the testator's bounty, whom, from the general tenor of the will, it is evident he intended should take, but the language employed by him has been such as, if construed literally, would be contrary to law, as being limited to take effect on a contingency that must not necessarily happen within the limits prescribed by law for the vesting of an executory devise; as where a devise is made to the issue of persons unborn as purchasers. In cases of this kind therefore, where the intent has been manifest, the Courts, rather than the intention should altogether fail, have so construed the devise as to vest the estate in the ancestor, and thus in the nearest practicable way bring all the parties intended to be benefited within the scope and operation of the will; and hence it is that this construction is called the cy pres doctrine—a doctrine only allowed in the case of wills (Brudenell v. Blues, 7 Ves. 390), and applicable only to real estate (Routledge v. Dorrill, 2 Ves. 357), or money directed to be laid out in lands, which in the eye of a court of equity is transmissible in the same manner as the purchased property itself would have been, and has all the incidents of real estate. (Pembroke (Earl of) v. Bowden, 3 Cha. Rep. 115; S. C. 2 Vern. 583; Otoay v. Hudson, 10. 583; Allen v. Allen, Mosel. 123; Chaplin v. Chaplin, 3 P. Wms. 229; Sweetapple v. Bindon, 2 Vern. 536; Lechmere v. Carlisle (Earl of), 3 P. Wms. 211; Lingen v. Sowray, 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 175; S. C. 3 P. Wms. 221; Crabtree v. Bramble, 3 Atk. 680, 687; Fletcher v. Ashburner, 1 Bro. C. C. 497; Broome v. Monck, 10 Ves. 597; D'Arcy v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lef. 388.) The case of Humberston v. Humberston (1 P. Wms. 332) has generally been considered as the leading authority in support of the cy pres doctrine. In that case lands were devised to trustees in trust to convey the premises to Matthew Humberston for life, and upon his death to his first son for life, and so to the son of that first son for life, &c.; and if no issue male of the first son, then to the second son of the said Matthew Humberston for life, and so to his first son; and in failure of such issue of Matthew, then to another Humberston, and his first son for life, &c. with remainders over to the other of the Humberstons for their lives successively, and to their sons when born for their lives, without giving any estate tail to any of them. Lord Chancellor Cowper said, that "though an attempt to make a perpetuity for successive lives be vain, yet so far as is consistent with the rule of law it ought to be complied with." He, therefore, to attain this object, let in all the sons of these several Humberstons then already born to take estates for their lives; but where the limitation was to the son unborn, then such limitation was to be in tail male. A similar construction has also been adopted in several subsequent cases. (Hopkins v. Hopkins, Ca. temp. Talb. 44; Nicholl v. Nicholl, 1 Blackst. Rep. 115; Chapman and Oliver v. Brown, 3 Burr. 1626; Pitt v. Jackson, ib. 51; Mogg v. Mogg, 1 Mer. 654; S. C. in Dom. Proc. 3 Bro. P. C. edit. Topl. 269.)

Application of the rule in Shelley's case to copyholds.—The rule in Shelley's case will operate on copyhold as well as on freehold estates. Hence the same words as would have been sufficient to have vested the inheritance in the ancestor in the case of freehold property, respect being had to the different nature of the instruments, will have the same effect upon a surrender or devise of copyholds; a surrender operating in the same manner as a deed of conveyance (Lovell v. Lovell, 3 Atk. 11; Wat. Cop. 108; Co. Cop. s. 49); and a will receiving the same construction as a devise of freeholds. (Wright v. Kemp, 3 T. R. 470, 473; Widdowson v. Harrison, 1 Jac. & Walk. 532.)

As to estates for years.—But as there can be no inheritance of a term of years, the general rule of construction with respect to property of that kind, is, that where the words used would have been sufficient to have passed the inheritance either in fee or in tail, it will pass the absolute interest in personal estate. The rule, however, is subject to some modifications, which I shall take care to allude to when I come to treat of titles to estates for years.

What words will be allowed to supply the place of heirs of the body.—In wills, the Courts, in order to effectuate the testator's intention, have allowed other terms to supply the place of the words "heirs of the body." Hence a devise to a man and his heirs male will pass an estate tail, though in a similar limitation if contained in a deed, will create an estate in fee-simple. (1 Prest. Estates, 526). The word "issue," also, when used in a collective sense, as extending to and comprehending the issue from generation to generation, will receive a similar construction with the words "heirs of the body." And even the words "sons, children," &c. although properly speaking descriptive only of persons filling those characters, and consequently words of purchase and not of limitation, may yet, when it is manifest the testator intended to use them in the latter sense, be allowed to receive that construction.

Issue, when a word of limitation.—The word "issue," although a word of limitation, whenever it is used in a collective sense, is yet of less determinate meaning than the words "heirs of the body;" the latter being mere technical words, admitting of but one meaning; whereas the word "issue," is capable of more; for in the statute de donis it is used both as synonymous with children, and as descriptive of descendants of every degree; and notwithstanding the latter might be its prima facie meaning, yet the authorities shew that it will yield to the intention of the testator to be collected from the will; and therefore it requires a less demonstrative context to shew such intention than the technical expressions "heirs of the body" would do. (Lees v. Mosley, 1 You. & Coll. 589.) Where the word "issue" has been construed as a word of purchase, it has generally been where explanatory words have shewn that the testator meant to use the term in the same sense as children, sons, &c. Therefore, if a testator was to devise to "A and his issue," which standing alone would undoubtedly pass an estate tail, and was afterwards to go on and state "the eldest of such sons to be preferred to the younger," these subsequent words would explain the issue to mean sons, and no more. So a devise upon trust to transfer one moiety to the issue of S, to be paid to them at their respective ages of twenty-one, and if only one child, then to such one child, for his, her, or their benefit, would restrict the word "issue" to mean children. (Carter v. Bentall, 2 Beav. 551; see also Ryan v. Cowley, Lloyd & Goole, 10; Macell v. Wedding, 8 Sim. 4; Pruen v. Osborn, 11 ib. 142.) Generally speaking, however, the word "issue" will be considered as a word of limitation; and notwithstanding there are some decisions to the contrary, the weight of authority is decidedly in favour of the construction that words of superadded limitation engrafted on the limitation to the issue, and even describing a mode of descent inconsistent with an estate in the ancestor (as a devise to A. for life, with remainder to the issue male of his body, and their heirs for ever), will be insufficient to convert the issue into purchasers. The principal cases in favour of this construction are, Shaw v. Weigh (1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 184, pl. 28, S.C. 2 Str. 798); Dodson v. Grew (Wilm. 272, S.C. 2 Wils. 322); King v. Burchell (1 Eden. 424); Denn dem. Webb v. Puckey (5 T. R. 299); Frank v. Stovin (3 East, 544); Hodson v. Merest (9 Pri. 559); Mogg v. Mogg (1 Mer. 654); Tate v. Clarke (1 Beav. 100). Opposed to it are, King v. Mellish (1 Lev. 58); Loddington v. Kime (1 Salk. 224s S.C. Lord Raym. 203); Backhouse v. Weir (1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 184, pl. 27); Doe dem. Cooper v. Collis (4 T. R. 284); Doe dem. Dwyer v. Burnall (6 T. R. 30, S. C.), under the name of Burnall v. Dewy (1 Bos. and Pull. 215); Doe dem. Gilman v. Elvey (4 East. 313); Lees v. Mosley (1 You. and Coll. 589.)

When the words "children, sons, &c." will be considered as words of limitation.—Although the words "children, sons, &c." are, in their ordinary signification, words of purchase; yet where there is a manifest intent that they shall take under the will, which must altogether fail unless they can take through their parent, in that case either of those terms may become words of limitation; and be construed in the same sense as "heirs of the body;" and then, provided the parent takes a preceding estate of freehold, uniting with that estate will vest the inheritance in him. But this construction will only be allowed where the children can take in no other way. Hence a devise, "to A and his children," will, if A had any children at the time of the devise, vest a joint estate in all, both parent and children as purchasers; but if A had no children, he will then take an estate tail in order to let in the limitations in favour of the children, the latter of whom would otherwise be debarred from all benefit under the will; for they could not take as immediate devisees; not being in existence, nor by way of remainder, the devise being in express terms immediate to A and his children. (Wild's case, 6 Rep. 17; Bendl. 30; Bulstr. 219; Davis v. Stephens, Doug. 321; Seale v. Barters, 2 Bos. & Pull. 485.)

Son or sons, when a word of limitation.—The word "son" or, "sons," though generally speaking words of purchase, yet when used with a view to the whole class, and not as a strict literal description of them in their usual character, may become a word of limitation, and thus bring a preceding estate of freehold in the parent, within the rule in Shelley's case. As where lands are limited to A generally, and if he shall die without having a son, or sons, that the lands shall remain over, in which case the word "son" will be considered as nomen collectivum, and synonymous with heirs male of the body, and vest the inheritance in tail in A. (Byfield's case, cited by Hale, C.J. in King v. Mellish, 1 Vent. 231; Milliner v. Robinson, 1 Moor, 682; Wild v. Lewis, 1 Atk. 432; Robinson v. Robinson, 1 Barr. 38; S.C. 3 Bro. P. C.; under the name of Robinson v. Hicks; Doe v. Mulgrave, 5 T. R. 323; Mellish v.

Mellish, 2 B. & C. 520; Garrod v. Garrod, 2 B. & Ad. 87; Doe dem. Jones v. Davies, 4 Barn. & Ad. 43; Ragget v. Beatty, 2 Moo. & Pay. 612; Doe dem. Jeorrad v. Bannister, 7 Mees. & Wels. 292; Doe dem. Burris v. Charlton, 1 Man. & Grange, 429; S. C. 1 Scott, 290.) But if after devising to A for life, with remainder to his sons or daughters generally, or for life, or in tail, there is a devise over in default of issue of A, then the term "issue" will be construed to mean the kind of issue before described, and confine the word "sons" to its strict literal import. (Doe dem. Bud-don v. Page, 3 T. R. 87; Doe dem. Phipps v. Mulgrave, 5 ib. 230; see also Bamfield v. Popham, 1 P. Wms. 54; Ginger dem. White v. White, Willes, 348; Comberbatch v. Perry, ib. 484; Res v. Stafford (Margus of) 7 East, 521; Foster v. Romney, 11 East, 594; Tooley v. Gennis, 4 Taunt. 313; Doe dem. Liverage v. Vaughan, 5 B. & A. 646.) Yet if the testator, instead of running through the whole line of A's sons, had stopped short at some particular point in the enumeration, and had then inserted a limitation over in default or failure of issue, A. would have taken an estate for life with remainder to his first and other sons, either for life or in tail, accordingly as their estates were limited to them, with remainder to A. in tail by implication. (Langley v. Baldwin, 1 P. Wms. 755, n.; Attorney-General v. Sutton, ib. 753; Robinson v. Robinson, 1 Burr. 58; Doe dem. Bean v. Halley, 5 T. R. 5.) This construction is only applicable, however, to wills made previously to the year 1838, for under the late Will Act (1 Vict. c. 26,) as we have already seen, words importing a failure of issue are to be construed to mean a failure of issue at the time of his death; consequently, as to wills made subsequently, a devise to A. for life, with remainder to his sons, whether including the whole or stopping short at a definite number, with a limitation over in default of issue, will be restrained to the sons, and will not, therefore, enlarge the estate in their parent, who will take simply a life estate, with remainder to his sons as purchasers.

LIFE ASSURANCE.—A question of much importance to life assurance companies has lately been decided by the Judges in the Exchequer Chamber on a bill of exceptions in an action brought by the representatives of Schwabe against the Argus Life Assurance Company. The Judges have determined that a party assured holding his policy in his own hands who may commit suicide, forfeits his policy, and that the office is not bound to pay the amount. This decision settles the law on a point upon which doubts had heretofore existed. The Argus Company, who, before trial, had offered to return all premiums paid with interest, on the opinion of the Judges in their favour being declared, immediately renewed their offer, and have now repaid to Schwabe's representatives the whole of the premiums received, with interest at four per cent, amounting to 969l. 8s. 7d. The company have at the same time resolved in future to return to the representatives of any party assured in their office who may commit suicide the gross amount of premiums paid on the assurance.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.—The largest sale of land that ever took place in the colony by public auction, came off on the 27th of February, when the estates of the late W. M. Orr, esq. were offered for sale by the sheriff. The total amount realised was 20,370l.; W. J. T. Clarke, esq. being the principal purchaser. We subjoin the prices of the principal lots: 2,307 acres, Macquarie Plains, 3,000l.; 1,750 acres adjoining the last, 1,300l.; 2,180 acres, bounded on two sides by Jones's Gully and the Derwent, 1,650l.; 2,400 acres, watered on the west boundary by the Clyde, 1,450l.; 2,126 acres, known as the Duck Marshes, for 710l.; 2,568 acres, near Hobart Town, known as Kangaroo Bottom, for 730l.; 640 acres at Glenorchy, for 140l.

The sworn amount of property in the will of the late Mr. Peter Purcell is under 41,000l. The bulk of his estates and property is left to his widow and two of his sons.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

July 1846.

EDWARDS v. ALVEY.

Sale of lunatic's estate—Expenses incurred by husband of lunatic not so found by inquisition—Jurisdiction.

This matter was brought before the Lord Chancellor from the Court of Vice-Chancellor Wigram.

Green, for the defendant, stated that the suit had been instituted by the executor of a testator, to have the trusts of the will carried into execution under the direction of the Court. The testator, by his will, left his daughter, a married woman, the dividends of two sums of stock, for her maintenance during her life, to her separate use. She had become, and was still, insane; and her husband, who is a farmer in Essex in moderate circumstances, farming 100 acres of land, and having only an income of about 100l. a year, had maintained his wife and three children of the marriage ever since 1838, and, in addition, had expended nearly 400l. in extra expenses for medical advice for the benefit of his wife, and in taking her about for the benefit of her health. Although for some time the wife's interest under her father's will in the stock had become vested, yet it was not until March 1845 that she was entitled to the actual beneficial interest in it. Upon the cause coming on for hearing before Vice-Chancellor Wigram, the husband asked that a reference might be made to the Master to inquire and state what allowance he should be allowed out of the income of his wife's property, to reimburse him for the extra expenses he had incurred since the year 1838 in maintaining his wife, and what should be the allowance to him out of her property for her future maintenance, and whether any portion of the stock should be sold to satisfy the extra expenses he had been at for the benefit of the lunatic. The Master, by his report, recommended that 70l. a year should be for the future allowed to the husband for the maintenance of the lunatic; and that the extra expenses which the husband had incurred should be paid out of either a sale of some portion of the corpus of the fund, or that the surplus of the income of the fund should be applied in liquidating the claims of the husband. That surplus was 20l. a year, which would not reimburse the husband for a long time. Vice-Chancellor Wigram, this being the case of a lunatic, although not found to be so by a commission, thought he had no jurisdiction to confirm the recommendation of the Master's report, and he recommended that it should be brought before the Lord Chancellor.

Here appeared for the executor.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I cannot make an order to sell any part of the corpus of the fund to satisfy the claims of the husband for extra expenses beyond her maintenance incurred by him for the benefit of the lunatic. But as the whole of the income of the lunatic's property would have been enjoyed jointly by her and her husband had she not become insane, I think I am justified in allowing 70l. a year to the husband for her future maintenance, and in directing that the annual sum of surplus income, namely, 20l. should be devoted to the repayment of the expenses incurred by the husband. To that extent the Master's report must be confirmed.

Re JOHNSON, a Lunatic.

Practice—Allowance for expenses incurred for the personal accommodation of a lunatic wife.

Bacon supported a petition by the husband of the lunatic, who had a considerable separate estate. There were several residences, one at Brighton, and another in the country, and the husband, at the wife's particular request, had expended 6,000l. in purchasing and improving a residence at Spalding, in Lincolnshire. The petitioner sought to have that sum, or some part of it, repaid to him out of the wife's estate.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—You may take an order for inquiring whether the house was necessary for her residence, and the Master must state all the circumstances, particularly with reference to the house at Brighton.

Re —, a Lunatic.

Practice—Payment into Court by committee of estate with prejudice to his accounting—Form of order.

A petition having been presented by the committee of a lunatic's estate for leave to pay a sum of money into Court,

The LORD CHANCELLOR observed, of course that must be without prejudice to his liability to account, and a provision to that effect must be inserted in the order.

Re DYCE SOMBRE, a Lunatic.

Petition to supersede commission by lunatic abroad without coming within the jurisdiction—Suspending commission—Order for commission to examine lunatic at Dover, with protection to him from molestation by the committee of his person—Practice in lunacy.

Roll, Shadwell, and P. Banks supported a petition by Mr. Dyce Sombre, now staying at Boulogne, to supersede the commission of lunacy against him, and for a commission to examine the petitioner without compelling him to return to this country. The affidavits shewed him to be perfectly competent to manage his own affairs.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—When I before held the Great Seal, a case of this sort came before me, in which it was as clear as possible upon the affidavits that the lunatic had been restored to reason, but then I examined the party and found him quite insane.

Roll.—It would not be beneficial that he should be here during the proceedings. A commission of physicians might be appointed to examine him at Dover, and as the only ground against him formerly was his antipathy to particular persons, security might be given that he should not do any injury to such persons; there would then be no reason for his being subjected to any restraint.

Bethell and Calvert, for the committee of the person, objected that he ought to be examined by the same physicians who had been in the habit of attending him when his malady commenced.

Roll.—That examination might be easily arranged. The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Have you any evidence?

Roll.—There are affidavits by English and foreign physicians of eminence. The petition was presented in January last, and leave had been given by Lord Lyndhurst to amend it; the other side, therefore, had plenty of time to ascertain what is the actual state of Mr. Dyce Sombre's mind. The history of Mr. Dyce Sombre's life was stated as in the former petition, which has been reported in the LAW TIMES. The only ground on which he had been found lunatic consisted of a morbid jealousy which he entertained of his wife, and having been placed under the care of her family in charge of Mr. Grant, from whom he withdrew on the 9th of September, 1843, and on the 3rd had escaped to Paris. An application had been made to the French authorities to take possession of his person, but upon an investigation before the proper tribunal in Paris, he had been found to be sane. In the spring of 1844 a petition to supersede the commission was presented to Lord Lyndhurst, who objected to entertain it unless Mr. Dyce Sombre submitted to the jurisdiction. A minute was then drawn up between the counsel that the petitioner should not be restrained without the express direction of the Lord Chancellor. On that undertaking he came to this country; but was afterwards taken into custody, and was discharged after seeing the Lord Chancellor, and placed under surveillance. He was also seen by Drs. Bright and Southey. The case then made by the petitioner was, that he never had been a lunatic, and on that ground the commission was sought to be superseded. The present petition proceeded upon the ground that he had recovered from the peculiar delusions under which he had laboured. It was said that his mind was affected by the most absurd jealousy; the answer to which was that he came to this country with Asiatic ideas of the conduct of women. His marriage had been twice broken off because he insisted on his wife conforming to Asiatic customs. The other side then and still insisted that he was of wholly unsound mind. He then read the affidavit of Lord Combermere, who had known Mr. Dyce Sombre from his infancy, and spoke to his Asiatic education and habits of thought. The family of his wife did not avoid a system of irritation, and Mr. Dyce Sombre again withdrew from their control, and has since remained abroad. Leave had been given by the Lord Chancellor that he might reside in some place abroad without interference with his personal liberty, unless he should make himself amenable to the constituted authorities. The committee was to be at liberty to appoint a person, who should have the superintendence of his pecuniary affairs, and to remove such person, or accept his resignation and appoint another. John Warwick had been appointed, who rendered an account, half-yearly, of the circumstances of Mr. D. Sombre's conduct, and through whom an allowance of 5,000l. was paid, to be applied for his maintenance, who was not to pay the money to him.

Mr. Prinsep, who had been political secretary to Lord William Bentinck, as the friend of the petitioner, had received from him his bills and transmitted them to Coutts and Co. through whom the allowance was paid. Mr. Prinsep, by his affidavit, stated that the petitioner was quite capable of managing his own affairs; he was consulted about the payment of pensions in India, and generally about the management of his estate. There were other affidavits to prove that the particular delusions do not now exist.

They submitted that he might be examined by a commission of physicians, either at Dover or Boulogne, and, if at the former place, that there should be an order that no person should interfere with him until after he had been examined; then he would readily submit himself to the Lord Chancellor's orders. The present application was only for a modified order. Several medical men stated that at present there was nothing insane in his manner or conduct, and that he constantly talked upon what had before been deemed his insane points.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—How late do you bring down the medical testimony?

Roll.—The last affidavits were sworn on the 11th of July. They were made by English and foreign physicians residing in Paris and Brussels, and by the Hon. James Butler. They all proved him to be of sound mind. They referred to the case of Re Bridges, in 1841.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Perhaps the commission might be suspended; he appears to be quite competent to take care of his own person and property; the only danger, so far as there is any, seems to be to those few persons against whom he has a dislike, which might be provided for.

Roll.—That would be quite satisfactory. It was asked that a sum of money might be paid to him personally. The person appointed to watch over him had not followed him abroad. He was in the full capacity for the enjoyment of society abroad.

Banks cited several cases from medical works on insanity, bearing on the petition, and Oxendon v. Compton, 2 Ves. jun. 69, 261; Ex parte Holyland, 11 Ves. 10.

James Parker and Moore appeared for the next of kin.

Tinney and Lloyd for the committee of the estate.

Bethell and Calvert opposed the petition for the petitioner's wife, the committee of the person.—The former investigation had proceeded very much in the same manner, and the contest had cost the estate 4,880l. The Court would consider whether it would permit such an expense again to be incurred, and, at all events, ought to hold some one responsible for costs. Reasonable precaution ought also to be adopted, and the petitioner should be placed under some person's care whilst here. They read the affidavits made in answer to the former petition; then similar representations of the sanity of the petitioner were made.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—To what time do those affidavits relate?

Bethell.—June and July 1844.

Roll hoped that he would not be placed under a state of surveillance.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—That assumes that he is not in a sound state of mind; he appears to have been under extreme irritation on the ground of the delusions. In the case of Bridges, where the commission was suspended, I saw the person and was satisfied that course might be safely adopted.

Roll.—We only ask that physicians may be sent to Dover or Boulogne, and then the petitioner is prepared to submit to the jurisdiction.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Bearing in mind that ultimately I must see him myself, and the expense incurred in the former investigation, Doctors Southey and Bright, who formerly reported to the Lord Chancellor, will be directed to go and examine the petitioner. I think that the best order I can make is that the medical men should first see the petitioner, and then that he should come before me.

Roll.—In re Mitchell, which is not reported, where the alleged insanity consisted of a delusion as to the conduct of his children, the Lord Chancellor refused a commission, and Ex parte Turner was a somewhat similar case.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—He may go to Dover and stay there until such examinations as the physicians may think fit have been made; there is to be no interference with him there.

The following minute, as settled by the respective counsel, was afterwards read and approved by the Lord Chancellor:—

“The Lord Chancellor will ascertain whether Dr. Southey and Dr. Bright can attend at Dover, and at what time, and Mr. Dyce Sombre undertakes by his counsel that he will attend at that time and so long as those gentlemen think necessary for the purpose of examination. No interference with him by any person during that time. The Lord Chancellor will give such directions to the medical gentlemen as shall be necessary to bring out all the facts, material not only to the question of lunacy, but also as to the propriety of allowing him to enjoy the income and management of his property on any and what terms.”

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Tuesday, July 14, 1846.

STRANGE v. BRENNAN.

Practice—Solicitor's charges—Pleading—Demurrer—Maintenance—Misjoinder—Want of parties—Agreement void on grounds of general policy.

A. B. the defendant, procured letters of administration to three different deceased parties, viz. E. B., M. B., and H. B. to be granted her out of the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury, whereby she became the personal representative of the said three different parties.

Before the granting of the said letters to A. B. she applied to the plaintiff S. an attorney in Ireland, to employ solicitors in England, and to supply to them the letters of administration, on account of the difficulty of obtaining the requisite evidence, and on account of the large amount of duties payable in respect of the fund. To this the plaintiff S. consented, on having a commission of 10l. per cent. on the amount to be received, independently of the professional charges which he might pay out of pocket to the solicitors in London in respect to the proceedings to be taken in this country.

Prior to granting the above-mentioned letters of administration, the Prerogative Court required the defendant A. B. to find two sureties of 18,000l. for the due performance of her duties as administratrix. Upon her applying to the plaintiff S. for that purpose, he prevailed upon the plaintiff R. to join him in three several bonds as surety for A. B. to the said Prerogative Court to the above amount, whereupon the letters of administration were granted to her; she having agreed to indemnify them in respect to such suretyship.

In order to carry out the said intention, a memorandum of agreement was executed by the plaintiffs S. and R. and the defendant, dated October 1845, reciting, among other things, that the defendant had agreed to permit S. and R. to retain out of the funds which should happen to be received, for the space of six years, a sum sufficient to bear harmless and keep them indemnified from any action at law or other responsibility which they might incur; and that the plaintiff S. had incurred much expense and professional labour in the management of the said administration. The said A. B. “had undertaken to pay to the said S. as a bonus, exclusive of the law costs, the sum of 10l. per cent. on such sum as might be recovered out of the fund as aforesaid, and to carry out the agreement in perfect good faith, &c.”

To a bill filed for a specific performance of the agreement, and an injunction to restrain the transfer of the stock, the defendant demurred on the ground of maintenance, misjoinder, and want of parties. Held, that the agreement was void upon the ground of general policy, and that therefore the demurrer ought to be allowed.

The bill stated, that in pursuance of a decree under the 13th of November, 1807, in a cause of Ayres v. Butler, the sum of 2,000l. Bank Three per Cent. Annuities, bequeathed to her by the will of one Thomas Gaul therein named, was transferred into the name of the Accountant-General of this court in trust in the said cause to an account called “Mary Whitehead the Annuitant's Account,” the dividends wherein were paid to her until her death.

Mary Whitehead died in the month of January 1811, whereupon the said sum of 2,000l. Bank Three per Cent. Annuities became divisible, under the said decree, between Honora Butler and Mary Butler, or their legal representatives, in equal proportions.

Honora Butler died in February 1816, having first made her last will and testament, bearing date 29th January, 1816, whereby, among other bequests to different objects, she gave the sum of 200l. to her sister, Mary Butler; and the further sum of 200l. in case her brother, James Butler, could not be found, for the fulfilment of her said last will and testament; and she appointed her brother-in-law, Singwald Dugan, and her sister, Mary Butler, her executors.

Mary Butler departed this life about the 17th of June, 1821, having first duly made and published her last will and testament, dated 10th of May, 1821, and having given several legacies therein mentioned, she desired that her executors should be at liberty to withhold the payment of the legacies until they should have sufficient funds on hand out of her property for the payment of the same, and she gave the residue of her property, whether real or personal, with all benefit and advantage that might arise therefrom, unto her cousin, Rev. Edmond Brennan, and constituted him, together with Paul Carroll and Edmond Rice, executors thereof.

Rev. Edmond Brennan alone proved the will in the proper Ecclesiastical Court in Ireland. He died in June 1833; and by his will, dated 28th of May previous, appointed the Rev. John Baldwin his sole executor.

The said Edmond Brennan left the defendants, Margaret Brennan and Alicia Brennan, his only next of kin, him surviving.

John Baldwin having renounced probate of the will of the said Rev. E. Brennan, letters of administration, with the will annexed, were, about the 21st day of November, 1845, granted out of the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury to defendant, Margaret Brennan, who thereby became the sole legal personal representative of the said Edmond Brennan. Under the above-mentioned circumstances, the defendant, Margaret Brennan, becoming entitled to get in the residuary personal estate of the said Honora Butler and Mary Butler, letters of administration of the said Mary Butler, with the will annexed, were, on the 21st of November, 1845, granted to her out of the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and on the next day letters of administration, with the said will of Honora Butler annexed, were granted to her out of the same Court, and she thereby became the sole legal personal representative of Mary Butler and Honora Butler.

Before granting the defendants the letters of administration, and about the month of August 1844, the defendant, who had previously applied to several other solicitors in Waterford and elsewhere to act as her agent in procuring for her letters of administration, and the transfer to her of the said sum of 2,000l. Bank Annuities, but without success, made a similar application to the plaintiff, Thomas Fitzgerald Strange, an attorney in Ireland, but not in England, and for that purpose requested him to retain and employ solicitors in England, and to procure and supply to them the said letters of administration, on account of the difficulty of obtaining the requisite evidence, and on account of the large amount of duties payable in respect of the fund claimed, and also that there would be great difficulty in administering the said fund. That plaintiff Strange consented to undertake the said business, upon having a commission of 10l. per cent. on the amount to be recovered, exclusive of the law charges, which should be paid out of pocket by the plaintiff last named, to the solicitors in London, on account of the law proceedings which were to be taken in England, and otherwise, to which defendant consented; and the last-named plaintiff collected and procured the evidence of the facts necessary to establish the title of the said defendant.

That previously to granting the letters of administration, the Prerogative Court required the defendant to find two sureties of 18,000l. for the due performance by her of the duties of administratrix; but the defendant, not being able to procure such sureties, requested the plaintiff Strange to procure sureties for her, and offered to indemnify him in manner hereinafter mentioned; whereupon Strange procured the plaintiff, Joseph Michael Rivers, to join him in three several bonds as surety for the defendant to the said Prerogative Court, and plaintiffs accordingly executed the said three bonds to the said Prerogative Court, to the amount of 18,000l. as sureties for defendant's due performance of her duties as administratrix, and thereupon the letters of administration were granted to her.

That for the purpose of carrying out the said proposal, a memorandum of agreement was made and executed by the plaintiffs and the defendant, dated October 1845, reciting that it had become necessary that the said Margaret Brennan, in order to establish her claim as administratrix to certain moneys in the Bank of England, contingent on the death of Mary Webb, alias Whitehead, should take out three several administrations in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, in England, and also should prove her claim with the said three wills; and as such administratrix under the further and other will of Thomas Gaul, of Sawbridgeworth, who died in or about the month of March 1801, and which said will had been the subject of a Chancery suit; and it had also become necessary for the said Margaret Brennan, under the said several administrations, to find sureties to enter into bonds on behalf of her, the said Margaret Brennan, to the amount of 18,000l. for the due performance by her of the duties named therein, and she being unable to find or procure the same, had requested the said T. F. Strange to find and procure them for her; and in order to protect the said sureties from any loss or damage they might sustain by reason of the said bonds, and from having signed the same, she, the said Margaret Brennan, had consented and agreed to permit the said Thomas F. Strange and Joseph M. Rivers to retain and keep of the said funds, should the same happen to be recovered, and for the space of six years, a sum sufficient to bear harmless and keep indemnified the said sureties from any action at law, or other responsibilities which they might incur as aforesaid, the said sum to be so retained by the said T. F. Strange, Joseph M. Rivers, and Margaret Brennan, as trustees for the said Margaret Brennan, and whomsoever else and whatsoever person the same might be fairly and legally applicable to; and inasmuch as the said T. F. Strange had incurred much expense and professional labour in the management of the said administration, and had been obliged to advance and lay out on behalf of the said Margaret Brennan all the moneys requisite for the same, the said Margaret Brennan “had undertaken and agreed to pay to the said T. F. Strange, as a bonus or consideration, and exclusive of the law costs, the sum of 10l. per cent. on such sum or sums of money as might be actually recovered and realised out of the said fund as aforesaid; and she further agreed and undertook, for herself, her executors, &c. to carry out that agreement in perfect good faith and to do all other act or acts that might be necessary for carrying the same into effect. Dated at Waterford, October 1845, Margaret Brennan. Present, Alicia Brennan, Fras. S. Cheevers.”

In pursuance of an order of the Court, the said sum of 2,000l. Three per Cent. Annuities was transferred by the Accountant-General into the name of the defendant, in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and the same is now standing in her name on the said books. The bill further stated that this was done by the procurement of the plaintiff Strange, on the understanding that the said agreement was to be carried into effect, but that the defendant refused to carry the same into effect, or to pay the plaintiff Strange any thing by way of remuneration for his trouble and risk. The bill charged, among other things, that if the defendant, as the plaintiffs had good reason to expect, were to misapply the said Bank Annuities, they, as her sureties, would be liable, under the said bonds, to make good to the other persons interested in the said fund, the deficiency arising from such application; and that, therefore, they were entitled to have the said Bank Annuities, or a competent part thereof, secured for the purpose of indemnifying the plaintiffs against their liabilities under the said bonds. The bill, therefore, prayed for a specific performance of the agreement; and that a sufficient part of the 2,000l. Bank Annuities might be secured for the purpose of indemnifying the plaintiffs against the risk incurred by them as such sureties as aforesaid. And if the plaintiff Strange should not be allowed his commission of 10l. per cent. then that he might be declared to have a lien on the said Bank Annuities for the payment of his costs, and of a suitable remuneration for his trouble in the matters aforesaid; and for an injunction to restrain the transfer of the said sum of 2,000l. Bank Annuities.

To this bill the defendants demurred upon three grounds, viz. for want of equity, misjoinder, and want of parties.

Bethell, in support of the demurrer.—The agreement is, that the plaintiff Strange should find another surety besides himself, and he was to have 10l. per cent. upon the fund to be got in, beyond his professional charges. Upon the face of the bill, this is gross act of maintenance. The bill states that the defendant, not being able to procure sureties, applied to Strange. Then, in order to carry out the agreement, this extraordinary proceeding takes place—a contrary to the policy of law.

Bird, with him.—The first part of the demurrer as regards the 10l. per cent. which amounts to maintenance or champerty; in the second place, objection to the bill is on the ground of misjoinder. In case of Stanley v. Stanley, 7 Bingham, 369, is at precisely in point, because there was in that case agreement to divide the thing in dispute. So far as the agreement to pay the 10l. per cent. extends, it is not to be sustained. Then, as to the indemnity against the plaintiff's liability in respect of the administration bond, that is against any loss in respect of a mal administration of the estate. Independently of this, the legatees ought to be made parties; and as to Strange and Rivers, there is a misjoinder. The two considerations in the agreement extend to the whole bill; if we find no part of the agreement can be carried into effect, it is bad for the whole. There is a distinction between a debt merely void to the excess and one void for illegality; thus, where a transaction is void at law, as in the case of maintenance, it is void for the whole. But if the bill be capable of being supported in this respect, then there is a misjoinder of plaintiffs.

Cases: Wood v. Downes, 18 Ves.; Wait v. Jones, 6 Bing. N.S. 662; 3 Scott, 73; Cowley v. Cowley, 9 Sim.

Jas. Parker, and R. W. Kennion, for the bill.—This bill is filed for two objects; one is for the claim of 10l. per cent. and the other is in respect of the surety bond. The administration cannot be carried on without the sureties. Now, where so regular agreement as the present one exists, there is an equity. If the surety is about to have his surety destroyed, is it not right that he should come into court to enforce his indemnity to sustain it? Therefore, the first part of the agreement can be carried into effect. As to the second part, does it amount to maintenance or champerty? There is none; because this fund is not in litigation. It can no more be said to be in litigation because standing in the name of the Accountant-General, than when in any other cause it is standing in his name. The parties are dealing with a fund which is not at all in dispute. The cases quoted by the other side are clearly cases of maintenance. Then we come to the question of Mr. Strange being the solicitor. But viewing that circumstance in reference to the transaction, it supposes no other agreement than what the law would have given him, in a lien upon the fund. But if a solicitor takes an improper security, it does not follow that he should be entirely deprived of his costs; and as to misjoinder, if two parties have a claim against some fund, and file a bill in respect of such fund, a demurrer for misjoinder cannot be sustained.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I shall allow the demurrer. In the first place, the plaintiff, Mr. Strange, does not appear to be the solicitor in England, but in Ireland only. The mischief, however, is the same, whether it be found in either country. A lady consults her solicitor as to the fund, who says, "I will procure another solicitor to act in the affair, but you must pay me 10l. per cent. out of as much of the fund as may be realized, in addition to my professional charges in the business." The law, therefore, is as much applicable on the ground of general policy, whether Mr. Strange or any other person was the party implicated. Then the agreement cannot be sustained. (His Honour read the agreement.)

Demurrer allowed.

ROLLS COURT.

June 2 and 3.

MARTIN v. SEDGWICK.

Priority of incumbrances—Equitable interest—Assignment of policy—Notice.

By the deed of settlement of the Rock Life Assurance Company, every shareholder must insure his life to a certain amount, in proportion to the shares he holds. A B, who held shares to the amount he was entitled to do in respect of his assurance, bought shares in the name of C D, who was insured to the amount, and C D signed a memorandum acknowledging himself a trustee, but no notice of the transaction was given to the company, except the constructive notice arising from C D's own knowledge. Afterwards, C D mortgaged the shares to E F, holding himself out as the real owner, and formal notice of the transaction was served on the company by C D. C D became insolvent, and on a contest between A B and E F, the latter was held entitled to priority.

The Rock Assurance Company is a joint stock company, for effecting assurances for their common benefit, each shareholder having an interest in proportion to his shares; and by the deed of settlement it is requisite that each of the copartners should insure his own life, or that of a nominee, in 500l. for every 100l. shares he may hold. In 1822 Robert Buchanan Dunlop insured his life with the company for 500l. and held 100 shares of the joint stock in respect thereof. Being desirous of purchasing more shares without enlarging his assurance, he requested John Sedgwick, who was then insured to a considerable amount, to lend him his name. He did so, and 200 shares were purchased in the name of John Sedgwick, as trustee for Dunlop; and on the 6th of November, 1822, a memorandum of acknowledgment of the trust was drawn up and signed by Sedgwick, but no notice of the trust was given to the assurance office. So the matter stood till the 23rd of August, 1833, when John Sedgwick, representing himself to be the owner of 200 shares in the joint stock of the company, assigned the same to Mrs. Lucy Anne Sutherland, by way of mortgage, to secure to her the sum of 800l. advanced to him on loan, with a power of sale in default of payment at the time appointed. On the 26th of the same month John Sedgwick himself served the company with formal notice of the transaction, stating, however, that his shares should continue to stand in his name, notwithstanding the assignment, and he should continue to vote and act in respect of them as before. Subsequently Mrs. Sutherland made further advances to John Sedgwick, to the amount of 800l. and in 1834 she agreed to advance 500l. more, on having that sum and the 800l. properly secured. At this time John Sedgwick had standing in his name 400 shares in the Protector Fire Insurance Company, and had effected a policy on his own life in the Palladium Life Assurance Office for the sum of 1,200l.; he had also, on the 1st of March, 1834, obtained a lease of certain premises, with a view and under a covenant to build thereon certain cottages, &c. By indenture of the 17th of October, 1834, reciting the mortgage of 1833, and the transfer into Mrs. Sutherland's name of the shares in the Protector Office, &c. John Sedgwick mortgaged the Rock shares, the Protector shares, the policy for 1,200l. and the leasehold premises to Mrs. Sutherland, as a security for the 800l. originally advanced, the 800l. since advanced, and the 500l. then advanced, and the indenture contained a power of sale over all the property comprised in it; and Mrs. Sutherland also thereby agreed to advance Sedgwick 250l. more, so soon as he had expended 250l. on the leasehold premises, according to the provisions of his lease. On the same 17th of October, formal notice of this transaction was served on the Rock Assurance Office. Afterwards, by arrangement with Mrs. Sutherland, the Protector shares were sold, and 560l. part of the proceeds, was paid to her, her debt being thereby reduced to 1,540l.; and Sedgwick having expended 250l. on the leasehold, she advanced to him the further sum of 250l. and by indenture of the 25th of November, 1835, this sum was charged on the mortgaged property, the whole debt being thereby increased to 1,790l. Mrs. Sutherland subsequently, in order to make the debt the even sum of 1,800l. advanced 10l. which was charged on the same property, by indenture of the 20th of May, 1841. In the same month of May, Mrs. Sutherland, in consideration of the additional security of certain banker's notes for 300l. allowed Sedgwick to sell the leaseholds, but without prejudice to her right to hold all the other property as a security for her debt, and the notes having been subsequently paid to her, the debt was thereby reduced to 1,500l. the sum now due. Notice of the deeds of 1835 and 1841 was not served on the Rock office. In January 1844 Mrs. Sutherland died, having appointed the plaintiffs, Charles Martin and John Townshend, her executors, who having proved her will, gave notice of their claim to the Rock Office. But John Sedgwick having become insolvent, his cestui que trust claimed to be beneficially entitled to the shares, and the Assurance Office was unable to act. It now appeared that John Sedgwick had received the dividends on the Rock shares, and accounted for them to R. B. Dunlop, down to 1837, in the beginning of which year the latter died, having appointed Thomas Loud Sedgwick (father of John Sedgwick), and Robert Buchanan Dunlop, the younger, executor of his will. Soon after an arrangement was made whereby the Rev. Charles Dunlop was to take the 200 shares in question as his share of his father's property; and the memorandum of trust of 1822 was delivered to him, and John Sedgwick at the same time gave him a promissory note for a sum a little more than the price of the shares. It was alleged, on the one hand, that this was an assignment of the shares for valuable consideration, and on the other that it was only a bungling way of making the beneficial interest available to John Sedgwick if he should require it, but that the trust continued. Subsequently, however, Thomas Loud Sedgwick, as was alleged, thinking it incumbent on him as executor to have the shares actually transferred into Charles Dunlop's name, and John Sedgwick being anxious, in order to keep up his influence with the office, that the shares should remain in his name, it was agreed that T. L. Sedgwick should, out of his own moneys, purchase 200 shares in Charles Dunlop's name, and, in consideration thereof, John Sedgwick should hold the shares in his name on trust for his father. This arrangement was carried into effect in April 1837, and the dividends on the shares were then received by John Sedgwick, and paid over to his father, except on one occasion, when the father received them in person by an order from his son. It further appeared that at the time of this arrangement Charles Dunlop delivered to T. L. Sedgwick the memorandum of trust, and indorsed over to him the promissory note.

The executors of Mrs. Sutherland filed their bill for the purpose of obtaining payment of the 1,500l. due to their testatrix's estate and the benefit of the securities in priority to the claim of T. L. Sedgwick. On the other hand T. L. Sedgwick, by his answer, insisted that the company had notice of his claim long before that of Mrs. Sutherland, John Sedgwick being a co-partner in the Rock Office, and that she had got and could get no equitable interest but by an actual transfer, nor had she, by her notice to the company, acquired any priority over Robert Buchanan Dunlop, Charles Dunlop, or the defendant himself, and he claimed as a purchaser for valuable consideration. He also claimed priority over one Edmund Maude, a judgment creditor, who, having recovered judgment in an action against John Sedgwick, had given notice thereof to the office in January 1844, and on the 25th of March following had obtained a judge's order to establish a lien on the shares in question.

The cause now came on to be heard.

Turner and Stevens, for the plaintiffs, relied upon the necessity of giving actual notice to the office to guard against subsequent incumbrances, Duncan v. Chamberlayne, 11 Sim. 123, being since overruled by the same judge who decided it, in the case of Thompson v. Spiers, 13 Sim. 466. They cited Dearle v. Hall, 3 Russ. 1; Elty v. Bridges, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 486; Foster v. Blackstone, 1 Myl. & K. 297; Greening v. Beckford, 5 Sim. 195.

Teed and Hargrave, for Maude.

Gaselee, for the Rock Assurance Office.

Kindersley and Heathfield, for the defendant, T. L. Sedgwick, contended that he was entitled to recover on three grounds; first, that the shares assigned were not specifically stated by number or otherwise; second, that the effect of the original notice was done away with by the subsequent dealings with the mortgaged property of which no notice was given; and, third, that even if Mrs. Sutherland had a prior claim, he was entitled to a lien on the surplus after satisfaction of her claim. They cited Pinkett v. Wright, 2 Hare, 120; Foster v. Cockerell, 9 B. & C. N. S. 332; Kennedy v. Green, 3 Myl. & K. 699.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—This is one of those unhappy cases in which one of two innocent parties must bear the loss arising from the fraud of a third party. In the view which I take of this case I may assume that Thomas Loud Sedgwick has made out the claim stated in his answer, though I am not satisfied that it is so; and if the opinion I have formed had depended at all upon that fact I would have directed an inquiry; but that is not necessary now. The first question made here is whether, as by the constitution of the company a shareholder is a partner, it must be assumed that at the time when the transfer was made into the name of John Sedgwick the whole company had such distinct notice of the creation of a trust that there is the same advantage from it as if a regular formal notice in the usual manner had been given; and I am clearly of opinion that they had not. If that were so, it would put an end to the important doctrine relating to notice of the assignment of equitable interests, whereby such assignment with notice constitutes an equity preferable to that by a previous assignment without notice. Now there was nothing to hinder R. B. Dunlop from giving notice to the company, which would have perfectly secured to him the shares standing in the name of John Sedgwick, and would have prevented future dealings with them. But he did not do so, and the result was that 200 shares remained standing in the name of John Sedgwick in the books of the company unfettered by notice, and he was left at liberty, without the possibility of any other party guarding against his improper acts, to dispose of the shares in the manner the rules of the company allowed, and so be continued during the whole life of R. B. Dunlop. It is alleged, and I shall assume, that the dividends were paid by John Sedgwick to R. B. Dunlop till the trust in favour of T. L. Sedgwick. Now having these shares standing in his name unfettered, and being apparent owner of them, John Sedgwick applies to Mrs. Sutherland for a loan. [Here his lordship stated the transactions between the parties down to the death of Mrs. Sutherland.] It had been ingeniously argued that there was no specification in the assignment to Mrs. S. by number or otherwise, of the particular shares assigned, and that therefore the deed did not pass the shares in question, which were trust shares; but I cannot assent to that argument, for John Sedgwick had those shares and no others standing in his name, and he assigned absolutely "the shares of me, John Sedgwick," though if the whole circumstances relating to them had been known, it would have appeared that he held them subject to an equity for another person. Part of the property subject to the security was realized, and the proceeds applied in reduction of the debt due to Mrs. Sutherland. She had a right to have part of her pledge realized, and she did not by so doing in any degree exonerate the property not disposed of, though it must be admitted that if then she had had notice of Dunlop's claim, the case would have been different, and she could not have done so perhaps without rendering herself liable to account for what had been done with a view to see whether other parties might not, consistently with full satisfaction of her claim, have a right to marshal assets so as to diminish the loss arising from the fraud. But she had at the time no notice of Dunlop's claim, and therefore there was nothing to fetter the apparent right of John Sedgwick, and the real right of Mrs. Sutherland to deal with the property as they might think fit. Certain sums were realized, and the debt was reduced to 1,500l. Different securities were executed in the course of these transactions, of which no notice was given, but the result was to diminish the sum of all demands to 1,500l. Supposing T. L. Sedgwick's title to the benefit of the trust created to be made out, he has a right to have an account of all moneys paid to or received by Mrs. Sutherland, and he may have a right, consistently with her right, to be fully paid, to have the benefit of standing in her place. But I am of opinion that the plaintiffs have a clear right to an amount of what is due on their securities, and to be paid in priority to T. L. Sedgwick. Supposing the right of the latter to be fully established, other questions may arise between him and his co-defendant, Maude. I cannot in this suit determine anything between them, but I do not mean to preclude the taking an account of what the mortgaged property consisted of, with a view to T. L. Sedgwick getting what he can out of it after an account and payment of what is due to the plaintiffs; and consistently with that he may have the inquiry if he likes. There must be an inquiry as to what is due to the plaintiff, and an account taken, and a declaration, that they are to have the shares converted into money.

WHITCHER v. PENLEY.

Will—Construction—"Or" construed "and"—Absolute interest or substitution.

A testator gave the residue of his property "to be divided between his three sons and his daughter, or their children," and he directed "his daughter's to be kept in the hands of his sons for her or her children's sole use, free from the control of her husband."—Held, that the daughter took absolutely.

The testator in the cause by his will made several bequests, and, among others, he gave to his daughter, Mary Anne Astor, certain leasehold premises for life to her sole and separate use, free from the control of her husband, and, after her decease, then to her children. And as to the residue of his estate, the testator disposed of it thus:—"The overplus I leave to be divided between my three sons and my daughter, or their children; and I direct that my daughter's shall be kept in the hands of my sons for her or her children's sole use, free from the control of her husband." An administration suit being instituted, a decree was made therein, and a reference to the Master was directed in the usual way. The Master made his report in February last, and the only question remaining for the consideration of the Court was, whether the testator's daughter took an absolute interest or only an estate for life in her share of the residue.

Turner (with him Rogers), for the plaintiffs, contended that the daughter took only an estate for life, with remainder to the children, by substitution. One bequest, viz. that of the leaseholds, was given to her expressly for life, with remainder to her children; but the other is differently worded. By construing "or" to mean "and," however, the difficulty is removed; and for such construction there are numerous authorities. It must be admitted, at the same time, that the direction to keep the bequest in the sons' hands is inconsistent with an absolute interest. They cited Newman v. Nightingale, 1 Cox, 341; Vaughan v. Marquis of Headfort, 10 Sim. 639.

Kindersley and Bird, for the defendants, insisted that the daughter took an absolute interest; and cited Jones v. Yorin, 6 Sim. 255; Giftings v. M'Dermott, 2 My. & K. 69; Montagu v. Nucella, 1 Russ. 165; Salsbury v. Petty, 3 Hare, 86.

Berry and Babington, for other parties. Turner in reply.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—It is difficult to spell out the intention of a testator in cases of this kind. The argument has been pressed upon me that I must construe "or" to mean "and," and that I should thus get over the difficulty, and give effect to all the words of the will; but there is an obstacle to my doing this, and that is, I must be satisfied that there is something contemplated by the will which requires me to make such change. In Giftings v. M'Dermott the Court was clearly of opinion that the testator did contemplate substitution of the children, in place of their parents, at the death of the latter. In this case the testator makes a specific bequest to his daughter, and, in distinct words, gives it to her for life, to her separate use, free from the control of her husband, and afterwards to her children. Then, as to the residue, he says:—"the overplus I leave to be divided among my three sons and daughter, or their children, my daughter's share to be kept in the hands of my sons, for her and her children's sole use." If the daughter was to have it, it was to be for her separate use; and if the children were to have it, still protection was wanted, and therefore it was to be kept in the hands of his sons. Freedom to the daughter from her husband's control was what was wanted, though the testator might also wish to protect the children. But to induce me to convert "or" into "and," I must be satisfied that something was intended to be given which would not take effect unless such change were made; and I am not satisfied here that this is so. I think, therefore, the testator's daughter took an absolute interest in her share of the residue.

ANSTET v. COTTON.

Will—Construction—Legacy—Legacy duty.

A testatrix by her will bequeathed to trustees all her personal estate and effects, &c. on trust to sell and pay debts, &c. and out of the residue to set apart or appropriate the sums of 40,000*l.* and 6,000*l.* or purchase stock to that amount, on trust for persons therein mentioned; and then she gave legacies to several persons, and directed that all such several legacies, as well as any thereafter given, should be paid immediately after her decease, free from legacy duty; and the residue she disposed of on certain trusts:—Held, that the 40,000*l.* and 6,000*l.* were legacies to be paid free from legacy duty.

Miss H. A. Cotton, of Montagu-place, Marylebone, by her will bequeathed her leasehold house in Montagu-square, furniture, &c. and personal estate and effects, to Charles B. Cotton and George L. Curtis, on trust to sell (except the leasehold house, specifically bequeathed) and pay debts, funeral, &c. and out of the residue to set apart or appropriate two several sums of 40,000*l.* and 6,000*l.* or purchase stock to those amounts respectively, on certain trusts for Mrs. Cotton and Mrs. Anstet respectively as therein mentioned. She then gave and bequeathed to the several persons mentioned in her will "the following legacies," and directed "that all such several legacies, as well as any thereafter given, should be paid immediately after her decease, free from legacy duty;" and then the testatrix gave the residue on certain trusts. A question arose after the death of the testatrix whether the 40,000*l.* and the 6,000*l.* were to be considered legacies, and to be paid free from legacy duty; and Messrs. Cotton and Curtis, the executors, conceiving it to be unsafe to act without the sanction of the Court, this suit was instituted, and the cause now came on to be heard as a short cause.

Turner, for the plaintiff, contended that the two sums in question were to be paid free from legacy duty.

C. P. Cooper, contra, insisted that "legacies" did not include the two sums in question, for they were to be set apart or appropriated out of the residue, that is the residue after payment of debts and legacies. In the first place debts, funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies, are to be paid; and then comes the disposition of the residue, and out of it are to be appropriated those two sums. Then the bequest of the "several legacies following" is contained in a distinct paragraph, unconnected with any thing preceding, and she thereby directs "such several legacies" to be paid free from legacy duty. Why did she not say all legacies in the will, instead of "such several legacies?" The word "legacies," therefore, is used in a less extended sense than is usual.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—It is quite evident that a bequest of a sum of stock to be purchased is as much a legacy as any other bequest, and the only question in this case is, whether the two sums are exempt from the legacy duty; and that depends on the construction of the will. The testatrix, after giving directions as to the sale of her personal estate and effects, sets about disposing of the proceeds of the sale. She had in view the payment of debts and legacies, and the disposition of the residue, and her executors were to pay debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and all legacies thereafter bequeathed; and they were to hold the leaseholds for the purposes expressed. First, then, she appropriates the two sums of stock, and then gives the several legacies following, and directs all such legacies (not pecuniary legacies) to be paid free from legacy duty. Then comes the residue; what is it? It is what remains after the appropriation of the stock and the payment of the legacies; and there is no way of avoiding the construction that the appropriation of the stock constitutes a legacy, and that it is to be free from legacy duty.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Thursday, July 2.

WILKINSON v. GARRETT.

Will—Construction—Parties.

A testator gave real and personal estate to trustees upon trust, out of the annual proceeds to pay to his wife for her life an annuity of 400*l.* and subject to such annuity upon trust, as to the whole of his said real and personal estate, for his son A B, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, when he should attain the age of twenty-five years; and in case he should die after the age of twenty-one years, but before the age of twenty-five years, then upon trust for such persons as A B should by will or deed appoint; but in case A B should not make any such appointment, or should die either before or after attaining twenty-one, and before attaining twenty-five, without leaving lawful issue, then upon trust for the testator's own heirs, executors, or administrators. At the time of the testator's death A B was his only son, heir-at-law, customary heir, and sole next of kin. Held, that the persons who would, if A B had not been living, have been the heirs and next of kin of the testator at the time of his death, were not entitled under the will, and were not necessary parties to a suit for the administration of the testator's estate.

Frederic Wilkinson, late of Newcastle-under-Lyme, gentleman, by his will dated the 8th of July, 1845, after making certain specific and pecuniary bequests, proceeded as follows:—"I give, devise, and bequeath all my real estate, of what nature or kind soever, and whether freehold or copyhold, and also all the residue of my personal estate, of what nature or kind soever, unto Spencer Thomas Garrett and Arthur Henry Welch, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, according to the nature thereof respectively, upon trust, out of the rents and profits of my said real estate, and the interest, dividends, and proceeds of my personal estate, to pay to my dear wife, Georgiana Wilkinson, yearly, during the term of her natural life, the sum of 400*l.* by quarterly payments, on the four most usual quarterly days of payment in each year, the first to be made on that next following my decease, for which her receipt alone shall be a sufficient discharge; and subject to such annuity upon trust as to the whole of my said real and personal estate, for my son, Frederic Sparrow Wilkinson, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, according to the nature thereof respectively, as and when he shall attain the age of twenty-five years; and in case my said son shall die after the age of twenty-one years, but before the age of twenty-five years, then upon trust, as to such real and personal estate, for such person or persons, and in such manner as my said son shall, by his last will or by any deed duly executed, give, devise, limit, or appoint the same; but in case my said son shall not make any such appointment, or shall die either before or after attaining the age of twenty-one, and before attaining the age of twenty-five, without leaving lawful issue, then upon trust, as to my said real and personal estate, for my own heirs, executors, or administrators, according to the nature thereof respectively;" and he appointed the said Spencer Thomas Garrett and A. H. Welch executors.

The testator died on the 8th of July, 1845, leaving the said F. S. Wilkinson, his only child, heir-at-law, customary heir, and sole next of kin. At the time of the testator's death, Suzannah Wilkinson, his mother; Thomas Sparrow Wilkinson, his brother; and Mary Stanier, his sister, were, exclusive of F. S. Wilkinson, the next of kin; and the said T. S. Wilkinson was, exclusive of the rest, the heir-at-law and customary heir of the testator. This was a suit for the administration of the testator's estate, and the said T. S. Wilkinson, S. Wilkinson, and Mary Stanier and her husband, were made parties, as claiming an interest; and the question now argued was, whether, upon the construction of the will, it was necessary that they should be retained as parties.

Russell and Amphlett, for the plaintiff, cited Uryhart v. Uryhart, 13 Sim. 613; Skight v. Bodham (before the Master of the Rolls, not reported).

Wigram and Pitman, for T. S. Wilkinson, S. Wilkinson, and Mary Stanier, cited Holloway v. Holloway, 5 Ves. 399; Jones v. Colbeck, 8 Ves. 38; Miller v. Eaton, Coop. 272; *Bird v. THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I think that there is not sufficient inclination in favour of any other persons than those who would be entitled to the property at the time of the death of the testator to justify the Court in acting on the supposition of the testator having had any meaning in favour of any such other class of persons. The testator had only one child, and no other issue at the date of his will, but possibly this son might have died in his lifetime, leaving children, and the testator might have had various other children living at his death. He might also have had an intention in favour of his widow, which would be disappointed by constraining the words to refer to the death of the son. Some stress was laid, in the course of the argument, on the words "my own heirs," &c. The testator, being a legal gentleman, might have had in view the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 106, s. 5, by which it is enacted that when any land shall have been devised to the heir or the person who shall be the heir of such testator, such heir shall be considered to have acquired the land as a devise, and not by descent, and to have intended to exclude the heir on the maternal side from the succession. Whether he would have done so or not, I do not say. I think it would not be safe to say that any other persons were intended to be benefited but the son and widow.

The admissions by the parties as to the state of the testator's family at the time of his death were directed to be inserted in the decree, and the bill was directed to be dismissed against T. S. Wilkinson, S. Wilkinson, and F. Stanier and Mary his wife, and the usual accounts were directed to be taken.

Ex parte BARTLETT. Re 2 & 3 VICT. c. 74. Custody of Infants Act—Access by the parents to their infant children—Costs.

Where the wife, in consequence of an act of violence, separated from her husband, the Court, under the circumstances of the case, gave to her the custody of her daughter, who was of the age of between one and two years, but refused to give her the custody of her son, who was five years of age, although access to that son, and her children who were above the age of seven years, was allowed to her.

Mode of providing for access to infants by their parents who were living separate.

Whether the Court has jurisdiction under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 74, to give costs upon a petition by a mother for the custody of, or access to, her infant children, quære?

This was a petition presented by Louisa Bartlett, wife of the Rev. Josiah Bartlett, of Broadwood, near Leominster, and it prayed that the said Josiah Bartlett might be ordered to deliver Stephen Bartlett and Emily Louisa Bartlett (two of the children of the said Josiah Bartlett and Louisa his wife) to the petitioner, to remain in her custody until they should respectively attain the age of seven years, subject to such regulations as the Court should deem convenient and just; and that the said Josiah Bartlett should also be ordered to permit the petitioner to have access to the other four children of the said Josiah Bartlett and Louisa his wife, at such times, and subject to such regulations as the Court should deem convenient and just; and that the said Josiah Bartlett should be ordered to pay the costs of the application and consequent thereon. It appeared that the petitioner and the said Josiah Bartlett were married on the 7th of July, 1831, and that there were six children of the marriage, two of whom were under the age of seven years, viz. the said Stephen Bartlett, who was born on the 25th of August, 1841, and the said Emily Louisa Bartlett, who was born on the 28th of November, 1844. Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett having separated in consequence of unfortunate differences between them, this petition was presented. Many affidavits were filed on both sides, and from them it appeared that an act of violence had been committed by the husband upon the wife, which was not denied.

Swanston and Sheffield, for the petition.

Wigram and Shebbear, for the respondent, contended that as the wife had voluntarily left her husband upon grounds which would have been insufficient as a defence in the Ecclesiastical Court to a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights, she was not entitled to that which was asked by this petition.

The following cases were cited:—Need v. Need, 4 Hag. 263; Barlee v. Barlee, 1 Addams, 301; and Dysart v. Dysart, 1 Robertson, 106.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that this was a case in which the husband and wife were living apart from each other, the husband appearing to wish, and the wife objecting to, a re-union. No imputation was charged upon her, beyond her having without sufficient cause, as her husband said, but with sufficient cause as she herself asserted, separated herself from him. That she was clearly or not clearly legally justified in living apart from him, it would be very imprudent for his Honour upon that occasion to say. But whether she was justified or not, it might safely be stated that she was not without excuse or apology. The statute in question did not as a condition of the interference of the Court require that the wife should have obtained, or should be entitled to obtain, a divorce a mensâ et thoro from her husband. He apprehended the existence of cases, in which it might be right for the Court to interfere without a divorce, must be considered as possible. He was of opinion that in the present case the wife ought to have the custody of the youngest daughter until the age of seven years, or further order, and access under proper regulations to the other children—the mother undertaking for the proper care, maintenance, and education of the child, and that she should not be removed without the leave of the Court. The husband should be allowed access to the child at convenient seasons, and in such a manner as might be fixed upon, and the wife should also be allowed access to the children who remained with the father, as might be fixed upon.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, on a subsequent day, inquired whether Mr. Bartlett was willing to allow the petitioner to have the custody of the youngest boy, upon the petitioner's two brothers and herself undertaking for the proper care of the child.

Wigram, for Mr. Bartlett, stated that it was considered to be more for the benefit of the child that he should remain with the father.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that in his opinion it would have been more for the benefit of the child and of Mr. Bartlett himself, and much to that gentleman's credit, if he had conceded the point. As he had not done so, the Court did not feel it to be judicially correct to remove that child from his custody.

The following order was then made:—Mr. T. Boulton, Mr. P. Boulton, and Mrs. Bartlett undertaking to take proper care of, and provide in a proper manner for the education and maintenance of Emily Louisa Bartlett, it is ordered that Mr. Bartlett do at six o'clock this evening deliver her to Mr. T. Boulton, he undertaking forthwith to deliver her safely to her mother, and let the child remain in that lady's custody until she attains the age of seven years, or during such shorter time as the Court may direct. The infant must not be removed from Clapton (where the petitioner was residing) without leave of the Court, except for occasional visits for change of air and for health to the coasts of England, or to any place in the country, not exceeding 120 miles from London, and on every change of residence notice by letter, to be sent by post, to be given to the father Mr. Bartlett, or some member of his family, deputed by him to have access to the child, once in every six weeks, such interviews not to exceed two hours in duration, and to take place between the hours of ten in the forenoon and four in the afternoon, at the house of Mrs. Bartlett the elder, the mother of Mr. Bartlett, if she consents; that the child be sent there in the care of some responsible person, to be appointed by the mother, who shall bring the child back to the mother, Mr. Bartlett undertaking not to interfere with, or oppose, or obstruct its return: but in case Mrs. Bartlett the elder shall not consent to the interview taking place at her house, then Mr. Bartlett is to have access to the infant at the house where his wife may be then residing, and there in the presence of some responsible person, to be appointed as before mentioned. Mrs. Bartlett is to have access to the other five children once in every six weeks, such interviews not to exceed two hours in duration, and to take place between the hours of ten in the forenoon and four in the afternoon, and to take place (so long as the five children shall reside at, or within two miles of, Leominster) within two miles of that town or its suburbs, at some respectable place to be appointed from time to time by Mrs. Bartlett, at or within two miles of Leominster, and if resident elsewhere, except at or within one mile of Clapton, then to take place at some respectable house at or within one mile of the place where they are resident, to be appointed by the petitioner; but if resident or visiting at or within one mile of Clapton, then the five children to be brought to the then residence of their mother, under the care of some responsible person, to be appointed by Mr. Bartlett, such person to bring them back to their father; and Mr. Bartlett not to be present at any of the interviews, or to molest or annoy his wife upon any of those occasions. In case of the illness of the youngest child Emily Louisa Bartlett, notice to be given by letter, to be sent by post, to Mr. Bartlett, and if he shall be dissatisfied with the medical attendance, then he is to be at liberty to apply to the Court: the infant to be brought up as a Member of the Church of England: reserve the question whether the Court has jurisdiction, under the Act of Parliament, to give costs, and if it has, reserve the question whether, in this case, the Court ought to give them.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Friday, June 12.
WEISS v. LUMLEY.

Setting aside interlocutory judgment—Issuable pleas—Breach of agreement.

In a declaration upon an agreement, whereby the plaintiff agreed that his wife and her thirty-three pupils should dance at a certain theatre at certain times, and the defendant agreed to pay a certain salary by instalments on fixed days of payment, the breach was, that the defendant would not, though requested, suffer the wife and her pupils to dance at the said theatre according to the agreement; and that although the time for payment of three of the instalments had elapsed, the defendant would not, when they became due, pay the same or any part thereof. Plea, that the thirty-three pupils engaged by the defendant were certain pupils who had been trained together, and had acquired great celebrity at the said theatre in a former year, as well as elsewhere; that eight leading pupils of those thirty-three were absent abroad, and that the plaintiff had failed to procure the attendance of all the same thirty-three pupils. Held, an issuable plea.

The defendant also pleaded that the said instalments did not, nor did either of them or any part thereof, become or be due or payable modo et formâ. Held, not an issuable plea.

Assumpsit. The declaration stated that whereas heretofore, to wit, on the 31st day of January, in the year of our Lord 1845, by a certain agreement in writing then made in parts beyond the seas, to wit, at Paris, in the Kingdom of France, between the defendant of the one part, and the plaintiff by Josephine his wife and agent in that behalf of the other part, it was agreed as follows, that is to say, that the said Josephine Weiss should arrive in London on the 25th day of February then next, and should cause her thirty-three pupils to dance, with her costumes and music, at the Queen's Theatre or any other room in London, from the 28th day of February then next to the 3rd day of April following inclusive, three dances each evening; that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff, as salary for that period, the sum of 30,000 French francs, to be paid in equal instalments of 5,000 francs, namely, on the 3rd, 18th, 23rd, and 29th day of March, and 1st day of April then next; and that the sixth sum of 5,000 francs should be paid to the plaintiff then in Paris eight days before the departure of the said Josephine Weiss for London; and the defendant thereby reserved to himself expressly the right of renewing the then engagement for a second month, namely, from the 4th day of April then next to the 6th day of May then next; and even for a third month on the same conditions; but that he, the defendant, would nevertheless hold himself bound to make declaration of the same to the said Josephine Weiss before the 25th day of March then next. And the defendant further thereby reserved to himself the right of renewing the then engagement on the same conditions for the season of the year 1846, he, the defendant, thereby holding himself equally bound to make declaration thereof to the said Josephine Weiss before the 3rd day of April then next; and that in the interval the said Josephine Weiss should not be at liberty to allow her pupils to dance at any other theatre in England; that the company of the said Josephine Weiss should travel and dance in the interior of England during the continuance of the then engagement; only the defendant bound himself to pay, besides the salary agreed on, to the said Josephine Weiss, the expenses of travelling and lodging for all her company, and for the whole time of her travelling and absence from London; that the plaintiff should give a benefit in the name of the children, and that the receipts thereof, except presents, should belong to the defendant. And it was thereby also agreed, that the pupils of the said Josephine Weiss, during the continuance of the said contract, should not dance at any other theatre, or place whatever, without the consent of the defendant. And whereas afterwards, to wit, on the 13th day of June, 1845, by a certain other agreement then made within the jurisdiction of this court, to wit, at London, between the defendant and the plaintiff, by the said Josephine, his wife and agent in that behalf, it was agreed by and between the said parties as follows, that is to say, that the engagement between the aforesaid parties, as aforesaid, was thereby renewed for the then present year, for one month, from the 10th day of June to the 10th day of July, in the year of our Lord 1845. That the price for the said month should be 20,000 francs instead of 30,000 francs, that the said Josephine Weiss had received till that time. That the said 20,000 francs should be paid to the said Josephine Weiss in four instalments, on the 13th day of June, the 21st day of June, the 28th day of June, and the 7th day of July, last past. That the aforesaid first-mentioned agreement should remain in full vigour for the then next year; but that the said Josephine Weiss should be at liberty to accept in the interval any engagement that she liked in the provincial towns of England, but not in London. That if the said Josephine Weiss should inform the defendant, any time before the 1st day of December, in the year of our Lord 1845, that she could not come during the year 1846 to London, the defendant thereby agreed to release her from her agreement. That the conditions for the year 1846 should be the same as in the contract first above mentioned, save that the said Josephine Weiss should be at liberty to travel, and let her pupils dance in all the cities of England except London; and that the engagement for the said year 1846 should be and was thereby fixed for two months, that is to say, from the 28th of February to the 4th of May, at 30,000 francs each month. And thereupon afterwards, to wit, on the said 13th day of June, 1845, in consideration of the premises, and that the plaintiff then promised the defendant to perform and fulfil all things in the said last-mentioned agreement contained on his part to be performed and fulfilled, the defendant then promised the plaintiff to perform and fulfil all things therein contained on his part to be performed and fulfilled. And the plaintiff further says that, confiding in the said agreement, he caused the said Josephine, his said wife, to, and the said Josephine did, arrive in London with her thirty-three pupils on the 25th day of February last, and that although the said Josephine was then, and from thenceforth until the commencement of this suit has been, ready and willing to cause her thirty-three pupils, and the said thirty-three pupils were then, and from thenceforth during all the time aforesaid, have been ready and willing to dance with the costumes and music of the said Josephine, three dances each evening, from the 28th February last inclusive, at the Queen's Theatre, or any other room in London or elsewhere, according to the tenor and effect, true intent and meaning, of the said agreement; of all which the defendant, during all the time aforesaid, had notice; and although the plaintiff has always been ready and willing to perform and fulfil all other things in the said agreement contained on his part to be performed and fulfilled, yet the defendant did not nor would, although he was after the arrival of the said Josephine with her pupils in London as aforesaid, to wit, on the said 25th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1846, requested so to do, suffer or permit the said pupils or the said Josephine, to dance at the said theatre, or at any other room in London or elsewhere, during all the time aforesaid; but on the contrary thereof the defendant then, and during all such time as aforesaid, wrongfully refused, and still refuses, so to do. And the plaintiff further says, that although the time for payment, according to the said last-mentioned agreement, of divers, to wit, three of the said instalments of 5,000 francs each, had elapsed before the com-commencement of this suit, yet the defendant did not nor would, when the same respectively became due and payable according to the tenor and effect, true intent and meaning, of the said agreement, pay the same, or either of them, or any part thereof, although he was then by the plaintiff requested so to do, but, on the contrary thereof, the defendant wrongfully refused so to do, and the same and each of them and every part thereof now remains wholly due and unpaid to the plaintiff. And the plaintiff further says, that the said sum of 5,000 francs, being the amount of each of the said instalments, was, at the time of making the said agreement, and at the time the said instalments respectively became due and payable, and still is, of great value, to wit, the value of 700l. of lawful money of Great Britain. To the plaintiff's damage of 1,000l. &c.

The declaration was dated on the 9th of April, and on the 2nd of May the defendant, being under terms to plead issuably, obtained leave to plead several matters.

Pleas.—1st. Non Assumpsit.

2nd. And for a further plea in this behalf, the defendant says that the thirty-three pupils of the said Josephine Weiss, before and at the time of the making the agreement in the declaration first mentioned, for a long space of time before then elapsed, to wit, three years, had been trained, organized, and perfected by and under the said Josephine Weiss, to dance, with costumes and music, certain peculiar dances in groupings and evolutions, and which groupings and evolutions were led in the said dances by certain, amongst others, to wit, eight of the principal and leading pupils, being the most skilful and expert of the said thirty-three pupils, and the remainder whereof, being subordinate pupils, moved and danced in accordance with, and under the said leading and principal pupils. And the said thirty-three pupils, by reason of their efficient discipline, and long matured exercise, practice, and perfecting in dancing the said certain groupings and evolutions before, and at the time of the making of the agreement in the declaration first mentioned, had, in parts beyond the seas, to wit, at the Académie Royale de Musique, at Paris, in the kingdom of France, and in other parts, to wit, in Germany, attained to celebrity, public approbation and applause; and without the presence and aid of the said principal and leading pupils, the subordinate pupils were and are inefficient to dance the said dances in groupings and evolutions as aforesaid. And that by reason and in consideration of the said premises, he, the defendant, entered into said agreement in the said declaration first mentioned, for the engagement and hire of the said thirty-three pupils to dance at the Queen's Theatre as aforesaid, he, the defendant, paying to the plaintiff very large salaries and great remuneration for the same. And the defendant says, that under and by virtue of the said agreement, the same thirty-three pupils danced and performed their said peculiar dances at the said Queen's Theatre in and during the season or time that the same was open for theatrical representations there in the year 1845, and the defendant paid such large salaries and remunerations according to the said agreement in that behalf; and the said thirty-three pupils thereby there at the said theatre and in London acquired and received celebrity, patronage, and public applause; and the defendant, by reason and in consideration of the said premises, afterwards made and entered into the said agreement secondly above in the declaration in that behalf mentioned, and from the time of the making thereof thence always hitherto, he, the defendant, hath been ready and willing to receive, permit, and bring forward the said thirty-three pupils, being the same thirty-three pupils as aforesaid, to dance as aforesaid, at the said Queen's Theatre, during all the time the said theatre has been open for theatrical representations in and during this year 1846, pursuant to the said agreement secondly in the declaration above-mentioned, to wit, from the said 28th day of February last, when the said Josephine arrived, or was in London, thence always hitherto; nevertheless the plaintiff, and the said Josephine, his said wife and agent, from the time of the making of the said agreement secondly above in the declaration mentioned, thence always hitherto have failed to perform, and, on the contrary, have broken the said agreement in the declaration in that behalf secondly above-mentioned, by not procuring or causing to dance the same thirty-three pupils at the said theatre, for or during the said space of time in the said agreement in the declaration secondly above-mentioned, to wit, from the said 28th day of February to the commencement of this suit inclusive, and thence hitherto, or any part thereof, but by procuring and having a certain less part of the same thirty-three pupils, to wit, twenty-five only, ready and willing to dance during the time as last aforesaid; and therein failed and made default; and the remaining eight thereof, being eight of the said principal and leading pupils by and under whom the residue being subordinate pupils, were led and danced long before the time for payment, according to the said last-mentioned agreement in the said declaration, of any of the said instalments had elapsed, to wit on the 1st day of October, A.D. 1845, and thence continually, and during the said space of time, to wit, from the said 28th day of February, following, to wit, hitherto were and have been, and still are, resident and absent in parts beyond the seas, to wit, in Germany, and have not been ready and willing to come to or be present in London, during all the said time aforesaid, or any part thereof, to dance at the said theatre, according to the said agreement in the declaration secondly above in that behalf mentioned, but wholly refused so to do; and the plaintiff and Josephine, his said wife and agent, as aforesaid, have been always, from the time of making of the said agreement in the said declaration secondly above-mentioned, thence, hitherto, and are wholly unable to procure the said principal and leading pupils of the said thirty-three to come to England to perform and fulfil the said agreement in the said declaration secondly above-mentioned, on the part of the plaintiff, to be by him performed and fulfilled, and thereby during all that time the plaintiff and the said Josephine Weiss, his wife and agent, therein have wholly failed and made default in fulfilment and performance of the said agreement on their part in that behalf to be performed and fulfilled, and have never been able to perform and fulfil the same; and the consideration by reason of which the defendant made and entered into the said agreement secondly above in the said declaration mentioned, has, by reason of the premises aforesaid, wholly failed; and this the defendant is ready to verify, &c.

The 3rd plea justified the refusal to permit thirty-three pupils, other than those who had danced in 1845, to dance in 1846, on the ground that the agreement was that the same thirty-three pupils should dance; and that eight of the thirty-three who were ready and willing to dance, were different pupils.

The 4th plea was a special traverse of the averment that the said Josephine was ready and willing to cause her thirty-three pupils, and that the said thirty-three pupils were ready and willing, to dance, &c.

The 5th plea was a simple traverse of the same averment.

The 6th, that the said instalments in the said declaration mentioned, did not, nor did either of them, or any part thereof, become or be due or payable modo et forma.

These pleas were delivered on the 9th of May; and interlocutory judgment signed as for want of plea.

A rule nisi having been obtained to set aside the judgment so signed,

June 11.—Watson, Q.C. and Lush, shewed cause.

The second plea is clearly not issuable. The declaration in substance charges a breach of agreement in not employing the plaintiff's wife and pupils to dance; and the plea is no answer. In effect it says that eight of the pupils who came in 1846 did not come in 1845; and it is therefore an attempt to put in issue the construction of the agreement, whether it meant thirty-three particular individuals, or only thirty-three dancers generally. It raises an issue more extensive than non-assumpsit before the new rules. Secondly, the last plea is bad, because it varies from the abstract of pleas allowed by the judge. In the abstract the plea was a traverse of the averment that three instalments had become due and payable; but the issue raised is different. [PATTERSON, J.—It is doubtful what is meant; whether to deny the non-payment, or that the payment was a condition precedent to the performance.] Further, it is pleaded to the whole declaration, but is applicable to part only. They cited Parratt v. Goddard, 9 M. & W. 458, 1 Dowl. N. S. 874; Hughes v. Poole, 6 Scott, N. R. 959; Warner v. Theobald, Cowp. 589; Humphreys v. Earl of Waldegrave, 6 M. & W. 622.

Hoggins, contra.—As to the last plea, the fault, if any, is in the declaration, which alleges two distinct breaches: one, the non-payment of the instalments; the other, the non-employment. The plaintiff will, no doubt, contend that the sixth instalment was payable in Paris before she was bound to appear with her pupils; and the issue will raise that question. He cited Steele v. Harmer, 14 M. & W. 156. The second plea, whether good or not, is at all events a plea to the merits, and therefore issuable.

Cur. adv. vult.

Lord DENMAN, C.J. now said—The interlocutory judgment may be set aside upon payment of costs; but the defendant must abandon his last plea, which is not issuable. Rule absolute on the above terms.

Thursday, June 25.

GILKETT v. BULLIVANT.

Defamation—Special damage.

In an action for words, imputing to the plaintiff, a governess, that she had had a child by her master, the declaration alleged, as special damage, that her master had dismissed her from his employment. The words were spoken by the defendant to the plaintiff's father, at a time when the plaintiff was visiting her father, and were repeated by the father to the master, who then declined to receive the plaintiff again, though he knew the charge to be false, on the ground that it might be injurious to her character to do so, and would be unpleasant to both of them. Held, that the special damage was the direct and natural and legitimate consequence of the slander; and was therefore sufficient to support the action.

Held also, that there was sufficient evidence for the jury that the plaintiff was dismissed.

Case.—The declaration stated that the plaintiff before and at the time of the committing of the grievance by the defendant, as therein after-mentioned, used and exercised the business and employment of a domestic governess, &c.; that before and at the time, &c. the plaintiff had been and was retained and employed by one John Laxton, in his service, and was boarded and lodged by him, as a governess, to teach and instruct an infant daughter of the said J. L. for salary and reward to the plaintiff in that behalf. Yet the defendant contriving and wickedly intending to injure the plaintiff, heretofore, to wit, &c. in a certain discourse which the defendant then had with one R. G. the father of the plaintiff, of and concerning the plaintiff, and of and concerning her conduct whilst in the said service and employ of the said J. L. in the presence and hearing of the said R. G. and divers other persons, falsely and maliciously spoke and published these several false, scandalous, malicious, and defamatory words, of and concerning the plaintiff, and of and concerning her conduct whilst in the said service and employ of the said J. L. that is to say, "How is the child?" Whereupon the said R. G. asked the defendant "What child he meant thereby?" whereupon the defendant then falsely and maliciously, &c. replied, and spoke and published of and concerning the plaintiff, &c. these several false, scandalous, malicious, and defamatory words of and concerning the plaintiff, &c. that is to say, "Why! the child she (meaning the plaintiff) had by Mr. L. (meaning the said J. L.); I (meaning the defendant) can prove the fact, as the child was put out to a nurse about two years since;" and which said words were then, and still are, calculated to injure the plaintiff, and were injurious to her in her said business and employment. By means of the committing of which said grievance by the defendant as aforesaid, the plaintiff not only hath been and is greatly injured in her good name, fame, and credit, but also by means of the committing of the said grievance, and on no other account whatsoever, the said J. L. and who, but for the committing, &c. would have continued to retain and employ her as such governess, &c. hath afterwards to wit, &c. dismissed and discharged plaintiff from his said service and employ, and hath from thence hitherto refused to continue to retain or employ her, and thereby the plaintiff hath lost and been deprived of divers great gains and profits, &c. to the plaintiff's damage of 300l.

Pleas.—1. Not Guilty.

2. A denial of the plaintiff's employment as governess modo et forma.

3. A justification of all the words as true.

4. A justification of the words "Why the child she had" as true.

Issue joined on the 1st and 2nd; and replication, de injuria, to the 3rd and 4th pleas.

At the trial which took place before Coleridge, J. at the Surrey Summer Assizes, 1845, the father of the plaintiff proved the speaking of the words, and that he communicated them to Mr. Laxton; and Mr. Laxton proved that the charge was without foundation; but that he declined to receive her again, she being then absent from his house on a visit to her father, on the ground that after such a statement had been made it might be injurious to her character to remain, and would, at least, be unpleasant to both. The learned judge told the jury that there was evidence for them, and, in his opinion, abundant evidence both of the slander and the dismissal as laid; and they found a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 300l.

Chambers, Q.C. in last Michaelmas Term obtained a rule to shew cause why that verdict should not be set aside and a new trial had, or why judgment should not be arrested (See 6 L. T. 119). That rule now came on for argument; but no counsel appeared to shew cause against it. The Court nevertheless called upon

M. Chambers, Q.C. and Ogle, in support of the rule. First, the special damage is not proved; and the direction was wrong in that respect. The special damage must be the legal and natural consequence of the words spoken. (Vicars v. Wilcocks, 8 East, 1 Ward v. Weeks, 7 Bing. 211, 215; Morris v. Langdale, 2 B. & P. 284; 3 Stark. Evid. 637. [Lord DENMAN, C.J.—Vicars v. Wilcocks has been much shaken.] McPherson v. Daniels, 10 B. & C. 262, confirms Vicars v. Wilcocks. Newman v. Zachary, Ayles, 3, is the strongest case on the other side; and that decision cannot be supported now. (See Green v. Bullen, 3 C. M. & R. 713.) Here the dismissal of the plaintiff was not the natural or legal consequence of the words spoken; for, in the first place, they were not addressed to Mr. Laxton, but to the father; and if they had not been repeated by him, the consequence would not have ensued. (Ward v. Weeks, above cited.) Knight v. Gibbs, 1 Ad. & Ell. 43, differed in that respect; for there the words were spoken to the person who dismissed the plaintiff; but secondly, Mr. Laxton knew the plaintiff's innocence; and it would be a wrongful and illegal act in him to dismiss her on account of an unjust imputation. If he did so, she would have a remedy by action against him. Secondly, in this case the special damage is the gist of the action, and must be proved as laid; for the words are not actionable per se; and there is no allegation that they were spoken of and concerning the plaintiff, in her character of a governess generally; or any proof that they were so spoken. Thirdly, assuming the allegation to be sufficient, there was no evidence that the plaintiff was a governess at the time when the words were spoken; and the introductory averments, when material to the defamatory character of the words must be proved as laid. (Teesdale v. Clement, 1 Chit. R. 603.) Lastly, the evidence failed to shew any dismissal of the plaintiff by Mr. Laxton.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—This rule must be discharged. It seems to me that there was very reasonable evidence to be submitted to the jury, that the words were spoken of the plaintiff in reference to her conduct in Mr. Laxton's service, which is the allegation in the declaration; and also that she was in his service as a governess at that particular time, for that was indeed the very foundation of the charge. As to the special damage also, I think the evidence was quite sufficient. The repetition of the words by the father to Mr. Laxton was the natural consequence of the speaking of the words; and is very different from the case of an idle repetition by an indifferent person; so that, without questioning the authority of Ward v. Weeks, I am of opinion that here the special damage was the direct and natural consequence of the words spoken. But then it is said that they could not have occasioned the dismissal, because Mr. Laxton knew that they were not true, and a dismissal by him on that account would have been illegal; but that objection is removed by the case in this Court (Knight v. Gibbs, 1 Ad. & Ell. 43), where a woman who took lodgers dismissed the plaintiff, not because she believed the imputation, but because she was afraid that the character of her house might suffer, and the Court held that that was a legitimate and natural consequence of the imputation cast upon the plaintiff. So here it was perfectly reasonable and proper that the master should refuse to keep the plaintiff in his service after such a statement had been made, although he knew it to be untrue. One other point was made, that there was no dismissal, but that was a question for the jury upon the evidence. It appeared that the plaintiff was visiting her father at the time, and the master refused to receive her again; much the same thing, I should think, as if he had actually dismissed her.

Re CROWTHER, a Prisoner.

A commissioner of bankruptcy has no power of awarding costs in the shape of damages for a seizure assumed to be illegal, nor to issue a warrant of committal for the non-payment of such costs.

This was an application to discharge the above-named prisoner, who is the bailiff of the Court of the Honour of Pontefract, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, and in that capacity he, in pursuance of a warrant of execution, duly issued out of that court, on a certain judgment recovered therein, by one William Cole against John Pickles, a hair dresser, proceeded to levy 12l. 18s. 3d. and costs. Upon the levy being made, Pickles stated that he had obtained an order of protection from the Leeds District Court of Bankruptcy, whereby his goods and chattels were protected from all process. Upon which Crowther (the prisoner) demanded to see the order, which was refused by Pickles; and as no messenger was in possession under the insolvency, he (Crowther) proceeded to execute his warrant, and ultimately removed the goods; immediately after which a complaint was made by Mr. Harle, of Leeds, the solicitor to the insolvent Pickles, to Mr. Commissioner Burge, who issued a summons on the 13th of August, directed to the prisoner, to shew cause why he so seized and carried away the goods and chattels of Pickles, they being protected from process by the order of the Court. This summons not being obeyed, a warrant was issued by the commissioner to apprehend and bring him before the Court to answer to the complaint, and on the 15th of August, he having been taken into custody was taken before the commissioner, who, after hearing all parties on the subject of the complaint, adjudged the prisoner to have been guilty of a gross contempt of his court, by seizing and taking away the goods of John Pickles, and also ordered the prisoner to pay the costs occasioned by the application (amounting to nearly 30l.), or, in default, to stand committed to York Castle. Mr. Crowther protested against the authority of the Commissioner to make such an order, and refused to comply therewith, upon which he was taken into custody, and taken to York Castle, there to remain until he had paid the costs and purged the contempt. Under these circumstances, an application was made to the Lord Chief Baron, on Saturday last, for a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the body of the prisoner, in order to his discharge out of custody as to such commitment, when, after perusing the affidavit in support of the application, the learned judge granted his fiat for the issuing of the writ, in pursuance of which Mr. Crowther was brought up in custody from York Castle yesterday, before Mr. Justice Erle, who made an order directing Mr. Crowther to be discharged out of custody, on the ground that the warrant and commitment were bad, the Commissioner, Mr. Burge, having assumed a power of awarding costs in the shape of damages for a seizure assumed to be illegal, and of issuing his warrant of committal for the non-payment of such costs. The learned judge said he should give no opinion whether the seizure itself was a contempt or not, or whether, if it were, the commissioner had a legal power of committal in such a case. It was clear that he had no power to commit for non-payment of costs. Mr. Crowther was at once discharged.

ADMIRALTY COURT.

Wednesday, May 6.
(Before Dr. LUSHINGTON.)
THE NORDEN.
Collision.

When two vessels are approaching each other, with danger of collision, they must follow the rules of navigation, either as laid down by the Trinity Board, or as known to all seamen. But when there was no chance of collision the Trinity regulations did not apply, and a foreign ship ought to be governed by general rather than by any particular rules, by whomsoever laid down.

This was a case of collision. The Countess of Errol left Shields for London on the 21st of January last, laden with coals. On the morning of the 25th she was off the Dudgeon shoal, lying close hauled on the starboard tack with her head to the S.S.E., the wind blowing fresh from the S.W. About one a.m. the Russian ship Norden, of 468 tons burden, was seen about half a mile distant to the windward, standing towards the brig under all her sails, except studding sails, on the larboard tack, with the wind free and abaft the beam. A light was held up and the brig's helm put to starboard to give her more room, but before that took effect the Norden ran into her stem on, in consequence of which she sank in about twenty minutes. The Norden alleged that she was in ballast proceeding from London to Newcastle, and that on perceiving the brig she put her helm hard a-port, and on nearing her observed that she was bearing away or endeavouring to cross the course of the Norden. She attributed the collision to the brig starboarding her helm instead of putting it hard a-port.

Dr. Addams and Dr. R. Phillimore appeared for the Countess of Errol; Dr. Bayford and Dr. Deane for the Norden.

The learned JUDGE, in addressing the Trinity Masters, said, that in deciding the case of the Columbine, which occurred in the year 1843, he had laid down the rule, that when two vessels were approaching each other with a danger of collision they must follow the rules of navigation, either as laid down by the Trinity Board, or as known to all seamen, and to that principle he still adhered. But where there was no chance of collision the Trinity regulations did not apply, and a foreign ship ought to be governed by general, rather than by any particular rules, by whomsoever laid down. He would submit to them whether the Norden had done right or wrong in porting her helm, and whether the Countess of Errol, in starboarding her helm, had without a just cause acted contrary to the rules of navigation.

The Trinity Masters were clearly of opinion that the blame was solely imputable to the Norden.

The learned JUDGE said, that there could be no doubt as to what the decree of the Court must be. He must pronounce for the damage with the costs. But it was quite impossible for him to allow the particular facts which were apparent in this case to pass by without some observation. After the collision occurred, the crew of the Countess of Errol escaped on board the Norden, and then went back in a boat belonging to the Norden to ascertain the state and condition of their vessel. The Russian crew, knowing the danger, returned to their own vessel, and abandoned the whole of the British crew to the probability of utter destruction. More inhuman conduct it had seldom happened to him to witness. One or two cases had occurred in which his predecessors had had to express in strong terms their disapprobation of those who had been wanting in fulfilling the necessary duties of life. This was not a failure in fulfilling the duties of humanity, but it was the perpetration of an act of inhumanity. He thought it right, as an example to all others, to express his deep sense of indignation at such conduct having been pursued by the crew of any vessel belonging to any civilized nation whatever.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Monday, Aug. 3.

Ex parte JERWOOD, re DOCKERY.

1 & 2 W. 4, c. 56, ss. 46 & 55.—Solicitor's bill—Practice—Service of petition.

Where an official assignee had paid 10l. and 20l. pursuant to the above statute, and had no further assets, and no creditor's assignee had been chosen, and the bankrupt's certificate had been allowed, the Court directed the bill of costs of the solicitor to the fiat to be paid out of the 30l. so paid in.

Semble.—On applications with regard to the sums of 10l. and 20l. paid under the above statute, it is not necessary to serve the accountant in bankruptcy with notice.

This was the petition of a solicitor who had been employed in suing out this fiat, and was presented for the purpose of having 20l. and 10l. which had been paid under the 46th and 55th sections of 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 56, repaid, in order that his bill of costs might be paid. The fiat was dated the 3rd of Sept. 1844, and on the 6th of Sept. adjudication was made. On the 14th of Sept., which was the day appointed for the meeting for the choice of assignees, no creditor attended, and the meeting was accordingly adjourned to the 18th of October, when no creditor attended, and the bankrupt passed his examination. On the 6th of December, 1844, the bankrupt's certificate was allowed. The petitioner's bill of costs was taxed at 26l. 3s. 5d. and the official assignee having paid the 30l. payable under the sections before-mentioned, and not having any further assets, this petition was presented.

Sturgeon for the petition.

The CHIEF JUDGE said that the solicitor's bill, as taxed, might be paid out of the 30l. He also allowed the petitioner 40s. costs, to be paid out of the same fund.

The Accountant in bankruptcy had been served with this petition, and, upon being informed of this, The CHIEF JUDGE said, that he wished it to be understood, that in such cases as this he had never desired this service to be made.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

(Before Mr. Commissioner FANE.)

Wednesday, Sept. 2.

Re AYRES.

An interim order of the Court of Bankruptcy will not protect an insolvent from committal under the Small Debts Act, on a judgment signed against him before a final order of this Court. In such a case the commissioner will not interfere.

This insolvent obtained his final order from this Court on the 2nd of July last, and had inserted in his schedule a debt of 2l. 17s. due to Mr. Abercrombie. He was sued by Mr. Abercrombie, and judgment of the Palace Court was signed against him on the 2nd of May last. Summonses were taken out upon this judgment. He was ordered to attend the Palace Court, but thinking himself safe by his interim order, and in anticipation of his final order, he did not attend the Court as required. Subsequently he was taken to prison under the Small Debts Act, and he now applied to this Court for his release from custody.

It was now urged that the Court should interfere to give effect to the final order, which was a protection against the debt for which he had been summoned.

Mr. Commissioner FANE said he was not the party to interfere. After referring to the Act his Honour said the man must pay the debt or remain in prison, as orders made under the Small Debts Act, before a final order was made in this Court, could not be got rid of by a final order. Application refused.

THE LEGISLATOR.

SUMMARY.

BELOW will be found some serviceable information extracted from Parliamentary papers and returns. The report of the committee appointed to examine into the practice of carrying private Bills through Parliament, more especially those relating to waterworks, drainage, paving, and sanitary regulations, for towns, we give in extenso. It will be seen that the committee recommend the preparation of a statute during the recess, to secure uniformity of practice in these measures for the future. To one important recommendation we invite especially attention. The committee assume the charges of solicitors and agents in promoting and opposing Bills to be usually exorbitant, and that as no scale for such charges has been established by Parliament, a taxing officer shall be appointed, under the authority of the Speaker, and a scale of taxation fixed and published, for the guidance of all parties promoting or opposing private bills. This is another onslaught on the Profession, and must be looked to. We have not yet been able to obtain "The Private Bills Bill" which received the Royal assent on Friday; but shall look with interest to its enactments when we receive it.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

PARLIAMENTARY PRINTING.—The report of the Select Committee on Parliamentary printing has been issued. The committee was appointed to assist the Speaker in all matters which relate to the printing executed by order of the House of Commons, and for the purpose of selecting and arranging for printing returns and papers presented in pursuance of motions made by members which might be referred to the committee. The committee express their hopes, that with the co-operation of the House, they may be enabled to improve the character of Parliamentary papers, and to effect a considerable pecuniary saving. The committee refer to the suggestions of the Library Committee in 1830 and in 1834, and also to the Printing Committee of 1841, to the resolutions of which last-mentioned committee they earnestly recommend the perusal, and call the attention of the House to the fact, that whatever saving has been effected by abstracting the papers hitherto printed, the greatest possible economy, as well as the most useful results, are to be expected from the manner of moving for accounts and papers in future. The committee remind the House, that in order to effect a practical reformation of the system of Parliamentary printing, the rule should be strictly adhered to of giving notice of any paper about to be moved for, in order that the House may have ample time to consider whether the information is already on the table, and whether the expenses of collecting it are not so great as to render it necessary for the House to de-liaise making their order for the production of the papers, and the House should, in extreme cases, require from the Government their opinion as to the expediency of incurring the expense of procuring the information required. "Many papers (it is stated) are moved for during each session on matters purely local; and it is suggested that great discretion should be used in sanctioning the production of such documents, and that if ordered by the House to lie upon the table, the rule should be strictly adhered to of leaving the manuscripts at all times open to inspection in the library, and of refusing to print them for general circulation." It seems that in little more than four years a saving of 7,100*l.* was effected in printing abstracts instead of the forms of some returns as presented, and the committee expect further reductions by extending more generally the system of abstracts. They are satisfied with the plan pursued, and wish it to be more fully carried out, for although an additional annual expenditure may be thereby incurred, it is confidently expected that a saving will be effected in the printing far greater than any which has been effected.

REVENUE, &c. IN IRELAND (1845-6).—The net produce of the revenue paid into the Exchequer, in the years ending 5th January, 1845 and 1846, was, respectively, 4,265,729*l.* and 4,478,791*l.* The total expenditure was 4,077,075*l.* 1*s.* 11*d.* and 3,842,505*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.* The balance in the Exchequer on the 5th January last was 791,504*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.* The duties of Excise, in the year ended 5th January, 1845, amounted to 1,366,492*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*; and in the following year to 1,580,825*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* The duties of Customs in the two years were 2,348,629*l.* and 2,323,802*l.* From the best accounts that can be procured it seems that there were retained for home consumption in Ireland, in the year 1845, 698,464 gallons of wine, and in 1846, 668,214 gallons. The total quantity of spirits was 6,681,251 gallons in 1845, and 7,638,993 in 1846. Of tobacco, 5,579,234 lbs. in 1845, and 5,871,888 lbs. in 1846. Of tea, 5,851,632 lbs. in 1845, and 6,518,211 lbs. in 1846. Of coffee, 941,511 lb. in 1845, and 994,521 lb. in 1846. Of raw sugar, 363,620 and 414,998 cwt. in the two years. Of cotton wool, 64,343 lbs. in 1846. Of silk, 21*lb.* in each year. Of iron (unwrought) 595 and 198 tons in the two years. Of timber, not sawn or split, 67,554 and 107,301 loads in the two years; of timber, sawn or split, 94,614 and 127,536 loads; and of battens and deals, 82 and 113 great hundreds. The consumption of coals cannot be exhibited. The exports are as follows:—of wheat and wheat flour exported to Great Britain, the quantity was in 1845, 440,152 qrs.; and in 1846, 779,113 qrs.; and of oats and oatmeal, 733,439 qrs., and 2,353,985 qrs. in the two years. There were paid into savings banks in Ireland by trustees in the year ended 5th January, 1845, 503,691*l.*, and in 1846, 485,326*l.*, making in the two years, 989,017*l.*; and there were drawn out by trustees in the two years, 302,148*l.* 1*s.* 1*d.*, and 624,810*l.*, making a total of 926,958*l.* 1*s.* 1*d.*

SAVINGS BANKS.—The following is a statement of the number of depositors in the Savings Banks, and of the sums deposited on the 20th of November, 1845:—Under 20*l.* number of depositors, 597,631; amount of deposits, including interest, 3,851,027*l.* Ditto 50*l.* number of depositors, 267,609; amount of deposits, &c. 8,247,340*l.* Ditto 100*l.* number of depositors, 113,727; amount of deposits, &c. 7,815,347*l.* Ditto 150*l.* number of depositors, 37,924; amount of deposits, &c. 4,563,790*l.* Ditto 200*l.* number of depositors, 21,302; amount of deposits, &c. 6,633,971*l.* Exceeding 200*l.* number of depositors, 3,001; amount of deposits, &c. 702,980*l.* Charitable Institutions, number of depositors, 11,695; amount of deposits, 630,898*l.* Friendly Societies, number of depositors, 10,041, amount of deposits, &c. 1,303,516*l.* The principal and interest received from, and interest credited to the trustees, from 6th August, 1817, to 20th May, 1846, from Savings Banks and Friendly Societies, in Great Britain and Ireland, amounted to 53,291,034*l.* The amount of principal and interest paid to the trustees, was 19,982,266*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.* The amount of principal and interest due to the trustees by the commissioners, on 20th May, 1846, was 33,308,768*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.* The value of the securities held by the commissioners at the same date, was 31,936,834*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.* The uninvested balance was 226,779*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.*

HOUSE OF LORDS.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 28.—The LORD CHANCELLOR, on taking his seat, announced that her Majesty had been pleased to empower several peers to grant the Royal assent to several bills, and also to prorogue Parliament.—The Lords Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Minto, Earl Spencer, and Lord Campbell.

ROYAL ASSENT.

The Speaker and members of the House of Commons having been summoned by Sir A. Clifford, the Usher of the Black Rod, attended at the bar, when the Royal assent was given, in the usual form, to the following bills:—Consolidated Fund, Appropriation; Customs Duties, No. 2; New Zealand Government; Waste Lands, Australia; Drainage of Lands; Railway Commissioners; Small Debts; Steam Navigation; British Possessions; Wreck and Salvage; Private Bills; Pawnbrokers; Contagious Diseases; Public Works, Ireland, No. 4; Public Works, Ireland, No. 5; Constabulary, Ireland; Leases, Ireland; Mandamus, Ireland; Fisheries, Ireland; Ejectments, &c. Ireland; Poor Employment, Ireland; Rateable Property, Ireland; District Lunatic Asylums, Ireland; Cameron's Coalbrook Steam Coal and Swansea and Loughor Railway; and the South Devon Railway amendments and branches, No. 2.

Her Majesty's Commission, adjourning the Parliament until Wednesday, 4th November in the present year, was then read, and in pursuance of it the Lord CHANCELLOR declared the Parliament adjourned until that day.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, August 28.—MR. AGLONBY gave notice that, early next session, he should move for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the law for the enfranchisement of copyhold tenures; also for a Bill to amend the Enclosure Act.

NEW STATUTES

Of the Session 9 & 10 Victoria.

[In this record of actual Legislation, only the statutes and parts of statutes of peculiar importance to the Profession are given verbatim. Of the rest, the title, or a brief analysis only, is preserved here.]

We give the subjoined Act for the more easy recovery of Small Debts, before its turn in this list of new statutes, because it is of importance that it be in the hands of the Profession as early as practicable.

CAP. XCIV.

An Act for the more easy Recovery of Small Debts and Demands in England. (August 28, 1846.)

1. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127. Her Majesty may order this Act to be put in execution.—Whereas sundry Acts of Parliament have been passed from time to time for the more easy and speedy recovery of small debts within certain towns, parishes, and places in England: and whereas by an Act passed in the eighth year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend the Laws of Insolvency, Bankruptcy, and Execution," arrest upon final process in actions of debt not exceeding twenty pounds was abolished, except as to certain cases of fraud and other misconduct of the debtors therein mentioned: and whereas by an Act passed in the ninth year of the reign of her said Majesty, intituled "An Act for the better securing the Payment of Small Debts," further remedies were given to judgment creditors, in respect of debts not exceeding twenty pounds, for the discovery of the property of debtors, and punishment of frauds committed by them: and whereas by the last-mentioned Act her Majesty is enabled, with the advice of her Privy Council, to extend the jurisdiction of certain courts of requests and other courts for the recovery of small debts to all debts and demands, and all damages arising out of any express or implied agreement, not exceeding twenty pounds, and also to enlarge and in certain cases to contract the district of such courts, and make certain other alterations in the practice of such courts in manner in the now-reciting Act mentioned; and it is expedient that the provisions of such Acts should be amended, and that one rule and manner of proceeding for the recovery of small debts and demands should prevail throughout England. And whereas the county court is a court of ancient jurisdiction having cognisance of all pleas of personal actions to any amount by virtue of a writ of justices issued in that behalf. And whereas the proceedings in the county court are diffuse and expensive, and it is expedient to alter and regulate the manner of proceeding in the said courts for the recovery of small debts and demands, and that the courts established under the recited Acts of Parliament, or such of them as ought to be continued, should be holden after the passing of this Act as branches of the county court under the provisions of this Act, and that power should be given to her Majesty to effect these changes at such times and in such manner as may be deemed expedient by her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council. Enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, from time to time to order that this Act shall be put in force in such county or counties as to her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, from time to time shall seem fit; and this Act shall extend to those counties concerning which any such order shall have been made, and not otherwise or elsewhere.—Provided always, that no court shall be established under this Act in the city of London.

2. Counties to be divided into districts.—That it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, to divide the whole or part of any such county, including all counties of cities and counties of towns, cities, boroughs, towns, ports, and places, liberties and franchises therein contained, or thereto adjoining, into districts, and to order that the county court shall be holden for the recovery of debts and demands under this Act in each of such districts, and from time to time to alter such districts as to her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, shall seem fit, and to order from time to time that the number of districts in and for which the court shall be holden shall be increased until the whole of such county shall be within the provisions of this Act, and with the advice aforesaid to alter the place of holding any such court, or to order that the holding of any such court be discontinued, or to consolidate any two or more of such districts, and from time to time, with the advice aforesaid, to declare by what name and in what towns and places the county court shall be holden in each district; and if it shall appear to her Majesty that any part of any county, liberty, city, borough, or district may conveniently be declared within the jurisdiction of the county court of an adjoining county, it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, to order that such part shall be taken to be within the jurisdiction of the county court holden for the purposes of this Act for such adjoining county in and for such district as her Majesty shall order, in like manner as if it were part of such adjoining county.

3. Courts held under this Act to have the same jurisdiction as county courts, and to be courts of record.—That every court to be holden under this Act shall have all the jurisdiction and powers of the county court for the recovery of debts and demands, as altered by this Act, throughout the whole district for which it is holden, and there shall be a judge for each district to be created under this Act, and the county court may be holden simultaneously in all or any of such districts; and every court holden under this Act shall be a court of record.

4. Preserving the jurisdiction of county courts.—That for all purposes, except those which shall be within the jurisdiction of the courts holden under this Act, the county court shall be holden as if this Act had not been passed; and all proceedings commenced in the county court of any county before the time when any court shall be holden under this Act in such county may be continued, executed, and enforced against all persons liable thereunto, in the same manner as if they had been commenced under the authority of this Act.

5. Her Majesty may order any court under Acts in Schedules (A) and (B) to be held a county court, and may assign a district to the same.—That it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, to order that any court holden for the recovery of small debts or demands within the provisions of any Act cited in either of the schedules annexed to this Act, and marked (A) and (B) respectively, shall be holden as a county court; and it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, to assign a district to every such court, either greater or less than the district in which the court holden under the provisions of any such Act now has jurisdiction, and to alter the place of holding any such court, or to order that any such court be abolished; and every such court shall continue to be holden under the Act according to which it is now constituted or regulated until the time mentioned in any such order which shall be made with reference to such court; and from and after the time mentioned in any such order the Act or Acts under which such court is now constituted, so far as the same relate to the establishment or jurisdiction or practice of a court for the recovery of small debts or demands, shall be repealed, but not so as to revive any Act thereby repealed; and such court so ordered to be holden as a county court shall thenceforth be holden as a county court under this Act, and in all respects as if it had been originally constituted under the provisions of this Act.

6. When a court shall be established under this Act, repealed Acts and all other Acts affecting its jurisdiction, repealed.—That as soon as a court shall have been established in any district under this Act, and also at the time mentioned in any such order which shall have been made as aforesaid for holding any of the courts mentioned in either of the said schedules as a county court under this Act, the several provisions and enactments of the said Acts of Parliament of the eighth and of the ninth year of the reign of her Majesty, and of every other Act of Parliament heretofore passed, so far as the same respectively relate to or affect the jurisdiction and practice of the court so established or ordered to be holden as a county court, or give jurisdiction to any court, or to any Commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, with respect to judgments or orders obtained in the court so established or ordered to be holden as a county court, shall be repealed.

7. Proceedings under former Acts to be valid.—That all proceedings in execution of the said Acts or any of them commenced before the passing of this Act, or before the days severally appointed for the alteration of the constitution of the said courts, shall be as valid to all intents and purposes as if this Act had not been passed, or as if the said courts had not been altered, and may be continued, executed, and enforced against all persons liable thereto in the same manner as if they had been commenced under the authority of this Act.

8. Orders in council to be published in the London Gazette.—That any order in council made for the purposes of this Act shall be published in the London Gazette; and notice of the intention of her Majesty to take into consideration the propriety of making any such order shall be published in the London Gazette one calendar month at least before any such order shall be made.

9. Appointment and qualification of judges. Provision as to attorneys acting as judges under Acts cited in Schedules (A) and (B).—That the Lord Chancellor shall appoint as many fit persons as are needed to be judges of the county court under this Act, each of whom shall be a barrister-at-law who shall be of seven years' standing, or who shall have practised as a barrister and special pleader for at least seven years, or a barrister or attorney-at-law who, under the provisions of any of the Acts cited in the said Schedules (A) and (B), or under the provisions of either of the said Acts of the eighth year and of the ninth year of the reign of her Majesty, shall have been nominated or appointed to preside in or hold any court constituted or held under any of the Acts cited in either of the said Schedules (A) and (B), whether by the title of judge or barrister, or county clerk, assessor, or steward, or deputy steward, or by any other title or style whatsoever, or a person filling the office of judge of the county court, or county clerk, in the same county, at the time of the passing of this Act: provided always, that every attorney-at-law who shall be appointed a judge of the county court under this Act, and who shall be the partner of any other attorney-at-law, shall, within twelve calendar months next after entering on the said office of judge of the county court, dissolve such partnership or vacate the said office of judge, and shall not during his continuance as such judge enter into any new partnership; and that no attorney-at-law who shall be appointed a judge of any county court under this Act shall be, either by himself or his partner, employed or act as town clerk, or clerk of the peace of any county, city, or borough, or as clerk to any bench of justices, or as clerk or secretary to any board of guardians or governors or directors of the poor, or of any vestry or local or parochial board of trustees or commissioners, or of any public company or corporation whatsoever, or directly or indirectly concerned as attorney or agent for any party in any court regulated by this Act, or, after the expiration of the said term of twelve calendar months, in any other court of law or equity.

10. Judges at present acting in the courts of Bath, Bristol, Liverpool, and Manchester entitled to the first appointment under this Act for those places.—And whereas, under the provisions of the several Acts cited in the schedule marked (A) annexed to this Act, barristers have been appointed and now act as salaried commissioner, or as assessor or assistant to the commissioners appointed to hold the several courts of request constituted or regulated by the said several Acts in the cities of Bath and Bristol, and in the boroughs of Liverpool and Manchester; be it enacted, That when any order shall be made for holding a court under this Act within the said cities and boroughs respectively, districts shall be constituted which shall comprise at least the whole of the said cities and boroughs respectively; and every such barrister who shall have been on the 1st day of June in this year the salaried commissioner or assessor, or assistant to the commissioners, appointed to hold the said several courts of request, and who shall continue to hold the same office at the time when such order as last aforesaid shall be made respecting their city or borough respectively, shall be entitled to be appointed the first judge under this Act of the court to be holden in and for the said cities and boroughs respectively.

11. Stewards of the manors of Sheffield and Ecclesall appointed under 48 Geo. 3, c. 103, to be the first judges under this Act for those districts.—And whereas an Act was passed in the 48th year of the reign of King George the Third, intitled "An Act for regulating the Proceedings in the Courts Baron of the manors of Sheffield and Ecclesall, in the county of York," under the provisions of which Act John Parker, esq. has been appointed and is steward of the manor of Sheffield, and Daniel Maude, esq. has been appointed and is steward of the manor of Ecclesall; be it enacted, That if the said John Parker shall continue steward of the manor of Sheffield when any order shall be made for holding a court under this Act within the liberty of Hallamshire, a district shall be constituted which shall comprise at least the whole liberty of Hallamshire, except the hamlet or bierlow of Ecclesall; and if the said Daniel Maude shall continue steward of the manor of Ecclesall when any order shall be made for holding a court under this Act in the manor of Ecclesall, another district shall be constituted under the provisions of this Act which shall comprise at least the whole hamlet or bierlow of Ecclesall; and in such cases respectively the said John Parker shall be entitled to be appointed the first judge under this Act of the court to be holden in the district comprising the liberty of Hallamshire, except the bierlow of Ecclesall; and the said Daniel Maude shall be entitled to be appointed the first judge under this Act of the court to be holden in the district comprising the bierlow of Ecclesall, and the districts of the said two courts shall not be reduced within the said limits respectively so long as the said John Parker and Daniel Maude respectively shall continue judges of the said courts; and the present deputy stewards of the said two courts shall be entitled to be appointed the first clerks of the said two courts respectively, or in case of the consolidation of the said two courts, to act jointly as clerks of the consolidated court, under such regulations as to the division of duties and emoluments of the office as shall be made by order of court, with reference to the duties and emoluments of their offices in the said two courts, before such consolidation, in case of difference between them; and the said John Parker and Daniel Maude shall have the same privilege of holding the said courts by deputy which they now have of holding the said courts by deputy, provided only that the appointment of every such deputy shall be subject to the approval of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State; and the said John Parker and Daniel Maude shall hold the said courts in all other respects according to the provisions of this Act.

12. The present county clerk of Middlesex, appointed under 23 Geo. 2, c. 33, to be the first judge under this Act, and may continue to appoint a deputy, subject to approval of Secretary of State. Present registrar to be the first clerk.—And whereas the county court of Middlesex is regulated under the provisions of an Act passed in the twenty-third year of the reign of King George the Second, intitled "An Act for preventing Delays and Expenses in the Proceedings in the County Court of Middlesex, and for the more easy and speedy Recovery of Small Debts in the said County Court," under which the county clerk is empowered to appoint a deputy to act for him in his said office of county clerk: And whereas the said county of Middlesex within the jurisdiction of the said court is so populous that it will be expedient that several districts shall be constituted therein under this Act; be it enacted, That if the present county clerk of Middlesex shall continue county clerk of Middlesex when any order shall be made for holding a court under this Act within the jurisdiction of the said court, he shall be entitled to be appointed the first judge under this Act of such of the said districts as he shall select, and shall hold the said court in all respects according to the provisions of this Act, except that he shall be removable from the said office of judge only in the same manner as he is now by law removable from the office of county clerk, and that he shall have power to hold the court by his present deputy, and on vacancy of the office of deputy to appoint a deputy to hold the said court for him, provided such deputy be a barrister of not less than three years' standing, and shall be approved by one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State; and the present registrar of the said county court shall be entitled to be the first clerk of the court holden in the district so selected by the county clerk; and all suits and proceedings commenced in the county court of Middlesex before the division of the said county into districts shall be continued, and may be executed and enforced, as if they had commenced under this Act before the said county clerk in the district so selected by him.

13. Provisions for certain lords of manors having rights of appointment under the Acts hereby repealed.—That whenever any order shall be made for holding a court under this Act within the several towns mentioned in the first column of the schedule marked (C) annexed to this Act, then, upon the next vacancy which shall happen after the passing of this Act in the several offices mentioned in the second column of the said schedule (C) in conjunction with such courts, the several lords for the time being of the manors and liberties mentioned in the third column of the said schedule (C) in conjunction with the said courts shall be entitled to appoint persons properly qualified according to the provisions of this Act, to fill the said offices respectively, subject nevertheless in each case to the approval of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

14. Lords of manors, &c. may surrender courts, with consent of persons interested.—That it shall be lawful for the lord of any hundred, or of any honour, manor, or liberty, having any court in right thereof in which debts or demands may be recovered, to surrender to her Majesty the right of holding such court (for any such purpose, with the consent of any steward or other officer, if any, having a freehold office in such court), or upon the next vacancy in any such freehold office; and from and after such surrender such court shall be discontinued, and the right of holding such court shall cease, and all proceedings commenced in such court may thereafter be continued, and shall be enforced and executed, as if they had been commenced under the authority of this Act in a county court holden for the district in which the cause of action arose; but no person shall be entitled to claim any compensation under this Act by reason of any such surrender: Provided always, that the surrender of the right of holding any such court for the recovery of debts and demands shall not be deemed to infer the surrender or loss of any other franchise incident to the lordship of such hundred, honour, manor, or liberty, and that the court thereof may be holden for all other purposes, if any, incident thereunto, as now by law it may.

15. Appointments of judges who have previously officiated in any county court, not subject to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122.—That the appointment of any person who at the passing of this Act shall by any of the titles herein-before specified preside in or hold any court constituted or held under any of the Acts cited in either of the said Schedules (A) and (B), to be the judge of any county court, shall not be deemed an appointment to hold a public office or employment within the meaning of an Act passed in the sixth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intitled "An Act for the Amendment of the Law of Bankruptcy," so as to deprive him of any compensation to which he may be entitled under the said Act.

16. For supplying vacancies among the judges of the county court.—That from time to time when any judge appointed under this Act shall die, resign, or be removed, and the district for which he was appointed shall not be consolidated with any other district, another judge shall be appointed who shall be a barrister-at-law who shall be of seven years' standing, or who shall have practised as a barrister and special pleader for at least seven years, or who shall have been the county clerk of the same county at the time of the passing of this Act; and every such appointment shall be made by the Lord Chancellor, or, where the whole of the district is within the Duchy of Lancaster, by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

17. Judges not to practise as barristers in their districts, except in certain cases.—That no judge appointed under this Act shall during his continuance as such judge practise as a barrister within the district for which his court is holden under this Act, except those barristers already appointed to preside in or hold the said court, in Bath, Bristol, Liverpool, Manchester, Sheffield, Ecclesall, and Middlesex, and now practising in chambers as conveyancing counsel, who may continue such practice.

18. Judges of the county court removable for inability, &c.—That it shall be lawful for the said Lord Chancellor, or, where the whole of the district is within the Duchy of Lancaster, for the Chancellor of the said Duchy, if he shall think fit, to remove for inability or misbehaviour any such judge already appointed or hereafter to be appointed.

19. Districts of judges may be changed.—That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor or Chancellor of the said Duchy, within their several jurisdictions, to remove any judge from any district to which he shall have been appointed, for the purpose of appointing him to any other district in which the salary of such judge shall not be less than in the district from which he shall be so removed.

20. As to the appointment of a deputy to a judge.—That in case of illness or unavoidable absence, the cause whereof shall be entered on the minutes of the court, it shall be lawful for the judge appointed to hold any court under this Act, or, in case of the inability of the judge to make such appointment, for the Lord Chancellor, or, where the whole of the district is within the Duchy of Lancaster, for the Chancellor of the Duchy, to appoint some other person, who shall be a judge appointed under this Act, or who shall have practised as a barrister-at-law for at least three years, or as an attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of common law for ten years, but not then residing or practising as an attorney in the district for which the court is holden, to act as the deputy of such judge during such illness or unavoidable absence; and it shall also be lawful for the judge, with the approval of the said Lord Chancellor or Chancellor of the Duchy, to appoint a deputy, who shall be a judge appointed under this Act, or who shall have practised as a barrister-at-law for at least three years, to act for him for any time or times not exceeding in the whole two calendar months in any consecutive period of twelve calendar months; and every deputy so appointed, during the time for which he shall be so appointed, shall have all the powers and privileges and perform all the duties of the judge for whom he shall have been so appointed.

21. Judges may act as justices if in the commission of the peace.—That every judge of the county court whose name shall be inserted by her Majesty in any commission of the peace for the county, riding, or division of a county for which he is appointed judge of the county court may and shall act in the execution of the office of justice of the peace for the said county, riding, or division, although he may not have such qualification by estate or interest in lands, tenements, and hereditaments as is required by law in the case of other persons being justices of the peace for a county, provided that he be not disqualified by law to act as a justice of the peace for any other cause or upon any other occasion than in respect of the want of such an estate or interest as aforesaid.

22. Judges, &c. appointed under this Act authorized to perform certain duties relating to matters depending in the Court of Chancery.—That the judges and other officers to be appointed under this Act shall be authorized and required to perform all such duties in or relating to any causes or matters depending in the High Court of Chancery, or before any judge thereof, or before the Lord Chancellor in the exercise of any authority belonging to him, necessary or proper to be done in their respective districts, as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any general order direct, and for this purpose, and subject to the general rules and orders of the said court, shall have and exercise all such authorities as may be duly exercised by the commissioners or other officers of the said court by whom such duties are now usually performed, and shall be entitled to receive the same fees and sums of money as are now payable in respect thereof, to be accounted for and applied by them as the other fees authorised by this Act to be received are directed to be accounted for and applied; provided always, that the future amount of such fees shall continue subject to the same authority for revising the same to which it is now subject.

23. Treasury to appoint treasurers of courts holden under this Act.—That the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland shall appoint so many persons as they shall think fit to be treasurers of the courts holden under this Act, and may remove any such treasurer, if they shall see occasion so to do, and appoint another person in his room; and every such treasurer shall be paid by salary in such manner and to such amount as the said commissioners from time to time shall order; and the salary of every such treasurer shall be paid out of the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland: provided always, that the person appointed or acting as treasurer before the passing of this Act, to any court holden under any Act cited in either of the said Schedules (A) and (B) if not disqualified under this Act, shall be entitled to be the first treasurer of the same court respectively, when holden as a county court under this Act, in every case in which a separate treasurer shall be appointed exclusively for such court, and shall in such case continue to exercise his office, subject to the power of removal provided in this Act.

24. Appointment of clerks vested in judges, subject to approval of Lord Chancellor.—That for every court under the authority of this Act there shall be a clerk, who shall be an attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of common law, and whom the judge shall be empowered to appoint, subject to the approval of the Lord Chancellor; and, in case of inability or misbehaviour, to remove, subject to the like approval; and, until otherwise directed by her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, every such clerk shall be paid by fees as hereinafter provided; and in cases requiring the same, such assistant clerks as may be necessary shall be provided and paid by the clerk of the court.

25. In populous districts Lord Chancellor may direct two clerks to be appointed.—That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, in populous districts in which it shall appear to him expedient, to direct that two persons shall be appointed to execute jointly the office of clerk, under such regulations as to the division of the duties and emoluments of the said office, as shall be from time to time made by order of court, in case of difference between them, each of such persons being qualified as is hereinbefore provided in the case of a single clerk; and where under the provisions of any Act cited in either of the said Schedules (A) and (B) more than one clerk is now acting in and for the court holden under such Act, the same number of clerks shall be continued, unless it shall seem expedient to the Lord Chancellor to order that such number be reduced.

26. In case of illness, &c. of clerk, a deputy may be appointed.—That it shall be lawful for the clerk of any such court, with the approval of the judge, or, in case of inability of the clerk to make such appointment, for the judge to appoint from time to time a deputy, qualified to be appointed clerk of the said court, to act for the clerk of the said court at any time when he shall be prevented by illness or unavoidable absence from acting in such office, and to remove such deputy at his pleasure; and such deputy while acting under such appointment shall have the like powers and privileges, and be subject to the like provisions, duties, and penalties for misbehaviour, as if he were the clerk of the said court for the time being.

27. Duties of clerks.—That the clerk of each court, with such assistant clerks as aforesaid in cases requiring the same, shall issue all summonses, warrants, precepts, and writs of execution, and register all orders and judgments of the said court, and keep an account of all proceedings of the court, and shall take charge of and keep an account of all court fees and fines payable or paid into court, and of all moneys paid into and out of court, and shall enter an account of all such fees, fines, and moneys in a book belonging to the court, to be kept by him for that purpose, and shall from time to time, at such times as shall be directed by order of the court, submit his accounts to be audited or settled by the treasurer.

28. Offices of clerk, treasurer, and bailiff not to be conjoined.—That it shall not be lawful for the clerk of any court holden under this Act, or the partner of any such clerk, or any person in the service or employment of such clerk or his partner, to act as treasurer or high bailiff of the court; or for the treasurer, his partner or clerk, or any person in the service or employment of such treasurer or his partner, to act as clerk or high bailiff; or for the high bailiff, his partner or clerk, or any person in the service or employment of such high bailiff or his partner, to act as clerk or treasurer of the court.

29. Officers not to act as attorneys in the court.—That no clerk, treasurer, high bailiff, or other officer of the court, shall, either by himself or his partner, be directly or indirectly engaged as attorney or agent for any party in any proceeding in the said court.

30. Penalty of 50l. on non-observance of the two previous enactments.—That every person who, being the clerk of any such court, or the partner of such clerk, or a person in the service or employment of any such clerk or of his partner, shall accept the office of treasurer or high bailiff of such court, or who, being the treasurer of any such court, or the partner of any such treasurer, or a person in the service or employment of any such treasurer, or of his partner, shall accept the office of clerk or high bailiff in the execution of this Act, or who being the high bailiff of such court, or the partner of any such high bailiff, or a person in the service or employment of any such high bailiff, or of his partner, shall accept the office of clerk or treasurer in the execution of this Act, and also every clerk, treasurer, high bailiff, or other officer of any such court who shall be, by himself or his partner, or in any way, directly or indirectly, concerned as attorney or agent for any party in any proceeding in the said court, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of fifty pounds to any person who shall sue for the same in any of her Majesty's superior courts of record, by action of debt or on the case.

31. Appointment of bailiffs.—That for every such court there shall be one or more high bailiffs, whom the judge shall be empowered by order of court to appoint, and in case of inability or misbehaviour, to remove by a like order; and every such high bailiff shall be empowered, subject to the restrictions hereinafter contained, by any writing under his hand to appoint a sufficient number of able and fit persons, not exceeding such number as shall be from time to time allowed by the judge, to be bailiffs, to assist the said high bailiff, and at his pleasure to displace all or any of them, and appoint others in their stead; and every bailiff so appointed may also be suspended or dismissed by the judge.

32. Provision for the high bailiffs of Westminster and Southwark.—That, until Parliament shall otherwise direct, the high bailiff of Westminster shall have the execution of all process issuing out of any of the said courts the jurisdiction of which shall include the city and liberty of Westminster or any part thereof, and shall be deemed the high bailiff of such courts; and the high bailiff of Southwark shall have the execution of all process issuing out of any of the said courts the jurisdiction of which shall include the borough of Southwark or any part thereof, and shall be deemed the high bailiff of such last-mentioned courts, and no other high bailiff shall be appointed for such courts.

33. Duties of the high bailiffs, &c.—That the said high bailiffs, or one of them, shall attend every sitting of the court, for such time as shall be required by the judge, unless when their absence shall be allowed for reasonable cause by the judge, and shall, by themselves or by the bailiffs appointed to assist them as aforesaid, serve all the summonses and orders, and execute all the warrants, precepts, and writs, issued out of the court; and the said high bailiffs and bailiffs shall in the execution of their duties conform to all such general rules as shall be from time to time made for regulating the proceedings of the court, as hereinafter provided, and, subject thereto, to the order and direction of the judge; and the said high bailiffs shall be entitled to receive all fees and sums of money allowed by this Act in the name of fees payable to the bailiff, out of which they shall provide for the execution of the duties for which such fees are allowed, and for the payment of the bailiffs and officers appointed to assist them, according to such scale of remuneration as shall be from time to time approved by the judge; and every such high bailiff shall be responsible for all the acts and defaults of himself and of the bailiffs appointed to assist him, in like manner as the sheriff of any county in England is responsible for the acts and defaults of himself and his officers.

34. Provision respecting clerks and high bailiffs of courts under Act, cited in Schedules (A) and (B).—That the persons holding the offices or performing the duties of clerks and high bailiffs in any court holden under any Act cited in either of the said Schedules (A) and (B) on the first day of June in this year, and who shall continue respectively to hold the same offices or to perform the same duties at the time when such Act shall be repealed under the provisions of this Act, whether or not qualified as hereinafter provided, shall be entitled, if not disqualified under this Act, to be the first clerks and high bailiffs of the same court, when holden as a county court under this Act, and shall continue to execute their several offices, subject to the power of removal provided in this Act, except that the clerks and high bailiffs already appointed to any court named in the said Schedule (A) shall be removable only for such cause as would have warranted their removal under the Acts according to which their court is now holden; and where, under the provisions of any of the said Acts, more than one clerk was on the said first day of June, and shall be, when such Act shall be repealed, under the provisions of this Act, acting in and for any of the said courts, or in and for any district or division of any court, the same persons shall jointly execute the office of clerk of the same courts as aforesaid, under such regulations as to the division of the duties and emoluments of the said office as shall be from time to time made by order of court, in case of difference between them: provided always, that if the clerk of any court cited in the said Schedule (A) shall, within one calendar month next after the repeal of the Act under which it is now holden, decline to accept the office of clerk to the same court as holden under this Act, it shall be lawful to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, if they shall think fit, to take into consideration the special circumstances of each case, and to award such compensation to be paid to such clerk as under the circumstances they shall think reasonable, in the manner herein provided in the case of persons whose emoluments will be diminished or taken away by this Act.

35. Provision respecting the officers of the two courts at Bristol.—And whereas the jurisdiction of the court of conscience in the city of Bristol, under the provisions of an Act passed in the first year of the reign of her Majesty, and cited in the Schedule (A) to this Act annexed, extends to the recovery of debts and demands not exceeding forty shillings: and the jurisdiction of the court of requests in the said city, under the provisions of an Act passed in the fifty-sixth year of the reign of King George the Third, and also cited in the said Schedule (A), extends to the recovery of debts and demands above forty shillings and not exceeding fifteen pounds; be it enacted, That in case the persons now holding the offices of registrar and clerk and deputy registrar of the said court of conscience shall continue to hold the same offices respectively when a court shall be established in the said city of Bristol under the provisions of this Act, they shall be entitled to hold the office and execute the duties of clerks of any such court in all causes and matters relating to debts, claims, and demands not exceeding forty shillings, under such regulations as to the division of the duties and emoluments of the said office as shall be from time to time made by order of the court, in case of difference between them; and in case the person now holding the office of clerk of the said court of requests shall continue to hold the same office at the time when such court shall be established, he shall be entitled to hold the office and execute the duties of clerk of any such court in all causes and matters relating to debts, claims, and demands exceeding forty shillings; and the said persons severally shall be removable only for such cause as would have warranted their removal under the several Acts according to which the said courts are now holden.

36. Treasurers, clerks, and high bailiffs to give security.—That the treasurer, clerk, and high bailiff of every court holden under this Act who may receive any monies in the execution of his duty shall give security, for such sum and in such manner and form as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury from time to time shall order, for the due performance of their several offices, and for the due accounting for and payment of all monies received by them under this Act (or which they may become liable to pay for any misbehaviour in their office).

37. Fees to be taken according to Schedule (D) and tables to be exhibited in conspicuous places; fees may be reduced; appropriation of surplus fees.—That there shall be payable on every proceeding in the courts holden under this Act, to the judges, clerks, and high bailiffs of the several courts, such fees as are set down in the schedule marked (D) to this Act annexed, or which shall be set down in any schedule of fees reduced or altered under the power hereinafter contained for that purpose, and none other; and a table of such fees shall be put up in some conspicuous place in the court house and in the clerk's office; and the fees on every proceeding shall be paid in the first instance by the plaintiff or party on whose behalf such proceeding is to be had, on or before such proceeding, and in default, payment thereof shall be enforced by order of the judge by such ways and means as any debt or damage ordered to be paid by the court can be recovered; and the fees upon executions shall be paid into court at the time of the issue of the warrant of execution, and shall be paid by the clerk of the court to the bailiff upon the return of the warrant of execution, and not before: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, to lessen the amount of the fees to be taken in the courts holden under this Act in such manner as to him shall seem fit, and again to increase such fees, so that the scale of fees given in the schedule to this Act be not in any case surpassed; and in every court holden under this Act in which the fees allowed to be taken by the judges, clerks, or bailiffs of the court shall appear to be more than sufficient, it shall be lawful for the said Secretary of State to order that a certain part only of their fees shall be paid to them respectively, not exceeding, in the case of judges and clerks, the sums hereinafter mentioned as the greatest salaries to be by them respectively received; and in such case, and so long as such direction shall be in force, the amount of the residue of the fees shall be accounted for and paid to the treasurer of the court, and shall form part of the general fund of the court; but no such order shall be made to reduce the fees of any of the judges, clerks, and officers of any court mentioned in the said Schedule (A) (so long as they shall be paid by fees) below the average amount of their fees or emoluments during the seven years next before the passing of this Act, with a reasonable increase for any increase of business which they may severally have to perform by reason of this Act.

38. Compensation for persons whose rights or emoluments will be diminished.—That every person who is entitled to any franchise, right of appointment, or office, under any of the Acts under which any court mentioned in the said Schedule (A) is holden, and every person who shall have been entitled to any fees or salary for his services in the execution of any of the same Acts, or for the issue of any writs to the sheriff out of the High Court of Chancery, and also every person who is entitled to any franchise or right of appointment to hold office in any court in any district in which the county court had not jurisdiction before the passing of this Act, and in which district a court shall be established under the provisions of this Act, and also every person holding any office in any such last-mentioned court whose franchise or right of appointment or office shall be affected, abolished, or taken away, or whose emoluments shall be diminished or taken away under the operation of this Act, shall be entitled to make a claim for compensation to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury within six calendar months after the passing of this Act, or after the alteration of such court; and it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, in such manner as they shall think proper, to inquire what was the nature of the franchise or right of appointment, and what was the tenure of any such office, and what were the lawful fees and emoluments in respect of which such compensation should be allowed; and the commissioners in each case shall award such gross or yearly sum, and for such time as they shall think just, to be awarded upon consideration of the special circumstances of each case; and all such compensations shall be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland: Provided always, that if any person holding any office in any of the said courts shall be appointed after the passing of this Act to any public office or employment, the payment of the compensation awarded to him under this Act, so long as he shall continue to receive the salary or emoluments of such office or employment, shall be suspended if the amount of such salary or emoluments is greater than the amount of such compensation, or if not, shall be diminished by the amount of such salary or emoluments: Provided also, that nothing in this Act contained shall be deemed to entitle any person to compensation for the loss or diminution of the profits of any office to which he shall have been appointed under any Act containing a provision, either that he is not to be entitled to compensation for the loss or diminution of the profits of his office, or that such Act should cease on or within a limited time after the passing of any general Act for the recovery of small debts, or under the provisions of either of the said Acts of the eighth year of her Majesty and of the ninth year of her Majesty.

39. Officers of courts may be paid by salaries instead of fees. If court abolished, no compensation allowed except in certain cases.—That it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, to order that the judges, clerks, bailiffs and officers of the courts holden under this Act, or any of them, shall be paid by salaries instead of fees, or in any manner other than is provided by this Act; and if her Majesty shall be pleased, with the advice aforesaid, to make such order, or to order that any such court shall be abolished, or that the district for which any such court is holden shall be consolidated with any other district, or if any Act shall be passed whereby it shall be provided that the said Courts or any of them shall be abolished, or otherwise constituted than is provided by this Act, no such clerk or bailiff, nor any judge, county clerk, treasurer, or other officer of any such court, shall be entitled to any compensation on account of ceasing to hold his office, or to receive the fees allowed by this Act, or on account of his emoluments being affected by such abolition or alteration, unless he shall have presided or acted as judge, assessor, county clerk, treasurer, clerk, bailiff, or other officer, before the passing of this Act, in any of the courts mentioned in schedule (A) to this Act annexed, in which case he shall be entitled to compensation for the loss of his fees or emoluments, in like manner and subject to the same regulations as he would have been entitled thereto under the provisions herein contained in case he had been deprived of any fees or emoluments by reason of the passing of this Act; and in such case all sums payable in the name of fees to such officers of the court as shall be paid by salaries shall be paid from time to time to the treasurer of the court, who shall pay the said several salaries out of the proceeds of such fees, and the surplus shall form part of the general fund of the court; and whenever the net amount of the fees shall not be sufficient to pay the said several salaries, the deficiency shall be made good and paid out of the consolidated fund of Great Britain and Ireland.

40. Limiting amount of salaries to be paid under this Act.—That the greatest salaries to be received in any case by the judges and clerks of the courts holden under this Act shall be twelve hundred pounds by a judge, and six hundred pounds by a clerk, exclusive of all salaries to his clerks employed in the business of the court, and other expenses incidental to his office, unless in the case of any judge or clerk of any such court acting in the same capacity before the passing of this Act in any Court mentioned in the said schedule (A), whose salaries shall not be limited to any sum less than the average amount of the fees and emoluments of their respective offices during the seven years next before the passing of this Act: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to allow in each case such sum as they shall in each case deem reasonable to defray travelling expenses, with reference to the size and circumstances of each district.

41. Fees and fines to be accounted for to treasurer.—That the clerk of every court holden under this Act, from time to time as often as he shall be required so to do by the treasurer or judge of the court, and in such form as the treasurer or judge shall require, shall deliver to the treasurer a full account in writing of the fees received in that court under the authority of this Act, and a like account of all fines levied by the court, and of the expenses of levying the same, and shall pay over to the treasurer, quarterly or oftener in every year, by order of the court, the monies remaining in his hands over and above his own fees, and such balance as he shall be allowed by order of the court to retain for the current expenditure of the court.

42. Clerk's accounts to be audited and settled by treasurers.—That the treasurer of every court holden under this Act shall from time to time, quarterly or oftener, as shall be directed by order of the court, audit and settle the accounts of the clerk and other officers of the court, and shall receive the balance of the various monies which such clerk and other officers shall have received under this Act, and shall pay over to the judge of the court the amount of his fees, and make all such other payments as it shall be requisite to make thereout in accordance with the provisions of this Act, and shall from time to time pay the balance remaining in his hands, or so much thereof as he shall be directed to pay, into such bank, or otherwise as shall be directed by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury.

43. Treasurer of the court to render accounts to audit board.—That the treasurer of every court holden under this Act shall once in every year, and oftener if required, on such day as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury from time to time shall appoint, render to the commissioners for auditing the public accounts of Great Britain a true account in writing of all monies received, and of all monies disbursed by him on account of every court holden under this Act of which he is treasurer, during the period comprised in such account, in such form, and with such particulars of receipt and disbursement, or otherwise, as the said commissioners of audit shall from time to time require.

44. Commissioners of Treasury to direct how balances shall be applied.—That the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall from time to time make such rules as to them shall seem meet for securing the balances and other sums of money in the hands of any officers of every court holden under this Act, and for the due accounting for and application of all such balances and other sums of money.

45. Accounts of treasurers to be audited under powers of 25 Geo. 3, c. 52.—That the accounts to be kept by the several treasurers on account of the said courts shall be examined and audited by the commissioners for auditing the public accounts of Great Britain, under the powers vested in them under an Act of the twenty-fifth year of the reign of King George the Third, intitled "An Act for the better Examining and Auditing the Public Accounts of this kingdom," and under any Act now in force, or otherwise howsoever, except so far as the same are varied by this Act.

REPORT ON PRIVATE BILLS.

THE select committee appointed to examine the applications for local acts during this session of Parliament; to examine especially in respect to the Bills for the erection of new waterworks, drainage, and paving, and improvements, according to the recommendations made by the commissioners of inquiry into the means of improving the health of towns and densely populated districts; and to ascertain how far the principle of their recommendations may be carried out in relation to the Bills proposed, and whether any and what measures may be recommended for adoption by the House thereon;—have considered the matters referred to them, and have agreed to the following report:—

"Your committee, in the first place, directed their attention to the Bills introduced this session, and specially referred to them, for the erection of new waterworks, for draining, paving, and town improvements; and after inspecting the reports made by the commissioners of inquiry into the means of improving the health of towns, and densely populated districts, and after examining several of the commissioners personally, taking other evidence respecting these matters, and carefully weighing and considering the same, they entirely concur in the general views of the commissioners: and your committee are of opinion that these local Bills, which have, to a certain extent, been improved by a partial adoption of the recommendations of the said commissioners, might have been still further improved by a fuller adoption of such recommendations, and by the introduction of provisions which have been shown by the reports of the said commissioners, and also by the evidence given before this committee, to be essential for the protection of the public interest.

"The commissioners, among other things, recommend that authority to construct such local works should not be granted without a previous local examination by competent and responsible public officers, in a mode analogous to that adopted by the tithe, the inclosure, and the tidal harbours commissions.

"That such works, both as to their construction and maintenance, should be subject to the supervision of some responsible public department, and should be authorized only upon pre-arranged terms and conditions of re-purchase on behalf of the public.

"That all waterworks, all works for drainage of towns, for sewerage and for paving, should, if possible, be carried out under one and the same local authority; and your committee entirely agree in these recommendations.

"Further, the commissioners recommend that the sanction of the legislature should be withheld from Bills for schemes which involve an undue competition between separate establishments for the same objects within the same district or field for supply; because experience has shown that the conflicting operations of such parties have been invariably attended with much needless expenditure, and, after a period of mutual injurious rivalry, have generally ended in coalition; and your committee are of opinion that considerable injury to the public interest has been sustained owing to that recommendation not having been adopted.

"It has been shewn to your committee that disease and excessive mortality (caused by defective drainage, want of properly distributed supplies of water, &c.), prevail often as intensely in the poorer towns and villages as in the more populous districts, for which Bills of this class are proposed, though such remedial measures are at present placed quite out of their reach.

"Your committee, however, while engaged in considering the matters specially referred to them, had their attention forcibly drawn to the fact, that most of the defects in the present mode of private legislation are not peculiar to those classes of Bills, but are general in their application to the whole system; and the difficulty of considering the defects of one or more such classes separately from the others became so apparent that your committee, instead of confining themselves to a limited view of the subject, found it necessary to extend their inquiry to the whole system of private legislation, with respect to which they would submit the following observations and recommendations to the House:—

"They would in the first place remark, that under the present system the expenses of maintaining the most necessary or desirable private Bill are grievously and needlessly heavy, while the great mass of these so-called private Bills (excluding those which are in their nature personal, such as divorce and estate Bills) materially affect public interests, and are, although local, essentially public Bills.

"That with respect to these local Bills, the chief imperfection of the present system of legislation arises from the fact that no provision is made for furnishing the committees which sit upon them with complete and trustworthy information, either with regard to the local evils requiring remedies, or with regard to the bearing which the provisions proposed in them may have upon the general law of the country.

"As the public are not represented before the committee by any competent or duly qualified person, the committee, when the Bill is unopposed, are wholly dependent for information on the interested representations of the promoters; and where it is opposed, they have, in addition, only the representations of parties not in the least more likely to be disinterested than the promoters; inasmuch as the expenses of opposition are such as to deter all parties from venturing to undertake it, except those whose interests are directly affected by the project, and who are also possessed of considerable means. The consequence is, that under the present system the interests of the public at large, who have neither the means of obtaining detailed information as to the proposed measures, nor the means of defraying the expenses of opposition, are often greatly prejudiced by local Acts. That besides this there are moreover often introduced into local Bills provisions of the most objectionable nature, some varying or interfering with the general statute or common law of the country; some, though ordinary in their nature, yet of a perplexing and needless diversity in form; and, finally, some so contradictory and mutually discordant as to render their enforcement impossible, and to make the law doubtful and embarrassing, even to those who are professionally versed in it.

"Your committee would further remark, that it appears, by reference to the index of the statutes, that in the period which elapsed from the union with Ireland to the termination of the last session of Parliament, near 9,300 local and personal Bills passed into law, and only 5,300 public statutes; but, to the pressure of private business, especially during the last two sessions, they prefer appealing to the experience of members of the House, rather than to the statements of witnesses, or the statistics of Parliamentary returns.

"Influenced by these considerations, your committee have come to the following resolutions, upon the two heads into which the subject seems naturally to divide itself:—

"The 1st. Relating to those cases in which the necessity of legislation to Parliament may be superseded by public general Acts, to be adopted and carried out under the sanction of a responsible department.

"The 2d. Relating to those cases in which it will still be necessary that the sanction of Parliament should be obtained.

I. PUBLIC GENERAL ACTS.

"Your committee are of opinion that it is desirable, in cases in which only ordinary powers are sought, that means should be afforded to the parties of carrying their projects into execution under the authority and supervision of one of the public boards or departments, without the necessity of applying to Parliament.

"That for this purpose, public general Acts should be passed on the several subjects of sewerage and waterworks, paving, lighting, police, and watching, markets, and every other class of private Bills, excluding those which are in their nature personal, on a principle similar to that which has been already carried into effect by the 3 and 4 Wm. 4, c. 90, for lighting in England; by the 9 Geo. 4, c. 82, for lighting, &c. in Ireland; and by the 3 and 4 Wm. 4, c. 46, for police in Scotland.

"That every such public general Act should set forth the conditions on which any corporation, parish, company, or other parties may be invested with the powers conferred by such general Act, and should also specify the public board or department of the government under whose authority such powers are to be conferred; such boards and departments being the Home Office, the Board of Trade, the Admiralty, the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, the Inclosure Commissioners, or others, as the case may be.

"That amongst the provisions so to be specified in each public general Act, the following seem to be expedient, namely,

"That a memorial, for authority to put in force the powers of the Act, be presented to the proper board or department.

"That such memorial shall state the objects of the promoters; the public utility of the measure; the local situation of the work; the estimated expense; the means by which the necessary funds are to be raised, and the periods over which the charges or repayments are to be distributed.

"That, within a limited time, similar information on those points shall be given to all parties interested, and to the neighbourhood, in the manner required by the standing orders in the case of private Bills; and that a printed copy of such memorial, together with plans and sections, estimates, subscription contracts, and all other appropriate information, shall, in a similar manner, be lodged at the office of some local functionary; and that duplicate copies of the same documents be likewise lodged with the department at the same time.

"That all parties interested shall be permitted, within a given time, to lodge, for public inspection, in the office of the local functionary, written suggestions, objections, or amendments to the measure proposed, which shall in due time be forwarded to the department.

"That the department shall thereupon depute one or more qualified inspectors (at the expense of the promoters) to proceed to the locality, and there, after due notice—

"1st. To inquire in open court, whether the provisions of the public general Act as to notices, deposit of documents, and all other legal requirements, have been duly complied with.

"2ndly. To inquire as to the merits of the case, both by evidence in open court, and by personal inspection;

"And then to make a written report on both points to the department.

"That the department, exercising its discretion on both the above points, shall thereupon determine whether authority shall be given for the exercise of the powers of the Act; and if so, upon what terms and conditions; and that such authority be conferred by a legal document, according to a form to be appended to the Act. But that in any case in which private property may appear to the department to be seriously interfered with, such authority shall be withheld, and the parties be left to the ordinary mode of proceeding by application to Parliament.

II. PRIVATE BILLS.

"That, in the opinion of this committee, it would be desirable that similar proceedings should be adopted in the case of all private Bills relating to the above-mentioned classes of subjects; by requiring—

"That all applications for such Bills should, previously to the session of Parliament, be referred to the proper board or department, as above; and,

"That such department should appoint one or more inspectors to proceed to the spot to take evidence, both as to compliance with the Standing Orders and upon the merits of the measure, in the manner above recommended, and to make a separate report upon each of these points; such reports to be referred respectively to the committee on Standing Orders and to the committee on the Bill. If, as would be most desirable, the House of Lords should think proper to adopt a similar course of proceeding, the same inspectors might report to both Houses.

"That the committee are of opinion that such local investigation would be of incalculable advantage—

"1. In diminishing the great expenses now incurred by parties for the attendance of agents and witnesses in London.

"2. In saving a large portion of the time of members of the House, now consumed in the sub-committees on petitions for private Bills, and in the committees on Bills; and

"3. In supplying to committees on Bills that local and trustworthy information which, under the present system, appears to be so much wanted.

"If, however, the House should not be prepared, at the present advanced period of the session, for the immediate adoption of the system recommended, involving, as it would, the most extensive changes in the Standing Orders, the committee would urge the subject on the early attention of the House in the next session of Parliament, when its deliberations on this point might be materially assisted by having under its consideration the public general Bills above mentioned, which they hope will be prepared during the recess.

"That, with the view of an immediate saving of time and expense in the proof of Standing Orders, the committee recommend that, in the ensuing session of Parliament, the proof of Standing Orders now taken before the sub-committees shall be taken before an officer, or officers, to be appointed by the Speaker, who shall commence his sittings for that purpose on the 1st of January, 1847; that every petition for a Bill, with a copy of the Bill annexed, shall be lodged in the Private Bill Office on or before the 24th of December; and that no Bill be permitted to be read a first time until the report of such officer shall have been presented to the House; and further, that to facilitate this object, all plans, &c. shall be deposited, and all applications shall be made to landowners and occupiers on or before the 30th of November. It has been suggested that the officers above-mentioned might hold their sittings in other places beside London.

"That in case such report should allege compliance with the Standing Orders, it shall be final; and in case it should allege non-compliance, it shall be referred to the committee on Standing Orders, as at present; and the officer by whom the report was made shall attend before the committee, for the purpose of furnishing them with any additional information.

"That, in case such officer shall feel doubts as to the due construction of any standing order in its application to a particular case, he shall make a special report of the facts; which report shall be referred to the committee on Standing Orders, who, after hearing the opinion of such officer, as well as the arguments of the agents, on the point of construction, shall determine whether or not the Standing Orders have been complied with; and shall either return the report, with their decision, to the House, or shall proceed to consider the question of dispensing with the Standing Orders as the case may be.

"CONSOLIDATION ACTS.

"That great evil results from the want of a strict uniformity of legislation with reference to all private Bills, but more especially with reference to police Bills and Bills for the improvement of towns.

"That for the purpose of remedying this evil, it is expedient that Acts be passed upon the same principle as those passed in the last session, called the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, and the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act.

"That such Acts be prepared during the recess, to effect the following objects:—

"Police and watching.

"Waterworks and sewerage.

"Lighting.

"Improvement of towns and regulation of buildings and streets and roads.

"Markets and fairs.

"Cemeteries.

"Bridges and ferries.

"Harbours, docks, ports, piers, and quays.

"Canals, rivers, and navigation.

"That there be a schedule attached to each of these Acts prescribing the form of private Bill, by which any place or party may be put under the provisions (in whole or in part) of any one or more of the above-named Acts.

"That all private Bills be drawn according to such form, except where the circumstances of the case require a deviation from it. That in all such cases the cause of such deviation be inserted in the preamble; and that it be the duty of the committee upon the Bill to decide and report specially upon the necessity of such deviation.

"That in the notices of any applications to Parliament for a Bill, wherein it is proposed to make such deviation, the intention shall be inserted in such notices.

"That as doubts and uncertainty, as to the provisions of the law, are caused by a multiplicity of Acts for the same object in any locality, it is desirable ble that when any corporation, parish, company, or other parties, invested with the powers, or acting under the provisions of any existing local Act or Acts, shall apply to Parliament for a new Bill, with new and amended powers and provisions, having reference to the same matters, it shall be imperative on them to send their new Bill, together with all previous existing Acts on the same subject, in force within the same corporation, parish, or district, to the Board of Trade, who shall report their opinion to the House whether the new Bill shall be allowed to proceed, or whether all the existing Acts shall be repealed, and the powers and provisions of such repealed Acts, together with the new or amended powers and provisions sought for, should be consolidated, to the intent that only one local Act shall be in force at the same time, in the same place, with reference to the same object.

"TAXATION OF COSTS.

"That although the fees payable to Parliament on local and private Bills are fixed and known, yet the charges of solicitors and agents for promoting or opposing such Bills are very uncertain and often very extravagant; and as there is no scale established by Parliament for such charges, it is desirable for the protection of the public that a proper taxing officer, such as is attached to courts of justice, should be appointed under the authority of the Speaker, and a scale of taxation be authorized and published by him for the guidance of all parties promoting or opposing local and private Bills.

"That the taxing officer shall present to the House, at the commencement of each session, an account of the total amount of the expenses for promoting or opposing of each Bill taxed and sanctioned by him during the preceding session, distinguishing the amount paid as fees on each Bill to each of the Houses of Parliament, the amount for witnesses, and other expenses, and for professional services.

"In conclusion, your committee urgently recommended to the immediate attention of the House the propriety of taking, before the close of the session, preparatory measures for the adoption of the recommendations of this committee, in order to protect the public in future from the evils proved, by the concurrent testimony of all the witnesses examined by your committee, to exist in the present system of conducting private and local legislation.

"3rd August, 1846."

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

NOTHING calling for remark has offered during the week. Some abstracts of new statutes governing the cases which fall under magisterial jurisdictions are given below.

PAWNBROKERS' SHOPS.—On Wednesday the Act to regulate the hours of business in pawnbrokers' shops, which was passed on Friday, was printed. It will take effect in the course of the present month. The following is the enacting clause:—"That from and after the 29th September next, after the passing of this Act, no pawnbroker shall receive or take in, or permit or suffer to be received or taken in, any goods or chattels, by way of pawn, pledge, or in exchange, before eight of the clock in the forenoon, or after seven of the clock in the evening, between the 29th September and the 25th March following; or before seven of the clock in the forenoon, or after eight of the clock in the evening, during the remainder of the year, excepting only until eleven of the clock on the evenings of Saturday throughout the year, and the evenings next preceding Good Friday and Christmas-day, and on every fast or thanksgiving day appointed by her Majesty; and in case any pawnbroker offend against the provisions of this Act, every such pawnbroker shall, for every such offence, on conviction thereof upon the oath of any one or more credible witness or witnesses, before any one or more of her Majesty's justices of the peace, having jurisdiction over the place where such offence shall have been or shall be committed, forfeit and pay not less than 20s. nor exceeding 5l. as such justice or justices shall adjudge; and every such penalty shall and may be levied, together with the costs attending the information, summons, and conviction, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender or offenders, or person or persons liable to pay the same respectively, by warrant under the hand and seal of any justice or justices before whom such offender or offenders, person or persons, shall or may be convicted; and every such penalty shall be applied and disposed of in like manner as forfeitures incurred for every offence against the last-recited Act" (the 39th and 40th Geo. 3, c. 99).

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES PREVENTION.—The Bill authorises any town council or other similar body having jurisdiction in a corporate town, drainage commissioners, or poor-law guardians, on receipt of two medical men's certificate vouching the existence of any public nuisance, to lodge a complaint with two justices of the peace. The justices, on being satisfied with the validity of such complaint, are required to make an order for the cleansing, whitewashing, or purifying of any dwelling-house or other building, or for the removal of the nuisance complained of in the certificate. If this order is disobeyed, the complaining parties are to have the power of entering upon the premises and of themselves carrying these remedial measures into effect. The expenses so incurred may be recovered summarily from the owners of the property in question. The president of the council or any three members of that board (of whom the Lord President or one of the Secretaries of State is to be one) are empowered to issue orders at any time to prevent the spreading of contagious or epidemic diseases in England. All penalties leviable under this Act are to be applied towards the relief of the poor. All orders made by the Privy Council are periodically to be laid before Parliament. Provision is made for the payment out of the poor-rates of such expenses as are not defrayed by the owners of the property complained against.

EMPLOYMENT OF CONVICTS.—It was stated in the last annual report of the Inspectors of Millbank Prison, that arrangements had been made for supplying the convicts, both male and female, with work during their voyage to the places to which they were transported; and in the report just issued a very satisfactory account is given of the good effect which employment has produced upon the discipline of the ship and the health and conduct of the prisoners, as also of the amount of work executed. Several of the surgeons-superintendent have asserted that more than double the amount could have been executed, had sufficient materials been placed on board. An increased supply has, in consequence, been provided. It is added by the Inspectors in their last report, just printed, "These results of the experiments of furnishing work to the convicts during the long voyage to Australia are highly gratifying, and reflect much credit on the officers in charge of the ship, and on the prisoners."

The following buildings are certified as places duly registered for solemnising marriages, pursuant to an Act of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 85:—Queen-street Chapel, Aberystwyth. Hugh Hughes, superintendent registrar.—Independent Chapel, Bromyard, Herefordshire.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

AMONG the subjects which will occupy the attention of the Legislature early next session, are those of the Acts for the Emfranchisement of Copyholders, and the Enclosure Act; to amend both of which Mr. AGLONBY proposes to bring in Bills shortly after the meeting of Parliament. What the changes are which he proposes have not transpired. As much of the Small Debts Bill as our columns this week will admit, may be found under the proper heading in the department "Legislator."

NOTES ON RECENT CASES IN EQUITY AND CONVEYANCING.

No. III.

Box v. Box, Box v. JACKSON,
1 Drury, 42.

What are the rights of the husband and wife over the wife's reversionary interest in personal chattels?

By indenture of settlement bearing date the 17th day of December, 1810, and made between E. Box, of the first part, T. Gurly and Sarah his daughter, of the second part, and P. Newton and E. Butler, of the third part, being the marriage settlement of E. Box and Sarah Gurly, two sums of 500l. were vested in P. Newton and E. Butler, upon trust for the said E. Box and Sarah, his intended wife, for their lives and the life of the survivor; and after the decease of such survivor, in trust for all and every the child and children of the marriage, to be paid in such shares as E. Box should by will appoint, and, in default of appointment, share and share alike. The marriage took place, and there was issue, three daughters, who became entitled to the principal sum of 1,000l. in equal shares (subject to their mother's life interest) in 1824, in which year the father, without having executed his power of appointment, died.

One of the daughters (Elizabeth) married Mr. John Wilmot, and attained her age on the 5th of May, 1834, and her sisters, Anne and Sarah, attained their ages respectively on the 3rd of September, 1840, and the 13th of July, 1842. At the beginning of 1843 (the fund being, in consequence of prior proceedings taken in Court, and the dividends being regularly paid to the widow) an arrangement was made by the three daughters to transfer the principal sum to their mother, and accordingly a consent was drawn up dated 4th February, 1843, to that effect, which was signed by the two unmarried daughters, the married daughter and her husband. An application having been made at the Rolls to make that consent a rule of Court, and refused by his Honour, a similar application was made before the Lord Chancellor (Sir E. Sugden), who, having referred to the facts of the case, and stated his impression to be, that, where all parties concurred, the consent of the wife might be taken, if her interest were dependent upon some collateral event, in fact, upon any event or contingency, except that of surviving her husband, declined, nevertheless, to decide so important a question upon a summary application, but gave leave to file a bill.

A bill was accordingly filed, setting forth the trusts of the settlement, and the facts of the case, and praying that the consent of the 4th of February, 1843, might be acted upon; that the trusts of the deed of settlement might be declared at an end, and that the Accountant-General might transfer the principal sum to Sarah Box.

The cause, coming on upon bill and answer, was argued at length before the Lord Chancellor, assisted by the Master of the Rolls (Ireland), who severally pronounced very elaborate decisions (occupying in the report thirty-two pages), and having reviewed all the cases bearing upon that subject, agreed in holding that the consent of the wife, even after an examination in Court, could not operate to bar, transfer, or affect her reversionary share of the fund, so as to preclude her right to it, in case she should survive her husband.

1. The first question which presents itself for consideration, as to the power of dealing with the reversionary interest of a married woman in personal chattels, is, whether the husband can, during the coverture, with or without the wife's concurrence, absolutely assign for a valuable consideration her reversion (not bequeathed or settled to her separate use), so as to preclude the right of the wife surviving? And this question, though far a long time vexed, is now satisfactorily settled.

The leading, though not the first, case upon the point, is Purdew v. Jackson, 1 Russ. 1. At the date and in the argument of that case, it was admitted that where the husband's assignment of his wife's reversionary interest in personal chattels was voluntary, or where it was a general assignment under the bankruptcy laws, its effect would certainly not be to debar the right of the wife surviving (Grey v. Kentish, 1 Atk. 280; Gager v. Wilkeson, 1 Bro. C. C. 50; Mitford v. Mitford, 9 Ves. 87, 99); and it was also not denied, that the husband's assignment would be equally ineffectual to defeat the right of his wife surviving where her interest could not by possibility accrue during the coverture—i. e. where it could only accrue after the death of the husband. (Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. 580; Seaman v. Duill, ibid.) But it was thought that the claims of the particular assignee, being a purchaser for valuable consideration, stood much higher than those of either a mere voluntary assignee or a general assignee by the operation of law; and that therefore, in all cases where the wife's reversionary interest could possibly accrue during the coverture, the title of the former under the husband's assignment would supersede the right of the surviving wife upon the accrual. And this was the very question discussed with great learning and ingenuity, and decided with no less talent and sagacity in Purdew v. Jackson. In a previous case, Hornesky v. Lee, 2 Madd. 16, the same, or nearly the same point had arisen, and had been disposed of; but there the assignment had merely been a collateral security, and the wife's reversionary interest was contingent; and an attempt was made to distinguish the two cases on those grounds. But the authority of Hornesky v. Lee was likewise called in question, and its soundness, according to the assertion of Sir Edward Sugden, was at the time generally doubted by the Profession. See, too, Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Jac. & W. 472, which Sir Thomas Plumer decided contrary to his subsequent opinion in Purdew v. Jackson. In the latter case it was contended with great, though not with a conclusive force of argument and authority, that the assignment by the husband for valuable consideration was binding upon the wife surviving, and in favour of that doctrine the rule laid down by Lord Holt, in Gage v. Grey v. Acton, 1 Salk. 326, was cited, viz. "Where the wife hath any right or duty, which by possibility may happen to accrue during the coverture, the husband may, by release, discharge it; but where the wife hath a right or duty which by no possibility can accrue to her during coverture, the husband cannot release it;" and the following observations in the Duke of Chandos v. Talbot, 2 P. Wms. 608, were also relied on:—"Though a chose in action, as a bond, &c. was not, in strictness of law, assignable, yet in equity it was, as every day's practice shewed; that though the wife was an infant when the assignment was made, yet that could not be material, for if she had been of age and joined, the deed as to her would have been void, and she might have pleaded non est factum; but being a personal thing, the husband alone might assign it; and with regard to its being a contingency until the wife should come to her age of twenty-five, it had been determined that the possibility of a term, viz. where a term was devised to A for life, remainder to B for the residue thereof, such possibility might be assigned by the husband alone, as appeared from the case of Theobald v. Duffay, 2 Mod. 102, decreed first by Lord Macclesfield, approved afterwards by the present Lord Chancellor (King), and last of all by the House of Lords." So in the case of Lord Cartaret v. Paschall, 3 P. Wms. 197, before Lord Chancellor King, "it was agreed, that where the baron is thus (that is, in right of his wife), entitled to a chose in action, as he may release or forfeit it, so if he should assign it for a valuable consideration, it would be good." In Bates v. Dandy, 2 Atk. 108; Grey v. Kentish, 1 Atk. 280; and Hawkins v. Obys, 2 Atk. 549, Lord Hardwicke (it was said) had laid down dicta to a like effect; and of those dicta Sir W. Grant had expressed his approbation, (9 Ves. 99-102). Such were the principal authorities put forward in support of the husband's power to defeat, by assignment, the interest of the wife surviving; and upon principle it was contended that the assignment was tantamount to a reduction into possession of the chose in action,—a reduction into possession being capable of being effected, not merely by the actual receipt of the thing itself, but by the husband dealing with it as his own—by his altering the property in it.

But even a second argument, enforced with all the acumen of Mr. Sugden, assisted by the late Mr. Girdlestone, did not remove the impression which the Master of the Rolls (Sir T. Plumer) had (contrary, however, to his original opinion, supra) entertained from the commencement of the case; and that profound lawyer, in a judgment especially worthy of perusal, decided that the husband had no power to defeat by assignment, even for valuable consideration, the claim of his surviving wife. Borrowing the language of Mr. Roper (Law of Husband and Wife, 1, 202), he said "marriage is only a qualified gift to the husband of his wife's choses in action—viz. upon condition that he reduce them into possession during its continuance; for if he happen to die before his wife, without having reduced such property into possession, she, and not his personal representatives, will be entitled to it;" and he assigned as the reason for this rule, that the right of property in a personal chattel is inseparable from the possession. If you have not the possession, you may have an immediate right of action, but till you recover possession of the chattel, you have not the right of property." At the time, then, when the assignment was executed, the property was a chose in action; it was not, it could not be, in possession; and, consequently, it clearly was not the property of the husband. The assignment could not alter its nature, and could not, therefore, in any sense be tantamount to a reduction into possession. Such was the doctrine of the law, and the maxim of the Court of Chancery was, that equity followed the law. Authority, too, the Master of the Rolls asserted to be strongly against the husband's power to defeat the right of the wife surviving. Lord Holt's dictum in Gage v. Acton was on a point altogether different, and was laid down in support of an opinion upon which the majority of the Court were against him. Besides, it applied merely to releases—and between releases and assignments there was no close analogy. Many of the cases cited, also, referred, not to personal chattels, but to chattels real (as terms for years, &c.), but the interest in a term of years was not a chose in action, it was a legal interest which did not lie in action, and might pass by assignment (see the subsequent cases of Donne v. Hart, 2 Russ. & M. 360; Major v. Laneleg, 2 Russ. & M. 355, et infra); and such cases ought, therefore, to be put aside as having in strict reasoning nothing to do with the question. Grey v. Kentish was in favour of the wife's right of survivorship, and the dicta of Lord Hardwicke by no means assisted the case of the assignee. As applied to the question before him, the Master of the Rolls was unable to recognise any difference between a particular assignment for valuable consideration, and a general assignment in bankruptcy; and the remarks of Sir W. Grant, in Milford v. Milford, applied to the one case as forcibly as to the other. Woollands v. Croucher, 12 Ves. 177; White v. St. Barbe, 1 Ves. & Beames, 405; Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. 580; and Pickard v. Roberts, 3 Mad. 385, all supported the conclusion to which, after repeated consideration, he arrived, "that all assignments made by the husband of the wife's outstanding personal chattel which was not, or could not be, reduced into possession, whether the assignment were in bankruptcy, or under the Insolvent laws, or to trustees for payment of debts, or to a purchaser for a valuable consideration, passed only the interest which the husband had, subject to the wife's legal right by survivorship." And the doctrine thus laid down has been followed and confirmed in Honner v. Morton, 3 Russ. 65, by Lord Lyndhurst; in Watson v. Dennis, 3 Russ. 90; and in Stamper v. Barker, 5 Madd. 157, by Sir John Leach; and by Lord Cottenham, in Stiffe v. Everitt, 1 Mylne & Cr. 37; and in Bar v. Jackson, the case before us, it is recognised as settled law.

As corollaries from, or as propositions involved in, the above rule, it has been held that,

Where personal property is bequeathed in trust for a person for life, with remainder as to a part, in trust for another person for life, with remainder to a woman who afterwards marries; and after her marriage and the death of the first taker, such property is settled upon her children, in pursuance of articles entered into before her marriage, when she was under age, and then before the property is transferred from the names of the executors of the will into the names of the trustees of the settlement, the husband dies, leaving his wife surviving, the trusts of the settlement do not bind that part to which the wife, at the time of the settlement, was entitled in remainder on the death of the second taker, nor are they binding even on that part to which, at the time of the settlement, the wife was entitled in possession in consequence of the death of the first taker, notwithstanding it might and ought to have been transferred into the names of the trustees of the settlement in the husband's lifetime, and notwithstanding the maxim, that equity looks on that as done which ought to have been done. (Elwin v. Williams, 7 Jur. 337; Ellison v. Elwin, 13 Sim. 309.)

And where a legacy is given to a woman, who afterwards marries, to be paid after the decease of another person, and she and her husband assign the legacy for valuable consideration in the lifetime of that person, and the husband survives such person, but dies leaving his wife surviving, without having reduced the legacy into possession, the assignment is void against the wife. (Ashby v. Ashby, 1 Coll. 553.)

Where, also, personal property is bequeathed upon trust for a person for life, with remainder to a woman who marries and afterwards separates from her husband, and by a deed of separation she assigns part of her reversionary interest to the husband, such assignment is not binding upon her after surviving her husband. (Stamper v. Barker, 5 Madd. 157.)

And where stock is limited by a marriage settlement upon trust for the separate use of the wife during the joint lives of the husband and wife, with remainder, in case she should survive him, upon trust for her, her executors, administrators, and assigns, but in case she should die in his lifetime, upon trust for such persons as she should by will appoint, and in default thereof upon trust for her, her executors, administrators, and assigns, and she executes a bond during the coverture, and survives her husband, it will not bind her property. (Lee v. Muggieridge, 1 Ves. & B. 118.)

Not an exception to the rule which governs all the above cases, but the converse of it, is the case of Ripley v. Woods, 2 Sim. 165; it being there held that where personal property is bequeathed to a married woman, by way of remainder after a life interest in another, and the husband becomes bankrupt, and then the tenant for life dies, and afterwards the wife dies and the husband takes out administration to her, the property cannot be retained by the husband, but belongs to his assignees, because the husband had an incipient right to a chose in action at the time of his bankruptcy, and the event happened on which he was enabled to reduce it into possession.

The reader will not fail to have observed that in Purdew v. Jackson, and in the subsequent case the wife either joined with the husband in the assignment of her reversionary interest to a third person, or, as in Stamper v. Barker, herself signed it to the husband; and that, therefore, the rule is that the husband's assignment, with or without the wife's concurrence, cannot defeat the right of the wife surviving.

2. And this brings us to the question more immediately raised in Bar v. Jackson, whether as a mode of consent on the part of the wife, such as her consent in Court, or after an examination in Court, will induce a Court of Equity to transfer that right which it holds to be otherwise incapable of assignment by the husband, either with or without the wife's concurrence. But that question is well deserving of a separate consideration.

AMERICAN OPINIONS OF THE ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

(From the United States Law Journal.)

Fertile as London is in places and persons of interest to an intelligent foreigner, there are, perhaps, no places more interesting to an American lawyer than the English Courts, and no persons whom he more desires to see than the high functionaries engaged in the administration of the English law.

Perhaps the most striking and noticeable characteristic of the proceedings of the English courts is the rapid and yet not hurried manner in which the business is despatched. There is no confusion, no bustle; but there is no pause. When a case is called on for trial, it must be at once tried or disposed of in some way. You rarely, if ever, see the counsel for one party rise at such a moment, with a pocket full of affidavits, and proceed to read them very much at his leisure, consuming the time of the Court, and keeping the business waiting. "Are you ready for the plaintiff, Brother Sharp?" asks the judge. "Yes, my lord," replies the barrister. "Is the counsel for the defendant ready?" No one answers. "Let a default be entered. Brown v. Smith stands next." And Brown v. Smith is on trial in a moment. The first witness takes the stand. The leader for the plaintiff rises at the same moment, and proceeds to interrogate him briskly and pointedly, and never sits till he is done with him. Meanwhile the junior is taking minutes, and there is no waiting for moving of pens, folding of papers, opening and shutting of tobacco-boxes, chatting with clients or the miscellaneous hangers on of a court-room, or laboriously reducing to writing every syllable uttered by the witness. As soon as the plaintiff's counsel has finished his interrogatories, the defendant's counsel is on his feet, and at work with great vigour; and the instant he concludes, the sharp cry of the usher, "Step down, sir," is uttered, and the witness vanishes in a second, and another takes his place.

The arguments of counsel, whether addressed to the Court on questions of law, or to a jury, are remarkable for brevity and point. There is no wandering from the question at issue, no waste of labour upon irrelevant or inconsequential points, no personalilities, no bombast, no high-flown flourishes of rhetoric, no long-winded and pointless stories, no wearisome iteration and re-iteration of the common-place axioms of the legal profession. Nothing can exceed the summary manner in which motions and questions of law are disposed of. It is the ne plus ultra of dispatch, consistent with thoroughness and accuracy. In citing authorities, a barrister would as soon think of reading the litany as reading the entire case. The book, page, and title of the action is given, and the sentence relied upon read, in general without more, the Court being supposed to recollect the facts, and to be familiar with the reasonings. Of course, at times, you hear the facts stated, but always succinctly and very briefly. The art of condensing into a nutshell a statement of facts which an American lawyer would feel justified in spending half an hour in narrating seems to be perfectly understood, and almost universally practised. The Court are fully awake, and the barristers speak as if the motto were ever in their minds—"Millions are behind us." If you would be impressed with a value of half hours and minutes, spend a day at Westminster-hall.

We are a people of many words, and love sincerely to hear the sound of our own voices, and to enjoy the surprise of discovering with what ease we can string sentences together, and the reputation of having spoken for six hours, or ten hours at one time, and upon a single provocation. In England, however, whether at the bar or in the legislature, it is quite the reverse. The rule seems to be to use as few words as possible, and every one of them to the point.

In respect to elocution and all that comes within the phrase, "manner of speaking," the English bar can claim no superiority over our own, if, indeed, it be not decidedly inferior. An American is surprised to hear so few persons speak what he calls good English. The counsel for the plaintiff addresses the jury with an Irish brogue so thick and rich that you can scarcely understand what he is saying; while his antagonist replies in accents which so clearly indicate the "land o' cakes," that you can almost see its lakes and mountains. The different local dialects of England are not unrepresented, but Yorkshire responds to Devonshire, and Cornwall to Northumberland, and London to all of them, in the course of a single sitting. The gestures, too, are for the most part inelegant and awkward, the language less fluent and ready, the general air more laborious than we are accustomed to observe in our own advocates of the same relative eminence. It would seem, indeed, that very little attention had been given to the cultivation of a good style of speaking, and the utmost unconsciousness on the subject appears to prevail. So long as what he says bears upon the point, and takes the ear of the court or jury, as the case may be, the advocate seems to deem it of comparatively trifling importance how he says it. On he goes, cutting and slashing away at the Queen's English, nominative cases seeking in vain for agreeing verbs, parenthesis within parenthesis, broken sentences remorselessly left to gather up their disjecta membra as they can, but all the while never forgets a fact or point that makes for his own case, or which can be turned to advantage against his adversary. The argument is never lost sight of. With many of our speakers, on the contrary, it would be difficult to collect the fragmentary morsels of argument which float upon the rushing tide of their mellifluous eloquence, and we often feel inclined to repeat, in reference to their efforts, the criticism of the clown, who had read through the dictionary,—"the words are very good, but I don't quite understand the story."

Nor are the bar alone entitled to the credit of brevity and conciseness. The same characteristics distinguish the bench, and in an equally high degree. When the Court takes time to consider, the case is indisputably one of some intricacy. Motions involving the rights and franchises of cities, boroughs, and gigantic corporations, affecting immense sums of money, determining questions of the deepest public and private interest, and hinging often upon very nice points of technical law, are settled instantly upon the termination of the arguments, and judgment pronounced extemporaneously, and in the fewest possible sentences. No time is taken to draw up diffuse disquisitions upon every single point of law, which may have been mooted in the course of a hearing. Nor is it deemed necessary that the judge, on every occasion, should exercise his learning and attainments by fortifying each successive point, doubtful or not, with a long array of authorities. But he seems to feel that his time belongs to the public, and that he has no right to employ it but in their service. Business presses, and must be done—not talked about, but performed, finished. Great interests always stand waiting; great is the amount of property involved, the number of persons affected, and the legal principles at issue. Expedition, therefore, which is generally a convenience, and sometimes a virtue, is there a necessity. Yet is this expedition attained not by whipping and spurring, not by sharp and brilliant anticipations of what witnesses or counsel could say, not by arbitrarily cutting cases short and summarily silencing remark. The necessities of society, if nothing better, have taught all concerned in the administration of the law their true places and functions, and they seem to conspire harmoniously in effecting the grand results for which laws are made and courts of justice established. The "patience and gravity of hearing" which Bacon commends, his successors well illustrate. The natural consequence is, that they are addressed by the Bar with uniform courtesy and respect, and listened to with marked deference. Business is thus done pleasantly as well as expeditiously; and good temper and good manners may be learned not less than good law. Of course, these remarks are to be understood generally. Particular exceptions doubtless exist, but they do not deserve to be noted, as they do not mar the total impression upon the mind of a stranger.

On the whole, no lawyer can visit the courts of Westminster Hall, and watch the course of business day after day, without being as forcibly impressed with the learning, labour, and ability of the men who fill the high judicial stations of England, as with the magnitude and intrinsic importance of the causes which come before them for decision. Nor can he well depart without feeling that a wise and able administration of the law is one of the chief glories of an enlightened state, and that no expenditure can be deemed excessive which may be necessary to secure the highest character and ability for the performance of the arduous duties of the judge. The English judges have "permanent and honourable salaries," and therefore they are what they are. To the citizen of Massachusetts, the reflection can hardly fail to occur that, in his own state, the amount of judicial compensation is carefully calculated and grudgingly doled out, and the retrenchment of a few hundred dollars in this item of public expenditure is thought to constitute a valid title to public gratitude on the part of its perpetrators. It is, however, somewhat consolatory to know that badly as our judges may be treated, and poorly as they may be paid, the judicial office has thus far fallen upon men of sufficient weight of character to resist these sinister influences, and that nowhere, perhaps, is justice more ably, wisely, uncorruptly, and mercifully administered than in the commonwealth of Massachusetts.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

Her Majesty has appointed the Right Hon. Gilbert Earl of Minto, Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal, to be a member of the Committee of Council to superintend the application of any sums voted by Parliament for the purpose of promoting public education.

The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Seal appointed by the Treaty of Union to be made use of in place of the Great Seal of Scotland, nominating and appointing John Earl of Stair to be keeper of the said Seal.

The Queen has appointed O. Byrne, Esq. to be Surveyor for her Majesty's Settlements in the Falkland Islands.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Edward Strutt, esq. to be one of the Commissioners of Railways, and also President of the said Commissioners.

The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Knight of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto David Pollock, esq. Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay.

The Right Hon. Sir George Grey, Secretary for the Home Department, has appointed R. B. Crowder, esq. Q.C. Recorder of Bristol, in the room of the late Sir Charles Wetherell. The statement that Mr. Romilly, M.P. had received the appointment was erroneous.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

PUNISHMENTS IN THE FRENCH ARMY.—An official report on punishments in the French army, during 1845, contains the following:—Of 334,091 men, comprising the municipal guard and the fire-brigade, such being the effective force of the army, 4,100 men had rendered themselves amenable to punishment, or a proportion of 1 in 84. Of this number 2,987 were sentenced, which gives a proportion of 1 to 112. The number of condemnations to peines afflictives et infamantes, that is to say, death, imprisonment, hard labour, solitary confinement, was 420. Condemnations to peines correctionnelles were 2,567. The peines infamantes inflicted were as 1 to 795. The peines correctionnelles, 1 in 130. Of 90 capital sentences, 85 were commuted by the royal mercy. Of the five who suffered death, one was for the assassination of a Frenchman in France, one for the murder of a Frenchman in Algeria, one for insubordination, in Algeria, and two for acting as spies against the French in Algeria. Among the volunteers the proportion is 1 accused in 27, and 1 condemnation in 35. Among the recruits the proportion is 1 accused in 103, and 1 condemned in 148. Substitutes, 1 accused in 51, and 1 condemnation in 68. In the cavalry, 1 condemnation in 134; in the infantry, 1 in 108. Artillery, 1 in 104; in the engineers 1 in 231. Among the veterans 1 in 177. Among the staff and scholars from military schools not a single case of reprimand. In the fire-brigade at Paris 4 condemnations in 653 men. The municipal guard only had 3 condemnations in an effective corps of 3,158 men. Among the gendarmerie, in 15,000 men there was only one case of reprimand and one condemnation.

The Civil Tribunal of the Seine has just been occupied with an application from the Duchess de Valencay, for a separation de biens from her husband, on the plea that her dowry was in danger from the losses which he had latterly experienced, from having entered into commercial speculations, and which had caused him to incur debts to the amount of nearly 1,000,000*fr.* Up to this time his creditors had refrained from pressing for the payment of their demands, as they had been assured that they would be settled with on the death of the Duchess de Montmorency. As that event had now taken place, law proceedings had become imminent, and it was to secure the dowry of the Duchess de Valencay that the present application was made. M. Baroche, as counsel for the duke, stated that the position of that nobleman was excellent, and that it would be still more so at a future day, and that consequently the dowry of his wife was not exposed to the slightest danger. His debts, added the counsel, had been much exaggerated, and he had no reason to fear any legal proceedings. The tribunal, after due deliberation, gave judgment in favour of the demand of the duchess.

NEW POLICE COURT AT CLAPHAM.—A new police court is in the course of being erected in Larkhall-lane, Clapham; hitherto the police charges have been taken to Wandsworth.

THE NEW RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS.—By the second clause of the Act just printed (9 and 10 Vict. c. 105), the powers now vested in the Board of Trade respecting railways are to be transferred to the new commissioners "from and after the day which shall be so specified in the London Gazette as the day on which the said commissioners shall begin to act in execution of this Act."

Mr. W. Cole, formerly an attorney at London, died in Norfolk Castle, last week, in his 90th year. He was committed to prison for debt in January 1830, and remained there till the time of his death, never having been out of the walls of the prison sixteen years and eight months.

SUING A PASHA.—The Gazette des Tribunaux states that a cause was called on before the First Court of the Department of the Seine at Paris, on Friday week, in which his Highness Mehemet Ali, Pasha of Egypt, was defendant. It appeared from the pleadings that the Egyptian Government had engaged M. Solon, a former councillor of the Prefecture at Paris, to organize an academy of public administration in the city of Cairo. This project met with violent opposition from the Ulemas, and was, consequently, abandoned. M. Solon, on his return to France, cited Artim Bey, the representative of the Egyptian Government, before the courts of law. M. Solon demanded an indemnity of 90,000*fr.* and 12,000*fr.* for his travelling expenses. No person appeared for the Pasha of Egypt, and the Court condemned Artim Bey by default to pay to M. Solon the sum of 102,000*fr.*

STATISTICS OF PAUPER LUNATICS.—From a Parliamentary document, just printed, it seems that in January last there were as many as 16,310 lunatics and idiots chargeable in England, and 1,205 in Wales, making, with an estimate of 373 for places not in union with parishes, 17,887; of which number 9,719 were lunatics, and 8,175 idiots. The number in county asylums in England was 4,675; in licensed houses, 3,363; and in union workhouses, 4,397; whilst 3,873 were with their friends or elsewhere. In England 5 were under 5 years old, 61 from 5 to 10, 940 from 10 to 20, 3,158 from 20 to 30, 3,689 (the largest number) from 30 to 40, 3,584 from 40 to 50, 2,583 from 50 to 60, 1,575 from 60 to 70, and 699 from 70 years old and upwards. Of the 16,310 lunatics and idiots in England, 4,244 were dangerous to themselves or others.

BRITISH MUSEUM, NATIONAL GALLERY, &c.—The number of visitors to the British Museum during the years 1843, 4, and 5, has been as follows:—To the general collection, in 1843, 517,440; 1844, 576,758; 1845, 685,614. To the reading-room, 1843, 70,931; 1844, 67,511; 1845, 64,427. To the galleries of sculpture, 1843, 4,907; 1844, 5,436; 1845, 4,256. To the print-room, 1843, 8,162; 1844, 8,998; 1845, 5,904. For scientific and other purposes, on private days, 1843, 2,878; 1844, 2,823; 1845, 3,630. The number of visitors to the National Gallery in 1843 was 456,105; 1844, 681,945; 1845, 696,245. To the Tower there were, in 1843, 42,903; 1844, 43,948; 1845, 48,923. Hampton Court Palace, 1843, 176,334; 1844, 159,760; 1845, 160,791. The sum expended in the purchase of pictures for the National Gallery, up to the present time, is 114,804*l.* 16*s.*

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The volumes of the LAW TIMES, neatly, strongly, and uniformly bound, for 5*s.* 6*d.* each, with the name and address of the owner on the cover, 1*s.* extra, if sent to the office. If the numbers for binding be transmitted by the post, they must be tied in a parcel open at the ends, and contain some distinguishing mark by which it may be recognised, of which the publisher should be advised by letter and directed how he shall return the bound volume. Advantage may be taken of the same parcel to enclose other books for binding.

The numbers comprising the first volume of the VERULAM REPORTS of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases may also be transmitted for binding in like manner.

INDEX TO THE LAW.

The LAW DIGEST for the half-year ending Jan. 1 is now ready. It forms a complete Index to the Law decided during the half-year, and contains upwards of 2,000 cases. Price 5s. 6d. in a wrapper. Being stamped, it can be transmitted by post.

To Readers and Correspondents.

We cannot insert, or notice in any way, any communication that is sent to us anonymously; but those who choose to address us in confidence will find their confidence respected. NEITHER CAN WE UNDERTAKE TO RETURN ANY MANUSCRIPTS WHATSOEVER.

X. Y. Z.—We have not leisure for the search; if our correspondent has not the back Nos. of the LAW TIMES at command, he may easily get a sight of them at the office of some professional brother in his neighbourhood.

M. C. D. L. (Manchester).—We have again addressed our short-hand writer on the subject of the case alluded to; and he replies that the judgment certainly may have escaped him, but that he will apply to the proper quarter, procure and forward to the gentleman whose duty it is to appraise the argument with all practicable despatch.

P. R. A.—Had the communication not been so very long, we should willingly have given place to it; we commenced abridging it, but found they could not be done without nullifying the effect, and destroying the value, of the letter.

A. SUBSCRIBER (Bristol).—If our correspondent will refer to the LAW TIMES, No. 171 (for 11th July last), he will find that the unprofessional and even impudent circular to which he alludes has there been given, with caution to the profession not to be entrapped by it. Were the parties attorneys, we could shame them into propriety; as it is, we will consider if any and what steps can be taken to put an end to such audacious interference with the rights of the legitimate attorney.

G. M. (Leeds) will see that the space we can afford to such a subject is this week preoccupied. Attention, however, shall be given to his wishes in our next number.

H. H. B. (London).—The letter, though serviceable in parts, contains too much of personal history to be available.

SOLICITOR (Bradford).—The circular forwarded has already been commented on in this journal; and as another party has also complained of it, we have returned to it, as our correspondent will perceive, in this number.

THE SMALL DEBTS BILL.

The subject of most engrossing interest at present, and which, therefore, first demands our attention, is the above-named Bill. A reference to the clauses we have found space for in this number (the remainder shall follow with all possible despatch) will inform the reader that the Act does not come into immediate and universal operation, but when and where only the Privy Council shall determine—first giving a month's notice of their intention in the London Gazette. Nor can its machinery be put in motion at all until the rules of practice and forms of procedure for the Court shall have been framed and settled by the judges. We may, therefore, assume that none of these courts will be constituted for some weeks to come, consequently writs may be issued and debts recovered as hitherto, until these requirements have been fulfilled. It would seem from this deliberate mode of proceeding, and from the fact that the Act will only be extended to separate and perhaps remote districts at first, that its framers were not without misgivings as to its working, and that, after all, the scheme is but a tentative one, to be patched and "amended" (as the expression goes) hereafter, as circumstances may require.

One of the novel features of this Bill is the division of the country into districts for the several courts irrespective of the boundaries of counties; and the direction of writs will disregard these limits and include the whole of the division belonging to the Court, even though it extend over two or more counties. This, among other provisions, is likely to give rise to much uncertainty and litigation.

The enactment that a judge shall not practise in the district wherein his court is situate, with the exception of recorders of certain cities and towns which are named, or as conveyancers, though it met, as might have been expected, an opposition in the daily journals by the Bar, was as necessary as it is proper. But the delegation of authority to the judge, empowering him to appoint treasurers, clerks, and high bailiffs to his court (all of whom must be attorneys), subject only to the approval of the Lord Chancellor—an exception that practically goes for nothing—we think perilous and undesirable, and could have wished to see this patronage confided to a higher, and less likely to be influenced, official.

In preference to commenting, however, on clauses which must have a trial, and making objections to them, which cannot at this time be productive of benefit, we think it best to give summarily, for the information of such of our readers as the Act has not reached, a glance at such of the most prominent features of this Act, as the clauses we have been enabled to insert this week does not comprehend.

First—,with regard to the jurisdiction of the Court, all suits must be by plaint; and summonses may issue from the court, though the cause of action may not have arisen in the district appertaining to it. Creditors may not divide any cause of action for the purpose of bringing two or more suits in these courts; but a plaintiff having cause of action for more than 20l. may abandon the excess in order to bring the cause into this court. This is an important privilege, and one which, if the law works well, will no doubt be largely turned to account when the excess is not large, as the costs in this court are extremely small. When parties require it, actions may be tried by a jury of five, on deposit of five shillings for the payment of such jury.

The courts will be held at such places within the district allotted to it, as shall be appointed by an order in council; and their jurisdiction embrace all actions of debt or damage up to twenty pounds, whether on balance of account or otherwise, with the exception, among others, of actions of ejectment, or involving title, for malicious prosecution, or for libel, slander, criminal conversation, seduction, or breach of promise of marriage. The provision admitting the recovery of twenty pounds on balance of account, it will be seen, opens the door to the trial of most important and heavy causes, since a balance of less than twenty pounds on a running or heavy account, of some hundreds, may involve inquiries of a very intricate nature.

Under this Act minors may sue for wages, and one of two or more persons jointly liable may be selected for suit. No evidence is to be given that is not in the summons; but parties to the action, their wives, and all other persons may be examined, and their evidence is admissible. Suits may be settled by arbitration, as heretofore. No actions may be removed into superior courts, unless the debt or damage exceed five pounds, and then only by leave of a judge of one of the superior courts. Orders for payment of debt and costs by instalments may be made by a judge of this court, who is armed with power to commit for contempt as well as fraud. Possession of small tenements may be recovered by plaint, and the landlord, having a lawful title, shall not be deemed a trespasser by reason of irregularity. Lastly, we may state, that by section 129, it is enacted that at the option of the party suing all actions and proceedings which, prior to the passing of the Act, might have been brought in one of the superior Courts of Record, when the plaintiff lives more than twenty miles from the defendant, or when the cause of action did not arise within the jurisdiction of the court wherein the defendant dwells, may still be brought and determined in such superior court, thereby giving a power for concurrent jurisdiction, though not to the extent required by the deputation from the meeting of Solicitors at the Gray's Inn Coffee-house.

We have now particularized the most prominent features of this important Act; and in concluding our necessarily brief and imperfect notice of it, must candidly say, that, though it has been framed with any thing but liberality towards the heavily taxed body of Attorneys, it is a measure framed with excellent intentions, and calculated, with all its imperfections, to supply a want which has long pressed heavily upon the tradesmen of this country. It is impossible to foresee the full extent of the change this Act will eventually bring about in the economy of the Profession; whether, by means of it, Barristers, losing something of practice in the superior courts, may resort more to the provinces, or whether the Attorneys will not be almost the sole advocates who attend these courts.

SHAM LAWYERS.

AMONG the many who earn an unenviable subsistence by recovering debts without the authority of an attorney's certificate, and harassing and frightening simple people into payment of whatever may be demanded of them, is one Mr. DARLEY, of Stockport. Sometimes, we understand, his applications are issued in his own name, and sometimes as deputy for a Mr. FRAS. DICKIN, whose name we do not find in the Law List, and who, probably, is like Mrs. GAMP's friend, the notable Mrs. HARRIS—a personage who exists only in the imagination. At any rate, the proceedings of Mr. DARLEY are most irregular, and we warn him not to render himself in future obnoxious to the punishment which will visit him, if he persists in the course—we are advised he has now for some time followed. The following is one of Mr. DARLEY's menaces:—

Office, 179, Chestergate, Brinksway, Stockport, August 19, 1846.

SIR,—I am instructed by Mr. John Bradburn, to apply to you for the money you owe to him. And unless the same, together with the costs of this application, be paid into my hands on or before Saturday next, by twelve o'clock at noon, I shall issue a writ against you without farther notice.

I am, yours, &c.

One Mr. KING GENN, of Cambridge, has taken upon himself the duties of an Attorney. We do not find his name in the last Law List, and have been assured that the party to whom the application for payment of the debt was made, never contracted the debt nor had a lever watch in his life. We publish Mr. GENN's letter.

A firm at Islington, whose neatly lithographed circular, announcing their readiness to undertake the conduct in town of the miscellaneous business of an Attorney's office, "which is at present conducted by the agents in London, at one-third the usual fees," we published in No. 171, July 11th, we find continue their practice of soliciting employment in the irregular manner we then censured. The distinction they have to observe between the strictly professional duties of an Attorney and those which may be discharged by a stock-broker or other agent, is so nice, that in the complexity of business transactions they will probably not always be vigilant enough to observe it. The first oversight of this nature they make, and which may reach us, shall assuredly be visited with that condign punishment which it deserves, and the recent narrow escape of OSBORNE should caution them to avoid.

LAW TIMES EDITION OF IMPORTANT STATUTES.

THE Edition of the Small Debts Act, by Mr. PATERSON, announced in our last and preceding numbers, with a careful Analysis and copious Index, is in forward preparation, and will be ready about the close of the week.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

The Law of Extradition, comprising the Treaties now in force, &c. By CHARLES EGAN, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London: Robinson.

By the term Extradition is meant the arrangements made between nations for the mutual surrender, in certain cases, of persons fugitive from justice. It is a branch of law very ill understood by the Profession, and upon which information is difficult to be obtained when required. Mr. EGAN has, therefore, entitled himself to thanks for the publication of a little treatise, in which the entire subject is handled with much research and acumen. It comprises the treaties now in force between England and France, and England and America, with the recent enactments, and decisions thereon.

Mr. EGAN has added to the value of his work by the addition of some commentaries, pointing out the defects of that law as at present recognised, and its entire unfitness for the altered circumstances of society, with the rapid growth of facilities for locomotion.

The authorities differ upon the question whether the surrender of criminals by one civilized state to another, be an international duty. But all agree that the case of rendition must be one where the act done is equally a crime in both states. STORY contends that it is only a matter of comity.

In such a case of difference, it is most desirable that friendly nations should frame treaties upon the subject, by which any questions of right and duty may be avoided. Accordingly, those with whom we hold the most frequent communication, namely, France and America, have entered into formal arrangements with Great Britain, for the mutual surrender of fugitive criminals, greatly to the convenience of both the parties to the treaty. That with America was concluded in 1842; that with France in 1848.

The article in the American treaty is the 10th, and runs thus:—

Art. 10.—It is agreed that her Britannic Majesty and the United States shall, upon mutual requisitions by them or their ministers, officers, or authorities, respectively made, deliver up to justice all persons who, being charged with the crime of murder, or assault with intent to commit murder, or piracy, or arson, or robbery, or forgery, or the utterance of forged paper, committed within the jurisdiction of either, shall seek an asylum, or shall be found within the territories of the other:—provided that this shall only be done upon such evidence of criminality as, according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial, if the crime or offence had there been committed; and the respective judges and other magistrates of the two governments shall have power, jurisdiction, and authority, upon complaint made under oath, to issue a warrant for the apprehension of the fugitive or person so charged, that he may be brought before such judges or other magistrates, respectively, to the end that the evidence of criminality may be heard and considered; and if, on such hearing, the evidence be deemed sufficient to sustain the charge, it shall be the duty of the examining judge or magistrate to certify the same to the proper executive authority, that a warrant may issue for the surrender of such fugitive. The expense of such apprehension and delivery shall be borne and defrayed by the party who makes the requisition and receives the fugitive.

The Treaty with France is in the following terms. We extract the translation, or rather the English version of the duplicate treaty:—

Convention between her Majesty and the King of the French, for the mutual surrender, in certain cases, of persons fugitive from justice. Signed at London, February 13, 1843. (Ratifications exchanged at London, March 13, 1843.)

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and his Majesty the King of the French, having judged it expedient, with a view to the better administration of justice, and to the prevention of crime within their respective territories and jurisdictions, that persons charged with the crimes hereinafter enumerated, and being fugitives from justice, should, under certain circumstances be reciprocally delivered up:—

Their said Majesties have named as their Plenipotentiaries to conclude a Convention for this purpose, that is to say:—

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Right Honourable George Earl of Aberdeen, Viscount Gordon, Viscount Foranish, Lord Uxbridge, Methuen, Tansley, and Kellie, a Peer of the United Kingdom, a Member of her Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, Knight of the most ancient and most noble order of the Thistle, and her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs;—

And his Majesty the King of the French, the Sieur Louis de Beaupol, Count of St. Aulaire, a Peer of France, Grand Officer of the Royal Order of the Legion of Honour, Grand Cross of the Order of Leopold of Belgium, his Ambassador Extraordinary to her Britannic Majesty;—

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded the following Articles:—

Art. 1.—It is agreed that the High Contracting Parties shall, on requisitions made in their name through the medium of their respective diplomatic agents, deliver up to justice persons who, being accused of the crimes of murder (comprehending the crimes designated in the French Penal Code by the terms assassination, parricide, infanticide, and poisoning) or of an attempt to commit murder, or of forgery, or of fraudulent bankruptcy, committed within the jurisdiction of the requiring Party, shall seek an asylum, or shall be found within the territories of the other:—provided that this shall be done only when the commission of the crime shall be so established, as that the laws of the country where the fugitive or person so accused, shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial, if the crime had been there committed.

Consequently, on the part of the French Government, the surrender shall be made only by the authority of the Keeper of the Seals, Minister of Justice, and after the production of a warrant of arrest or other equivalent judicial document, issued by a judge, or other competent authority, in Great Britain, clearly setting forth the acts for which the fugitive shall have rendered himself accountable;—and on the part of the British Government, the surrender shall be made only on the report of a judge or magistrate duly authorized to take cognizance of the acts charged against the fugitive in the warrant of arrest or other equivalent judicial document, issued by a judge or competent magistrate in France, and likewise clearly setting forth the said acts.

Art. 2.—The expenses of any detention and surrender made in virtue of the preceding Article, shall be borne and defrayed by the Government in whose name the requisition shall have been made.

Art. 3.—The provisions of the present Convention shall not apply in any manner to crimes of murder, forgery, or fraudulent bankruptcy committed antecedently to the date thereof.

Art. 4.—The present Convention shall be in force until the 1st of January, 1844, after which date either of the High Contracting Parties shall be at liberty to give notice to the other of its intention to put an end to it; and it shall altogether cease and determine at the expiration of six months from the date of such notice.

Art. 5.—The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at London at the expiration of three weeks from its date, or sooner if possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seals of their arms.

Done at London, the thirteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-three.

(L.S.) ABERDEEN.

(L.S.) ST. AULAIRE.

It being considered that these treaties could not be legally enforced in England without violating the common law, two statutes were passed, namely, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 75, providing for rendition of criminals to France, and c. 76 of the same year, making a similar provision for American fugitives; which latter was amended by another statute of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 120.

Mr. EGAN then proceeds to review the cases that have occurred relative to the law of Extradition since these treaties have been in operation; the principal of which is Reg. v. Clinton, extracted from the LAW TIMES.

The following suggestion has our hearty concurrence:—

We would also suggest the propriety of Extradition conventions being entered into with Belgium, Holland, Austria, Prussia, and indeed, as far as possible, with every other civilized power; for, to use the language of an able and distinguished writer—

"In the whole extent of political states, there should be no place independent of the laws:—their power should follow every subject, as the shadow follows the body; sanctuaries and impunity differ only in degree; and, as the effects of punishments depend more on their certainty than their greatness, men are more strongly invited to crime by sanctuaries than they are deterred by punishment. To increase the number of sanctuaries, therefore, is to erect so many little sovereignties; for where the laws have no power, new wrongs will be formed in opposition to the public good, and a spirit established contrary to the welfare of the state."

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

A PRACTICAL COMMENTARY

ON

THE LAW OF CONTRACTS RELATING TO REAL PROPERTY.

By WILLIAM HUGHES, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

When an estate tail will arise by implication.—In the case of a devise of real property, an estate tail may sometimes arise by implication, without any words of express devise. One of the instances in which this construction has been allowed has been where a testator devised his lands to a third party, in case a person who was his heir-at-law should die without issue (Dy. 330; Walter v. Drew, Com. 372), or without heirs (Goodridge v. Goodridge, Willes, 369); in which case the heir was held to take an estate tail by implication, and the limitation over was considered good as a contingent remainder. But this rule had no application where the devise over was in case a stranger should die without heirs, or issue, unless he takes some preceding estate under the will (Gardiner v. Sheldon, Vaugh. 259; S. C. 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 179, pl. 6); and limitation over must have failed in the latter instance, as being an executory devise to take effect after an indefinite failure of issue. But with respect to wills made subsequently to 1838, as the 29th section of the new Act confines the dying without to the death of the party, the heir would not take an estate tail, but an estate in fee-simple, subject to a limitation over, by way of executory devise, which would now be good; the failure of issue under the construction of the above statute being restricted to the lifetime of a person in being. But it seems that the statute will not apply when the devise over is in case the heir should die without heirs, which would equally have raised the implication of an estate tail, as a limitation over, in case he should die without issue, would have done (Goodridge v. Goodridge, Willes, 369); because the Act confines itself to the terms "dying without issue," which it limits to the death of the party, unless a contrary intention appears by reason of his having a prior estate tail or of a preceding gift, being without any implication arising from such words, a limitation of an estate tail to such person or issue, or otherwise; neither of which occurs in the instance of a limitation over in case a party should die without heirs; consequently, it seems that a devise in the latter terms would receive the same construction now which it would have done previously to the passing of the Act.

Cross remainders.—Cross remainders between tenants in tail may also be ranked under the head of estates tail arising by implication without any direct words of devise. This happens when lands are given in undivided shares to two or more for particular estates, as a devise to A, B, and C, as tenants in common in tail, and for want of such issue to his testator's own right heirs; in which case the testator's intention would be construed to be, that the property should be enjoyed by A, B, and C, and their issue, as long as there shall be any such, and that on the death of either of the tenants in tail without issue, his share would go over to the survivors, so that nothing shall go over to the testator's heirs till after the determination of all the estates tail. In such case A, B, and C, take their original shares as tenants in common, and the remainders limited to them on the determination of the particular estates are known by the name of cross remainders. It has been said that as between two there is a stronger presumption in favour of cross remainders than between more persons, but no such distinction in reality exists: for cross remainders will not be raised between two unless an intention to that effect can be collected; and when that can be done, the same construction will apply equally to a greater number. (Dy. 30; Wright v. Holford, Cow. 31; Phippard v. Mansfield, Cow. 797). And notwithstanding it seems formerly to have been considered that the word "respective," or any word of similar import, was sufficient to repel the implication of cross remainders (Comber v. Hill, Str. 969; Williams v. Brown, ib. 996; Davenport v. Oldis, 1 Atk. 579; Perry v. White, Cow. 777), this doctrine has been since exploded, and it is now settled that the words "respectively," or "several and respective," or other words of similar import, are insufficient to prevent the implication of cross remainders. (Watson v. Foxon, 2 East, 36; Staunton v. Peck, 2 Cox, 8; Doe dem. v. Webb, 1 Taunt. 234; Green v. Stephens, 12 Ves. 419; 17 ib. 64). But in all the instances in which cross remainders have been raised by implication, the parties, though they took distinct shares, yet they all took them in the same property; for if a testator were to devise separate estates, as Blackacre to A, Whiteacre to B, and Greenacre to C, and afterwards to limit them over on all the devisees dying without issue, as the subject-matters of the devise would in that case be distinct and several, no cross remainders would be implied between them. (Gilbert v. Wilby, Cro. Jac. 655; S. C. Carth. 172; Cole v. Levingston, 1 Vent. 224; see also Holmes v. Meynel, 2 Roll. 1102; S. C. T. Jones, 172.)

Joint tenants and tenants in common.—The creation of an estate in joint tenancy, or in common, depends upon the particular wording of the instrument under which the tenant claims. In wills the construction is governed by the intent, and the leaning of the courts at the present day being against a joint tenancy, though formerly it was otherwise, they have allowed words to import a tenancy in common, which in a common law conveyance would have created an estate in joint tenancy. Thus, where the will contains any expressions importing a division, as equally to be divided (King v. Rumball, Cro. Jac. 448; Blisset v. Cranwell, 3 Lev. 371; Bolger v. Mackell, 5 Ves. 510); or to two or more equally (Lewin v. Cox, Cro. Eliz. 693; Loveacree v. Blight, Cow. 352; Denn v. Gaskin, ib. 957); or equally amongst them (ib. ib.); or part and part alike (Heath v. Heath, 2 A. R. 121); or "share and share alike" (Campbell v. Campbell, 4 Bro. C. C. 15); or "respectively" (Ferret v. Frampton, Sty. 434); or any other words which demonstrate an intention that the devisees shall take as tenants in common will create that estate (Eltrecke v. Eltrecke, Amb. 656; Sheppard v. Gibbons, 2 Atk. 444; Perkins v. Baynton, 1 Bro. C. C. 118). Still for all this, unless there are some expressions in the will by which it can be made apparent that the testator contemplated a tenancy in common, the general rule of legal construction must prevail; consequently, a simple devise to persons will make them joint tenants, and this whether it be a devise of real property or a bequest of personal estate. (Anon. Cro. Eliz. 131; Davis v. Kemp, Carth. 4; S. C. 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 207, pl. 7; Shore v. Billingsley, 1 Vern. 482; Webster v. Webster, 2 P. Wps. 347; Willing v. Baine, 3 ib. 113; Barnes v. Allen, 1 Bro. C. C. 181; Campbell v. Campbell, 4 ib. 15; Morley v. Bird, 3 Ves. 629; Stuart v. Bruce, ib. 632; Whitmore v. Trelawny, 6 ib. 129; Crooke v. De Vandes, 9 ib. 204; Doe dem. Young v. Sotherton, 2 B. & Ad. 628.)

As to executory trusts.—In the case of executory bequests, however, the construction would be otherwise; for there the Court will not direct a joint tenancy unless it is apparent on the face of the will that such was the testator's intention. (Marryatt v. Townley, 1 Ves. sen. 102.) And even where a testator has used the words "joint tenants," yet if an estate of that kind would be inconsistent with the general object of his will, the Court in decreeing a settlement would direct a conveyance to the parties as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. Thus, where trustees were directed, as soon as the testator's daughters attained their respective ages of twenty-one, to convey to the heirs of their bodies, as joint tenants, and for want of such issue over, Lord Hardwicke decreed that the conveyance should be made to the daughters as tenants in common, with cross remainders between them, which he thought was the best mode of giving effect to the words. (Marryatt v. Townley, sup.)

When words importing a division will not create a tenancy in common.—Notwithstanding that a devise in words importing a division will, generally speaking, create a tenancy in common, yet this rule only prevails where the will contains no words to negative that intention; for where it has appeared that it was the intention of the testator that the share of any of the devisees should survive, an estate in joint tenancy has been held to pass, in order to carry out that intent, although words may have been employed which would otherwise have created a tenancy in common. (Barker v. Giles, 2 Ploms. 280; Tuckerman v. Jefferies, Holt, 370; S. C. 11 Mod. 108; Frewin v. Relfe, 2 Bro. C. C. 220; Armstrong v. Eldridge, 4 ib. 215.) Still, if there is an express gift to the survivor, the construction may be otherwise, as a tenancy with a benefit of a survivorship is a case which may exist without being a joint tenancy, because survivorship is not the only characteristic of a joint tenancy. (Doe dem. v. Abey, 1 Mau. & Selw. 128; see also Blisset v. Cranwell, 1 Salk. 226; Stones v. Hewitly, 1 Ves. jun. 165; Cripps v. Wolcott, 4 Mad. 11.)

On contingent remainders, conditional limitations, and executory devises.—In perusing an abstract, it will also be requisite to keep the distinctions between contingent remainders, conditional limitations, and executory devises constantly in mind.

Of the distinction between contingent remainders and conditional limitations.—A contingent remainder may be defined as an estate in remainder preceded by a previous estate of freehold, limited to take effect to a dubious and uncertain person, as to the eldest son of A, then unborn; or to the right heir of B, who is then still living; or upon an uncertain or dubious event, as to A for life, and in case B survives him, then with remainder to B for life, in tail or in fee, the very instant of its determination.

Distinction between a contingent remainder and a conditional limitation.—A conditional limitation renders it necessary that some act should be done, or that some event which will not certainly happen should take place before the limitation is to take effect, and which, when it occurs, has the effect of rescinding or destroying the preceding existing estate, and vesting the property in the party claiming under the condition. In this latter respect it differs materially from an estate in remainder, which, whether vested or contingent, never takes effect in abridgment of the preceding estate, but always awaits its original and regular determination. This distinction is very ably and accurately pointed out by Mr. Fearn in his valuable essay on contingent remainders, where he says (p. 14), "The true point of distinction, as I take it, between such conditional limitations over as are, and such as are not remainders in the strict sense of that word, lies here; the former are limited to commence where the first estate is, by the very nature and extent of its original limitation, to expire or determine; whereas the latter are limited so as to be independent of the measure or extent originally given to the first estate, and to take effect in possession upon an event which may happen before the regular determination to which that first estate is liable from the nature of its original limitation, and so as to rescind it. And in the latter case I apprehend it is the same thing, whether the whole is disposed of in the first limitation, or not. Thus, if I limit an estate to the use of A for life, or to the use of A indefinitely, provided that, when C returns from Rome, it shall thenceforth immediately be to the use of B in fee; here the first estate is an estate for the life of A (not an estate limited only till C's return); the remainder, therefore, of the whole fee in this case is what remains expectant on the determination of A's life estate, by such events as a life estate is liable to be determined by; and therefore, when, after such a limitation to A, I limit to the use of B till C's return to Rome, and so take up and make such new estate to commence and take effect in possession, not from any regular determination of the estate before limited to A (his estate being for life, and not merely until C's return from Rome), but from an event which may happen sooner, it is evident this limitation to the use of B is not confined to the remnant of the estate expectant on the particular estate before given to A, but may eventually interfere with, and in part repeal and defeat that first estate, instead of awaiting its final expiration or determination; and therefore it does not fall within the above definition of a remainder. But limitations of this nature are properly termed conditional limitations, to distinguish them, on the one hand, from conditions, of which only the grantor or his heir can take advantage, and, on the other, from remainders, in the strict and proper sense of the word, as above defined. And though these conditional limitations are not valid at common law, yet within certain limits they are good in wills and conveyances to uses."

Difference between an executory devise and a contingent remainder.—An executory devise differs from a contingent remainder in five essential particulars: 1st, because it is admitted only in wills, whereas a contingent remainder is admitted both in wills and deeds; 2nd, that an executory devise does not require any particular estate of freehold to support it, which is absolutely necessary to the existence of a contingent remainder; 3rd, that an estate by way of executory devise may be limited after an estate in fee-simple, which a contingent remainder cannot be; 4th, that as an executory devise does not, like a contingent remainder, require any particular estate to support it, it may be limited to commence in futuro, or by way of remainder expectant upon a term of years; 5th, that as the person who is to take under an executory devise has not a present but a future interest, his estate cannot be barred or destroyed by any alteration in the estate out of which, or after which, it is limited.

How contingent remainders might have been destroyed.—As it was necessary that a contingent remainder should be supported by a preceding particular estate of freehold, if that particular estate determined, the remainder determined also. Therefore, where there was tenant for life, with divers contingent remainders, he might not only by his death, but also by alienation, surrender, or other methods, have destroyed and determined his own life estate before any of those remainders became vested. As, for example: suppose A, tenant for life, with remainder to his eldest son unborn in tail, and A, before any son was born, had surrendered his life estate, he would thereby have defeated the remainder in tail to his son; for his son not being in esse when the particular estate determined, the remainder could not then vest; and as it could not vest then, it could never, according to the rules before laid down, have vested at all. This caused the introduction of trustees to preserve contingent remainders in settlements of real property, in whom the estate becomes vested in remainder for the life of the tenant for life to commence when his determines. If, therefore, his estate determines otherwise than by his death, the estate of the trustees for the residue of his natural life will take effect, and become a particular estate in possession sufficient to support the remainders depending in

Recent enactments respecting executory devises and contingent remainders.—Formerly, contingent remainders were looked upon in a more favourable point of view than executory devises; the rule of construction being that whenever a future interest was capable of taking effect as a contingent remainder, it should never take effect as an executory devise. (Purfoy v. Rogers, 2 Saund. 380; Walter v. Drew, Com. 372; Wealthy v. Bosville, Rep. temp. Hardw. 258; Carwardine v. Carwardine, in Chan. 8 Jan. 1758; cited Fearnie, C. R. 388; S. C. 1 Eden, 27; Tennyson v. Agar, 12 East, 253; Doe dem. Cholmondeley (Earl and Countess of) v. Masey, ib. 589, 604; Phillips v. Deakin, 1 Mau. & Selw. 744.) But latterly, contingent remainders appeared to have been looked upon less favourably, and a recent Act of Parliament (7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, s. 8) actually went so far as to convert them all into executory devises. This singular legal metamorphosis which, during its ephemeral existence, excited no small amazement amongst the Profession, was, however, repealed in the following session, by statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, but by the 8th section of which a very proper provision is made for protecting contingent remainders against the premature failure of the preceding particular estate. It is shortly as follows:—"That a contingent remainder, existing at any time after the 31st day of December, 1844, shall be, and if created before the passing of this Act, shall be deemed to have been, etc. capable of taking effect, notwithstanding the determination, by forfeiture, surrender, or merger, of any preceding estate of freehold in the same manner, in all respects, as if such determination had not happened."

THE WILL OF LORD CARBERY, late of Castle Freke, Ross Carbery, in Ireland, and of Laxton-hall, Northamptonshire, and of Belgrave-square, Middlesex, has just been proved in London upon the sentence of the Prerogative Court. The personal estate in England, within the province of Canterbury, was valued at 90,000*l.* His lordship from illness, and at his advanced age, having reached his 80th year, was unable to sign his name and title to his will, which was executed by procuration by the Very Rev. H. Newman, M.A. Dean of Cork, in his lordship's presence, and at his special direction, and in the presence of witnesses, on the 26th of April, 1845; his lordship died on the 19th of May following. The executors are, his relict Lady Carbery, and the Rev. J. Stopford, of Abbey Ville, Cork, and the Rev. J. Freke, of Kelscoe, Skibbereen, Ireland. He leaves to Lady Carbery the rents of his estates in England and Ireland for her life, and then to his nephew, G. E. Freke, eldest son of his late brother, P. E. Freke, who is to be permitted to occupy Castle Freke and Laxton-hall, and to receive 4,000*l.* a year, and increased to 5,000*l.* on marriage. The estates are entailed on his issue. Lady Carbery possesses a power of disposition over 6,000*l.* by will or otherwise, and to her is left the picture of Viscountess Sudley. The plate, jewels, books, and pictures, at Ross Carbery and Castle Freke to be held as heir looms with the Irish estates. The plate, books, jewels, pictures, prints, and paintings in England, together with the ring which was given by Queen Anne to G. Evans, who was created Lord Carbery in 1715, to be held and enjoyed as heir looms with the mansion-house of Laxton-hall. The possessor of his estates to obtain the royal licence to use the name and arms of Freke. Leaves to his nephews, P. E. Freke and F. E. Freke, 5,000*l.* each, from his estates in Ireland, on the demise of Lady Carbery; also legacies of 1,000*l.* each to other nephews at the same period. Immediate annuities, varying from 300*l.* to 500*l.* also to nephews; and to the Rev. J. Stopford, an executor, a legacy of 500*l.* Legacies to his steward, head gardener, and to his household servants. Directs that Castle Freke shall be the principal family seat and residence of the inheritor of his estates, who shall reside there at least four months in the year, with a suitable establishment, or he shall expend 2,000*l.* in each year he so neglects to reside thereon, to be laid out in the improvement of the estates. His seat in the cathedral church of Ross Carbery is to be kept in becoming repair, and leaves 1,000*l.* for the improvement of the church at Laxton. Any claimant of his estates becoming papist, or Roman Catholic, or shall intermarry with a Roman Catholic, their interest therein shall cease and determine, and go to the next in remainder, provided such party is a Protestant. The residue is left under the same trusts as the freeholds.

It is stated in the report that "the extravagant expenditure in England in buying off powerful landowners from whom opposition was anticipated, and in the proceedings before obtaining acts, no doubt swelled very much the outlay on many of the English lines."

The late Sir Charles Wetherell died intestate. Search for a will has been made without success at the residences of the deceased, in Berkeley-square, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's-inn, and Old House, Sussex. The personal funded property is estimated at upwards of 200,000*l.* principally invested in Venetian, Chile, and other foreign stock; and there being no surviving children, one-half of the same will be Lady Wetherell's share. The remainder will be equally divided among the brothers and sisters of the deceased. The landed and other property is valuable, and goes to the heir-at-law, the Rev. R. Wetherell. It consists of the mansion in Berkeley-square, a leasehold investment, purchased for several thousand pounds, from the Earl of Abergavenny, the residence and chambers in Stone-buildings, where he entertained the King of Hanover on two occasions during his last visit to this country, and lands in Sussex, Surrey, and Kent; the latter about 1,500 acres. For many years Sir Charles took a warm interest in agricultural matters; but on the passing of the Corn Law Repeal Bill, he expressed considerable fears as to its probable effects on the landed interest, and determined upon selling the farms which he possessed; but his fears after a short time subsided, and he resolved not only on retaining them, but on purchasing others; and it was while in the act of carrying out such intention that he met with the accident which in such a short time afterwards terminated fatally. The property in Sussex is situated near East Grinstead, and in Surrey near Chertsey.

Mr. Joseph Locke, the engineer to the London and South-Western Railway Company and the Yeovil line, is said to have become the purchaser of the manor of Honiton, including the whole of the borough. The purchase-money, it is believed, exceeds 80,000*l.*

The Glasgow, Kilmarnock, and Ardrossan Railway Company have recently purchased, for 208,000*l.* Ardrossan Harbour and Railway, from the Earl of Eglinton and other proprietors.

ATTEMPTED SALE OF SOUTHEAST PIER.—On Friday week this pier was put up to auction by Messrs. Shuttleworth and Sons, at the Auction Mart, by order of the Public Works Loan Commissioners, acting under the Act 5 Vict. 2, sec. 9, the commissioners being mortgagees in possession. The length of the pier is one mile and a quarter, and is broken into stages by stands, landings, and platforms, to enable steamboats and other vessels to land and embark passengers, at all periods of the tide. The company possessed the right of fishing and the use of forty bays of the pier for sea-baths, for twenty-five years from the Midsummer 1843, and they were empowered to take at the rate of 3*d.* per day, or 2*s.* per month, from each person, "for the liberty and privilege of walking on the pier." After much competition, the highest price offered was 16,900*l.* when the bidding was stated to be below the reserved sum.

The following scale of charges, reduced more than one-third, has been adopted for Advertisements of Estates for Sale, &c. exceeding 10 lines in length:

For the first 70 words 5*s.*
For every succeeding 30 words . . . 1*s.*

RIGBY v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Specific performance—Covenant—injunction.
A bill having been filed, not seeking the specific performance of an agreement, by which the Great Western Railway Company agreed "that all trains carrying passengers, not being goods trains, or trains to be sent express or for special purposes, and except trains not under the control of the company, which should pass the Swindon station, should stop there for refreshment for a reasonable period of about ten minutes," an injunction to restrain the defendants from permitting trains advertised as express trains to pass the Swindon station without stopping, which had been granted, was dissolved, and a case for the opinion of a court of law on the construction of the agreement directed; the defendants being ordered, in the mean time, to keep an account. The plaintiffs' lessees of the station complained of injury to their sub-lessee, who refused himself to institute proceedings.

This was a motion by way of appeal from the order of Vice-Chancellor Wigram, restraining the Great Western Railway Company from permitting their express trains to pass the Swindon station without stopping.

The bill, filed the 10th of May, 1845, stated that by an Act made and passed in the session of Parliament held on the fifth and sixth years of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, entitled "An Act for making a Railway from Bristol to join the London and Birmingham Railway near London, and to be called the Great Western Railway, with Branches therefrom to the Towns of Bradford and Trowbridge, in the County of Wilts," certain persons and their successors were united into a company, and were constituted one body corporate, by the name of the Great Western Railway Company, and that such company are defendants hereto. And that the said railway was some time since completed, and is called the Great Western Railway, and that the same passes through or near Swindon, in the county of Wilts, and that the said railway has also been connected with another railway from Bristol to Exeter, and that a station for the stoppage of trains was formed by the said company, and is still existing at or near Swindon, adjoining the refreshment-rooms mentioned, and that such station has been and is called or known as the Swindon Station, and has been and is used as the regular and general place of stoppage for the purpose of refreshment of passengers. And that previously to the 18th day of December, 1841, the plaintiffs had, at their own expense, erected certain refreshment-rooms, waiting-rooms, and other rooms on land belonging to the said company, situate at Swindon, for the purpose of providing passengers by the Great Western Railway with refreshments, and the same were erected under an agreement between the plaintiffs and the company, that the same should be demised to the plaintiffs in manner appearing by the indenture of lease of the 18th day of December, 1841, thereafter stated; and that in pursuance of such agreement and indenture of lease bearing date the 18th day of December, 1841, and expressed to be made between the said Great Western Railway, of the one part, and the plaintiffs of the other part, was duly executed by the parties thereto, and that by such indenture it was witnessed, that in consideration of the costs and expenses incurred by the plaintiffs in or about the erection of the buildings thereafter mentioned and thereby demised, being the buildings herebefore mentioned, and in consideration of the covenants, provisoes, and agreements thereafter contained, and which, on the part of the plaintiffs, their executors, administrators, and assigns, were to be observed and performed, the Great Western Railway Company demised and leased unto the plaintiffs, their executors, administrators, and assigns, the said refreshment-rooms, waiting-rooms, and other erections which were therein mentioned to have lately been erected by the plaintiffs at Swindon, and a parcel of land and other hereditaments therein mentioned, to hold the same unto the plaintiffs, their executors, administrators, and assigns, from the 25th day of December, 1841, for the term of ninety-nine years thence next ensuing, at the yearly rent of 1d.; and by the said indenture the company covenanted, promised, and agreed, to and with the plaintiffs, their executors, administrators, and assigns, amongst other things, in manner following: that is to say, that no general refreshment-rooms, or stopping-places for the purpose of enabling passengers to procure refreshments, other than and except refreshment-rooms agreed to be erected by the plaintiffs and those at the terminal at Bristol and Paddington respectively, or at any terminal station on the Great Western, or any branch or junction lines, or any intermediate station for the convenience of passengers joining or leaving trains at such stations, should be erected on the Great Western Railway, or by said company; and that, in case the Swindon Station should during the continuance of the lease be disused as the regular and general place of stoppage for the purpose of refreshment of passengers, the company should purchase of the plaintiffs the whole of the buildings on the said station at the full amount of the cost and expenditure. In respect thereof, in case such disuse should take place within five years from the date of the said indenture, but, if afterwards, then at a fair price to be fixed by arbitration, and that the said company should also make compensation (the amount thereof to be ascertained by arbitration) to the plaintiffs, their executors, administrators, and assigns, and their under lessees or leasees, or the tenant or tenants, occupier or occupiers for the time being of the premises, for the loss which they and each and every of them should sustain in consequence of being deprived of the future profits to arise from the businesses to be carried on upon the said premises; but in such case, unless the plaintiffs, their executors, administrators, and assigns should agree to settle with their under-tenant or under-tenants, for his or their loss the amount of any premium received by the plaintiffs should be made known to the arbitrators, and a proportional part in respect of any unexpired term should be deducted from the amount of such compensation, and moreover, that in case the said buildings and works should be paid for at the full amount of the costs thereof, such costs or expenditure should be ascertained by arbitration. And it was thereby declared to be the intention of the said company, and the understanding of the plaintiffs, that in consequence of the outlay to be incurred by them in erecting the said refreshment-rooms at Swindon, and preparing such works as therein mentioned, the company should give every facility to the plaintiffs for enabling them to obtain an adequate return by means of the rents and profits to be derived from the refreshment-rooms, and that all trains carrying passengers not being goods train or trains to be sent express or for special purposes, and except trains not under the control of the Great Western Railway Company, which should pass the Swindon station either up or down should, save in case of emergency or unusual delay arising from accidents, stop there for refreshment of passengers for a reasonable period of about ten minutes, and that as far as the company could influence the trains not under their control, the same should be induced to stop for the like purpose; and the company thereby engaged not to do any act which should have an effect contrary to the above intention.

That the refreshment-rooms, waiting-rooms, and other rooms and erections mentioned in the said lease have been duly completed and opened for the accommodation of passengers by the said Great Western Railway, and that the plaintiffs have expended the sum of 25,000*l.* and upwards in the erection and completion thereof; and that by an indenture of underlease bearing date the 24th day of December, 1841, and made between the plaintiffs of the one part, and Samuel Young Griffith, a defendant, of the other part, and which recited the indenture of lease on the 18th day of December, 1841, and set forth the covenants and agreements contained in the same indenture of lease on the part of the company, the plaintiffs in consideration of the sum of 6,000*l.* paid by the said defendant, Samuel Young Griffith, demised the said refreshment-rooms and buildings to the defendant, Samuel Young Griffith, for the term of seven years, at the yearly rent of 1,000*l.* and covenanted with the defendant Griffith at all times during the continuance of the term thereby granted to do all such acts and things as should be necessary and proper for enforcing the fulfilment and performance of the covenants and agreements in the indenture of lease of the 18th day of December, 1841, contained on the part of the said company, for giving full benefit and advantage to the defendant, Samuel Young Griffith, of the said refreshment-rooms and premises, during the said term of seven years, in the same manner as if the defendant, Samuel Young Griffith, were the assignee of the said covenants.

That trains belonging to the said company have for some time past run daily from Paddington, near London, to Exeter, and from Exeter to Paddington, upon the said railways, and that such trains have regularly stopped at the said Swindon station for refreshment of passengers, according to the agreement; and that large sums have been received, and large profits have been obtained by the defendant, Samuel Young Griffith, by reason of the trains so stopping at the Swindon station; and that ever since the 10th day of March last, there had been daily (Sundays excepted), one train each way belonging to the said company, that performed the distance between Paddington and Exeter, in a less period than other trains of the said company; and that such trains have, in the train bills and advertisements of the said company, up to within the last few days, been described as quick trains, and not otherwise; and that such trains have from the 18th day of March, 1845, and up to the last few days, been advertised to start from Paddington at 30 minutes past 9, A.M. and from Exeter at 45 minutes past 11, A.M. and to arrive at Exeter at 30 minutes past 2, P.M. and at Paddington at 45 minutes past 4, P.M. the distance between Paddington and Exeter being advertised to be performed in five hours; and that the Great Western Railway Company had lately determined that the said trains, denominated quick trains, or other trains belonging to the said company in lieu thereof, should perform the said distance between Paddington and Exeter in four hours and a half instead of five hours, and that such trains should not stop for the refreshment of passengers at the Swindon station. That the said company, for the purpose of evading the performance of the agreement on their part, contained in the indenture of lease, had determined that the said trains theretofore denominated quick trains should thenceforth be denominated express trains, and that such trains would not be within the true meaning of the said trains "to be sent by express," contained in the lease, and that the permitting of such trains to pass the Swindon station without stopping for refreshment of passengers would be a breach of the agreement of the company. That on the 7th day of May inst. defendant, Charles Alexander Saunders, the secretary of the company, sent to the office of the Morning Chronicle, of the 8th day of May inst. an advertisement relating, amongst other things, to the said trains described as express trains, and that such advertisement purported to be signed by the said defendant, C. A. Saunders, as such secretary as aforesaid, and that such advertisement was accordingly inserted in the Morning Chronicle newspaper of the 8th day of May inst. and that the same was headed "Great Western Railway," and was in part in the words and figures following:—"The express trains will perform the journey between Paddington and Exeter, without stopping at Swindon, in 4½ hours; the down train will leave Paddington at 9 45, and arrive in Exeter at 2 15. The up train will leave Exeter at 12 o'clock, and arrive at Paddington at 4 30. For further particulars as to the trains, reference is requested to the new train bills which may be had on Saturday next, the 10th instant. Paddington, May 7, 1845. C. A. Saunders, Secretary." That in accordance with the said advertisement new train bills of the said company were issued on the 10th day of May instant. And that in such new train bills there are not any trains described as quick trains, but there are two trains between Paddington and Exeter, and each way described as express trains, the trains so described as express trains being substituted for the trains formerly called quick trains. And that the company intend regularly, and on each day, except Sunday, to run the trains of the company described as express trains, and to direct or permit the same to pass the Swindon station without stopping for the refreshment of passengers; and that the defendant, Samuel Young Griffith, will lose considerable profit which would have arisen from passengers by such trains taking refreshment at the refreshment-rooms aforesaid. And that the plaintiffs will be liable under their aforesaid agreement to make good such loss to the defendant, Samuel Young Griffith. That plaintiffs were not, until the 9th day of May inst. aware of the said advertisement in said Morning Chronicle newspaper, or of the intention of the said Company to run trains from Paddington to Exeter, or from Exeter to Paddington without stopping at the said Swindon station, and that under the circumstances aforesaid the bill prayed the company might be restrained from directing or permitting the said trains so as aforesaid advertised as express trains, or any of them, to pass the Swindon station, either up or down, save in case of emergency or unusual delay arising from accidents, without stopping there for refreshment of passengers for a reasonable period of about ten minutes, and from directing or permitting any train, not being a goods train or a train to be sent express or for special purposes, or a special purpose, or a train not under the control of the said company, to pass the Swindon station, either up or down, save in a case of emergency and unusual delay arising from accident, without stopping there for refreshment of passengers for a reasonable period of about ten minutes.

On the 23rd of January, 1846, Vice-Chancellor Wigram granted an injunction in the terms of the prayer of the bill, and gave liberty to the defendants to have a case made for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer in the following form:—

On the 18th day of December, 1841, the defendants grant to the plaintiffs the lease mentioned in the bill, of which a copy is to be inserted in this part of the case. On the 24th of December, 1841, the plaintiffs granted to the defendant, Samuel Young Griffith, an underlease bearing date the 24th of December, 1841, of which a copy is to be inserted in this part of the case. The refreshment and other rooms mentioned in the said lease of the 18th of December, 1841, were completed and opened for the refreshment of passengers in the summer of 1842, and from that time until the month of May 1845, every train carrying passengers except the trains excepted in the covenant of the company, stopped at the said refreshment-rooms for the refreshment of passengers. Upon and ever since the 12th of May, 1845, the defendants, the Great Western Railway Company, have caused two trains, called express trains, carrying passengers, and not coming within the exceptions of the covenant of the company, to run on every day, except Sunday, between Paddington and Exeter—one train running from Paddington to Exeter, and the other from Exeter to Paddington. The defendants, the company, in breach of the covenant in that respect contained in the indenture of lease of the 18th of December, 1841, have caused their said express trains to pass the Swindon station without stopping there for refreshment of passengers. In consequence of these trains not so stopping, the defendant, Samuel Young Griffith, the under-lessee of the refreshment-rooms, has sustained a daily loss. The plaintiffs had notice of the intention of the company to commit such breaches of covenant before the commission of any of them; and also had notice of the commission of such breaches of covenant by the said company immediately after the commission. The plaintiffs, by filing a bill in equity for an injunction against the said company on or before the day of the committing the first or any other of the said breaches of covenant by the defendants, the Great Western Railway Company, might have obtained an injunction restraining the company from committing any further breach of their said covenant. The plaintiffs have not been requested by the defendant, Samuel Young Griffith, to file such bill or to do any other act or thing necessary or proper for enforcing the fulfilment or performance of the said covenant of the company. The plaintiffs have not filed such bill, or done any other act or thing necessary or proper for enforcing the fulfilment or performance of the said covenant of the company. The said defendant, Samuel Young Griffith, has brought an action against the plaintiffs for a breach of the following covenant contained in the said indenture of underlease (that is to say), "that they, the said plaintiffs, should and would, from time to time, and all times during the continuance of the term thereby granted, do all such acts and things as should be necessary and proper for enforcing the fulfilment and performance of the covenants and agreements thereinbefore particularly recited and set forth and in the said indenture of lease of the 18th of December, 1841, contained, on the part of the defendants, the Great Western Railway Company, for giving the full benefit and advantage to the said defendant, Samuel Young Griffith, his executors, administrators, and assigns, of the refreshment-rooms and premises by said indenture of underlease devised during the term thereby granted, in the same manner as if he, the defendant, Samuel Young Griffith, were the assignee of the said covenants." And the Vice-Chancellor directed that the question in such case should be whether the aforesaid action can be maintained by the defendant, Samuel Young Griffith, against the said plaintiffs, and that the judges should be attended with such case, and that the judges by or before whom the said case shall be heard, should be at liberty to state any matter specially, but such case, if taken, should be set down for argument by the defendants, the company, within the first ten days of the then next Easter Term.

The defendants, the company, now moved, by way of appeal, to discharge the Vice-Chancellor's order.

Romilly, Stevens, and Unthank, for the company, contended that the plaintiffs had no right to maintain the suit.

Wood, and J. Bailey, contra.

Amphlett, for defendant Griffith.—During the argument, the Lord Chancellor asked whether the company was willing to indemnify the plaintiffs against all demands under their covenant to Griffith, to which the defendant's counsel answered in the affirmative.

The LORD CHANCELLOR ordered that the injunction should be dissolved, the company undertaking to pay such damages for the non-performance of their covenant, and to be ascertained in such manner as the Court should direct. The company to keep an account, and to give security if required. A case to be stated for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer, and that such case should be settled by the vacation Master.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Tuesday, July 14.

SANDERS v. KELSEY AND OTHERS.

Practice—Demurrer—Multifariousness—Want of equity—Misjoinder.

A testator, by his will, having given several pecuniary legacies, devises two estates, L. and D. to his children, as tenants in common in fee, and makes his wife residuary legatee of all his real and personal estates, and appoints K. and B. his executors. The testator died in July 1841, leaving his said wife, then encesta, and four children him surviving. The other child was born in the month of November following. The wife filed her bill against the two executors, K. and B. and also against the testator's five children, all of them infants, praying for an account of the personal property of the testator, and an account of the rents and produce of his real estates devised to the plaintiff, and also for an account of the rents, profits, and produce of the two estates, L. and D. which had been mixed by the said K. and B. with the personal estate of the said testator, and the rents and profits of the real estate devised to plaintiff, and the same secured; and in the mean time, that the whole of the moneys might be secured by the direction of the Court, for the benefit of plaintiff and the children of the testator.

To this bill the defendants, K. and B. having demurred, for multifariousness and for want of equity: Demurrer allowed.

The bill stated that Wm. Sanders, late of Burstow-lodge, the deceased husband of the plaintiff, being possessed of considerable property, consisting of real and personal estates, by his last will and testament, duly executed and attested, bearing date the 17th March, 1829, having given certain pecuniary legacies as therein mentioned, also a certain capital messuage, called Burstow-lodge, with the lands thereunto adjoining, to his wife Marianne, in fee, subject to an annuity of 200l. to the testator's mother, gave to his cousin John Sanders, son of his cousin Thos. Sanders, two estates, called Little Lake, and Daiseys, situate respectively in Horley and Burstow, aforesaid, his heirs and assigns for ever, provided that if the testator had any child or children living at the time of his decease, or in case any child or children should be born in due time afterwards, then he absolutely revoked the said devise so made to the said John Sanders, and his heirs, as aforesaid, and gave and devised the said two estates of Little Lake and Daiseys unto and equally among all and every his the said testator's children who should be living at the time of his decease, or born in due time afterwards, in fee-simple; but in case there should be but one such child, then unto and to the use of such only child, his heirs and assigns for ever. The testator afterwards gave and devised unto his said wife Marianne Sanders all the residue of his real and personal property not thereinbefore disposed of to his said wife, for her own use and benefit absolutely. The testator appointed the defendants H. Kelsey and Thos. Brooker joint executors in trust of his will.

That the said Wm. S. Sanders departed this life on the 31st day of July, 1841, without having revoked or altered his said will, leaving the plaintiff, his widow, then encesta, and four children then living, that is to say, Wm. Melancthon Sanders (his eldest son and heir-at-law), Thos. Sanders, Sarah Sanders, and Mary Ann Sanders, all of whom (being infants) were made defendants, and also Ann Sanders, the mother of the testator, the annuitant named in the will (since deceased) him surviving.

That in November 1841, the child of which plaintiff was encesta by the testator at the time of his death was born, and that such child was named Caroline Harriet Sanders, also a defendant.

That at the time of the decease of the testator, and for some time afterwards, the plaintiff was in a very delicate state of health, and altogether unable to attend to business of any sort; and that the defendants Henry Kelsey and Thos. Brooker entered into possession or the receipt of the rents, profits, and produce of the real estate devised to plaintiff by the said will, including the Horne-house Farm, and also of the said two farms thereby devised to the said defendants, the children of the said testator, and have ever since been, and now are, in such possession or receipt, and have mixed up the personal estate of the testator and the rents, profits, and produce of the real estates so devised to plaintiff, and the rents and profits of the said two farms so devised by the said testator to the defendants, his children, in one account, and they have from time to time retained in their hands divers large balances which ought to have been accounted for to the plaintiff, or invested upon some proper security bearing interest, and they have now in their hands a large sum of money composed of such personal estates, and the rents, profits, and produce of all such estates, as well those devised to plaintiff as those devised to the said testator's children, but which is not distinguished or separated, and that the sources from whence the component parts thereof arose cannot be ascertained.

The bill further stated, that after repeated applications made by the plaintiff to the defendants Kelsey and Brooker, for an account, they, in the month of August last, being upwards of four years after the decease of the testator, furnished a short summary of accounts, and some unsatisfactory statements in which the accounts of the said personal estate, and the rents and profits and produce of the real estates devised to the plaintiff, and to the children of the said testator, were mixed up together, and in such form as that the plaintiff was wholly unable to distinguish which sums received and paid by the said defendants Kelsey and Brooker belong to the personal estate account, or which belong to the account of the real estate so devised to her, or which sums, in fact, belonged and were to be attributable to the receipts and payments to the account of the rents and profits and expenditure of the said two farms so devised by the said testator for the benefit of the said defendants, his children.

The bill, moreover, charged that the accounts so furnished were, in many particulars, incorrect and erroneous, and that various sums which, in fact, had been received by the defendants Kelsey and Brooker, or one of them, or some person on their or one of their accounts, for the rents of some of the real estates so as aforesaid devised to the plaintiff, and also an account of the testator's personal estate, were not accounted for, or comprised in the said accounts.

The bill prayed for an account of the personal estate and effects of the testator, and that the clear residuary personal estate of the testator might be ascertained and paid to plaintiff; and that an account of the rents and profits of the real estates of the testator, devised to plaintiff by his said will, which had come to the hands of the defendants Kelsey and Brooker, or either of them, as to the said farm premises called Horne-house Farm, from the death of the said Ann Sanders, and as to the rest thereof, from the decease of the said testator. And that an account might be also taken of the rents, profits, and produce of the said two farms called Little Lake and Daiseys, which had been mixed by the said defendants, Kelsey and Brooker, with the personal estate of the testator, and the rents, profits, and produce of the real estate devised to plaintiff; and that the same might be secured by and under the direction and decree of the Court, and that in the mean time, and until such accounts should be taken, the whole of the moneys in the hands or power of the defendants, Kelsey and Brooker which, having arisen from the personal estate of the testator, and the rents, profits, and produce of the said real estates so devised to plaintiff, and the rents, profits, and produce of the said two farms, so devised to the said defendants, the children of the said testator might be secured by and under the direction of the Court, for the benefit of plaintiff and the defendants, the children of the testator, and that the defendants, Kelsey and Brooker, might be ordered to deliver up the title-deeds, &c.

To this bill the defendants, Kelsey and Brooker, demurred, on the ground of multifariousness, and for want of equity.

Jas. Parker and W. W. Cooper, for the demurrer.—There is no doubt the children would be necessary parties if the bill could be sustained, but if it is multifarious as to one of the parties, it is so as to all. Relief is sought against us in two distinct characters, and the matters are improperly joined in the same bill. The prayer is for an account of the personal estate with which the children have nothing whatever to do, shewing thus an incongruity in the relief which ought to have been confined to the personal estate, and to have it separated from the moneys received by the defendants on account of the real estate devised to the plaintiff. But the plaintiff had a right to pray for an account of the children's real estate, who might themselves file a bill for the same.

account. There is no doubt an equity in the bill, but we say you have no right to seek relief against us in two different characters, nor to mix up an account of personal with the real estates.

Cases cited:—Attorney-General v. Goldsmiths' Company, 5 Sim. 675; Campbell v. Mackay, 1 M. & C. 619; Dunn v. Dunn, 2 Sim.

Bethell and Glasse, in support of the bill, contended that the demurrer must be overruled, for that if there was any mixing up of accounts, it was the defendants' own mixing them up. And if the Court should be with the plaintiff on the general point, it ought not to allow even part of the demurrer to hold. It was impossible to make the principle more distinct than his Honour had laid it down in Dunn v. Dunn. In Lewis v. Edmund, 6 Sim. 244, there was a blending of two subjects. The proposition of this demurrer for multifariousness is, that the junction of the parties is improperly made. What could the plaintiff otherwise have done than mix the two properties together? The demurrer is not that of the children but of the trustees. If part of the demurrer be overruled, then it being a demurrer to the whole bill it cannot be allowed for any other part. Our proposition is, that where there is a demurrer for multifariousness you cannot sustain it if you can shew any matter in the bill in which the parties ought to be joined.

J. Parker, in reply.—The case of Lewis v. Edmunds is wholly different: for there the whole of the property was assets, whilst ours is an account of assets, and of an estate not assets.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I am sorry that this demurrer is brought, because it answers no purpose. There is certainly an equity. I think that the children ought to be made parties. The bill states that the plaintiff, by reason of the unsatisfactory manner in which the demurring defendants sent in their accounts, "is wholly unable to distinguish which sums received and paid by the said defendants belong to the personal estate account, or which belong to the account of the real estate so devised to her, or which sums in fact belong and are to be attributable to the receipts and payments to the account of the rents and profits and expenditure of the two farms so devised by the testator for the benefit of the said children." The accounts cannot, therefore, be taken without the children. Then I perceive that there is an annuity mentioned, which in the will is to be given to the testator's mother, and it is stated here that the defendants paid out of the plaintiff's money to the annuitant in her lifetime, that which she was entitled to receive in respect of the said sum of 200*l.* per annum, and to her representatives the rents which accrued up to the time of her decease. Now a question here might arise whether there is not a case of election against the plaintiff. It really appears to me to be a fanciful demurrer, and that it must, therefore, be overruled. A demurrer ought not to be filed without good grounds to support it.

ROLLS COURT.

Thursday, July 23.

TEESDALE v. SWINDELL.

Practice—New orders—Referring exceptions for insufficiency—Common order—Irregularity.

Roupell moved to set aside, for irregularity, an order to refer exceptions for insufficiency, and to stay proceedings at law. The motion was made under the 25th article of the 16th of the New Orders of May 1845, whereby a plaintiff, having filed exceptions for insufficiency to a defendant's answer, is not to procure an order to refer them to the Master before the expiration of eight days from the filing of such exceptions, unless, &c. The bill alleged that the defendant, Swindell, was prosecuting an action at law against Teesdale, the plaintiff in equity. The answer was put in on the 24th of June last; exceptions thereto for insufficiency were filed on the 29th of the same month, and on the same 29th the order of reference complained of was obtained, though no leave whatever was given. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Then it is a question of time.] Yes; the exceptions were ordered to be referred the same day as that on which they were filed, and that ought not to be without special leave. The question is, was the party exempted from the observance of the General Order, without the leave of the Court. The 25th article is express.

Turner (with him Giffard), contra.—On the answer coming in, and being found insufficient, exceptions were taken thereto, and the order in question was obtained from your lordship, on affidavit, and is therefore not a common order, but an order on special leave.

Roupell.—Nothing is said in the order of an order in the affidavit.

Kindersley.—Yes; but it was made by the Court a special application, and here is the affidavit on which it was made.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The question, if any there be, is, whether the order ought not to have had the words "notwithstanding the General Order, the order is granted on affidavit." The order having been made on affidavit is not therefore a common order.

April 22 and Nov. 10, 1845, and July 30, 1846.

SMITH v. SMITH.

Dower—Separate estate—Charge—Trust to sell—Lien—Subsequent advances.

A B, a married woman, entitled, in respect of a former marriage, to dower, which was settled to her separate use, conveyed the same to C D, on trust to sell, and pay thereout advances made, and to be made, by C D to A B, not exceeding a given amount, and to pay the surplus to A B. Advances were made beyond the amount by C D, who received the dower, and the sums received fell short of the sums advanced.

Held: that this receipt of dower could not be considered as indefinite payments, but only for the purpose of paying off the charge, and afterwards for the separate use of A B; and that the dower so received ought to have been applied in satisfaction of the charge, and the surplus, after such satisfaction, could only be applied as A B directed, and was subject to no lien except such as might be acquired by lending money to A B, independently of the deed of conveyance.

C D was nevertheless permitted to make a new claim for payment of what was due to him out of the surplus of the income of the dower in his hands, after satisfaction of the charge.

This case came on upon petitions for and against the Master's report; it was in reference to the claim of Mr. Gregory to a lien on the dower of Mrs. Johnson, for advances made subsequent to a conveyance of her dower on trust, to sell and pay off charges thereon to a given amount. The facts are sufficiently stated in the judgment.

JUDGMENT.

Nov. 10, 1845.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—This case came on upon a petition of Ann Johnson, praying that the Master's report, dated the 7th Dec. 1844, might be confirmed, with consequential directions; and also on the petition of G. P. F. Gregory, praying, for the purposes therein mentioned, that the petitioner might be at liberty to except to the report, and that it might be referred back to the Master to review the same. In September 1820, Mr. Smith, the first husband of Mrs. Johnson, died intestate, leaving her entitled to dower, her right to which was established by proceedings in this court; and on the 10th January, 1827, she made some arrangement or agreement, as to part of her interest in the dower, with a person of the name of Kendall; and one question arose as to the performance of that agreement. In 1827, she contemplated a marriage, which took effect, between her and William C. Johnson; and on that occasion marriage articles were executed, whereby it was agreed that her dower should be conveyed to trustees in trust for her separate use, and enabling her to dispose of any arrears by deed or will. She married Johnson on the 19th of May, 1827; and in the course of the proceedings in the cause a receiver was appointed of the rents out of which her dower was to be paid. On the 2nd July, 1828, a deed was executed between Mrs. Johnson of the first part; the husband, William C. Johnson, of the second part; and David Lloyd Harris, of the third part. Harris had previously advanced two sums of 80*l.* and 20*l.*, and then lent her a sum of 50*l.*; and it being contemplated that he might make further advances, the dower was conveyed to Harris in trust to sell, and, after paying costs and expenses, he was to repay himself the three sums of 80*l.*, 20*l.*, and 50*l.*, and any further sums not exceeding 600*l.*; and Harris was entitled either to perform the contract of Kendall, or to resist the claim of Kendall under that contract, as should be expedient. In August 1830, the petitioner, Mr. Gregory, had advanced to Mrs. Johnson different sums amounting to 280*l.*, and he then lent her an additional sum of 50*l.*; and further advances being contemplated, a deed, dated the 20th of August, 1830, was executed between D. L. Harris, of the first part; Mrs. Johnson, of the second part; her husband, of the third part; and Mr. Gregory, of the fourth part; and thereby Mrs. Johnson's dower was conveyed to Gregory in trust to sell it and receive the purchase-money, and in the mean time to receive and take the dower, and out of the income to arise by the sale to pay the costs therein mentioned, and then what should be due to Harris, and afterwards to pay himself the 280*l.* and 50*l.*, and such further sums of money as he might lend and advance, or pay, or lay out, or expend for the use or on account of Mrs. Johnson, so as the same, together with the 280*l.* and 50*l.*, should not exceed the whole sum of 400*l.*; and he was to stand possessed of the surplus in trust for the separate use of Mrs. Johnson. A few days after the date of this deed, and on the 26th of the same month of August 1830, Gregory, at the request of Johnson and wife, paid to Kendall 150*l.*, and in consideration thereof Kendall undertook to assign his right and interest in the contract of the 10th of January, 1827, to Gregory, in trust for Johnson and his wife; and it was agreed between Gregory and Johnson and wife that the sum of 150*l.* and costs paid by Gregory should to all intents and purposes be considered as included in and provided for by the trusts of the deed of the 20th of August, 1830, as if the agreement and release and assignment thereby contemplated had been made before the execution of the deed. By an order on the petition of Mrs. Johnson, on the 7th of August, 1840, it was referred to the Master to inquire whether any, and what sum was due to Harris under the deed of the 2nd of July, 1828, and if any sums of money payable to him had been, and by whom, and when paid; and the Master was to take an account of what had been expended by Gregory for principal, interest, and costs under the deed of the 20th of August, 1830, and of all sums received, or which, but for wilful default, might have been received on account of the dower of Mrs. Johnson; and also to inquire whether Gregory had made any other advances to, or made any payment for, or on account of Mrs. Johnson, and whether Gregory had any and what lien upon the dower, or the purchase-money thereof, with liberty to state special circumstances. The Master made his report on the 8th of December, 1842, and thereby found that the amount due on the balance of the account for principal money, interest, and costs, under the deed of the 2nd of July, 1828, to the 24th of May, 1839, to be the sum of 414*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.*, and that such sum had been paid by Gregory to Harris; and in taking the account of what was due under the deed of the 20th of August, 1830, he considered the limitation as to the sum therein mentioned to have been extended by the agreement of the 30th of August, 1830, which was to embrace the sum of 150*l.*, intended to be provided for by such agreement; and so considering, he found there had been expended by Gregory for principal money, interest, and costs, under the same deed, as extended by the agreement, 832*l.* 4*s.* 10*d.*; and he found that, under the deed of the 2nd of July, 1828, and also by the deed of the 20th August, 1830, Gregory received several sums, amounting together to 1,222*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, on account of the dower of Mrs. Johnson. The Master then added the amount of Gregory's expenditure, 832*l.* 4*s.* 10*d.*, to the balance paid to Harris, 414*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.*, and found the aggregate amount 1,247*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.*, from which 1,222*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, the amount of his own receipts, being deducted, 24*l.* 18*s.*, was left due to him on the balance. And he further found that Gregory had expended other sums for Mrs. Johnson to the amount of 465*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.*, for which he did not find that Gregory had any lien. It does not appear on the papers before me that Gregory took any step to impeach this report; but upon the 22nd April, 1843, and upon the petition of Mrs. Johnson, that the Master might be directed to review his report, it was referred back to him to review the same as to the 150*l.* included in the agreement of the 26th of August, 1830, and Mr. Gregory was to be at liberty to make such further claim as to the said sum of 150*l.* as he might be advised. The Master, by his report, dated the 8th December, 1844, has reviewed his former report, and has, consequently, found that the sum of 705*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.* instead of the sum of 832*l.* 4*s.* 10*d.* found by the former report, is due and owing to Gregory, under the indenture of the 20th of August, 1830, and the agreement of the 26th of August, 1830; and he has further found that in the result of his inquiry there is due from Gregory a balance of 101*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.* instead of there being a balance of 24*l.* 18*s.* due to him as found by the former report; and he further states that Gregory, pursuant to the liberty given him, brought in a state of facts and charges that the Master did not think fit to allow. This report was objected to, and it is the subject of the present petition, by which Mr. Gregory desires to have it considered that no part of the 1,222*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.* received by him on account of the dower, ought to be considered as received on account of sums due to him under the indentures of July 1828, and August 1830, till after the payment of the several sums amounting to 465*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.* found due to him, or that he may be considered as a mortgagee, or to have a lien under the agreement of the 26th of August, 1830, for the 150*l.* and interest on so much of the dower of Mrs. Johnson as shall remain in his hands after satisfying the debts or sums of money specified in the report of the 8th of December, 1842; and he desires either an order giving him the benefit of those claims or such other order as shall seem meet. There seems to me no doubt that Mr. Gregory has paid on account of Mrs. Johnson a greater sum of money than he received on account of her dower. The whole sum received amounts to 1,222*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.* The sums, as even now allowed, of principal, interest, and costs, under the deed, amount to 1,207*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*, and the Master has before found the further sum of 465*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.* was advanced. Mr. Gregory was entitled to receive Mrs. Johnson's dower, and to apply the same in satisfaction of the sum which was due to him under the deed; and, as to the surplus of it, he was trustee to Mrs. Johnson for her separate use. Mrs. Johnson had no right to divert any portion of it from that first application to which Mr. Gregory was entitled, and if the directions of the deed had been simply followed, the question now made would not have arisen; but Mrs. Johnson was entitled to the surplus for her separate use, and seems to have been continually in want of money, and she repeatedly applied to Mr. Gregory to supply her with money, or make payments for her, and he did frequently do so. It was held, on a former occasion, that with respect to any money advanced beyond the items stated in the deed, he had no claim or lien under the deed; but, if I correctly understand the arguments advanced for him, he now says that, having received the dower, which, subject to his own rights under the deed, belonged to Mrs. Johnson, for her separate use, he had a right, in its application, to postpone his right under the deed, and apply the receipts, in the first place, in satisfaction of new payments or advances made on account of Mrs. Johnson; and he insists that, if at any time any portion of the limited charge under the deed was paid off, he has a right to bring any subsequent advances to Mrs. Johnson under the deed in lieu of so much of the charge as had been paid off, and thus to keep up the amount of the charge, although some part had been paid off; and further he contended that, if not so entitled, he was in fact bound, under the trusts of the deed, to exonerate the dower before he applied any part of it to the use of Mrs. Johnson; yet, at all events, after the charge was satisfied, he was, at the request of Mrs. Johnson, entitled to apply any surplus for her use, according to her directions, and ought to be allowed, as, against the surplus, not only such sums as he paid by her direction out of her dower, but also such sums as he applied to her use under her authority, without special reference to dower, or the fund out of which such sums were to be paid. In other words, he contends that the surplus of the dower, after payment of the limited charge, was money in his own hands on account of Mrs. Johnson, which, under the circumstances, he had a right to apply to her use, whether she specifically directed the payment to be made out of her dower or not. The case, as argued, does not appear to me to be consistent with the case indicated by the objections carried in to the Master's present report; and it is not confined to the claim, which, by the terms of the Order of April 1843, was specially permitted to be made. Mr. Selwyn, who argued the case, has, therefore, not desired any decision in favour of Mr. Gregory at this time, but has requested special leave to make a claim in conformity with the case which he has argued. Upon the argument it does not now appear to me that Mr. Gregory has any claim under the deed beyond that which the Master has found. I think that his receipt of dower cannot be considered as indefinite payments. He had them only for the purpose of paying off the charge, and afterwards for the separate use of Mrs. Johnson; and, upon the true construction of the instrument, I think he was bound to apply the dower which he received in satisfaction of the charge, and could only consider the surplus, after such satisfaction, as subject to the disposition of Mrs. Johnson, or liable to such ordinary lien as he might acquire in advancing money to her. Supposing this to be so, the surplus was, at all events, subject to the disposal of Mrs. Johnson. It was apparently the only money which became, or was likely to become, payable by Mr. Gregory to Mrs. Johnson, the only sum in respect of which she had any right to draw, or any ground to ask him to pay money on her account; and when she drew a bill, as she afterwards did, with a direction to Mr. Gregory to charge the same to the account of her dower, or, even without that special reference, when she afterwards drew bills upon him with directions to charge or place the same to account, she probably meant, and Mr. Gregory had reason to believe she meant, that, besides satisfying the charge created by the deeds, she was to be entitled to credit for those sums in the account of the money which remained; and under these circumstances there seems to be some reason to think that Mr. Gregory may have been entitled to a lien on the surplus; and I think it would scarcely be just to leave the matter in its present state. Mr. Gregory is found a debtor in a case in which, in his payments for Mrs. Johnson, he excluded his receipts; and although he has, I think, very much mistaken his own case, first, in supposing he was entitled to the whole of his claim under the deed, and now in asserting he has a right to intercept moneys which ought to be applied in satisfaction of the charge, and to apply them, in priority to the satisfaction of sums due to him, which were not charged, yet, on his paying the costs occasioned by the claim which has been made by this petition, I think he ought to be allowed to make the claim, at least to the extent of the 150*l.* mentioned in the former order, for what he may allege to be due to him out of the surplus of the money, after applying so much as was required for the satisfaction of the charge. He has prayed relief which seems to me to be inconsistent with the principle of the order of the 22nd of April, 1843, but has not prayed to be relieved from it. When that order was made it seems to have been considered that the Master thought there was no lien except under the instruments of the 20th and 26th of August, 1830, and it does not appear from the papers before me that any attempt was made to disturb that part of the report. Considering the state of the fund, and the liability to costs to which Mr. Gregory is subject, it may not be worth his while to adopt any proceedings for the purpose of obtaining relief from the limitation contained in the order of the 26th of April, 1843. If it were so, my present impression is, I should give him leave to amend this petition; but on the case as it now stands, Mr. Gregory paying the costs of the last report, of the objections, and of this petition, I think I ought to give him leave to carry in another claim, and, with reference to such claim, if made out to the satisfaction of the Master, to give the Master liberty to review his present report.

Thursday, July 30, 1846.—Mr. Gregory having, in pursuance of the leave given him to make a new claim, presented a new petition, the case came again before the Court; but it appearing that he had brought forward the claim in such a manner as to seek his relief under the deed of charge, and not in the way suggested by the Court, the petition was dismissed with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

July 17 and 21.

STONE v. HARRISON.

Will—Construction.

A testator gave to A B, a married woman, an annual sum of 200*l.* during her life for her separate use, and after her decease he gave the sum of 6,666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Consolidated 3 per Cent. Bank Annuities to be divided equally among such her children as should attain the age of twenty-one years. A B. died, leaving six children, five only of whom had then attained twenty-one. It was held that the residuary legatee was not entitled to the dividends on the sixth part of the stock becoming due between the death of A B and the minor attaining twenty-one.

By the will of George Harrison, late of the Herald's College, London, esquire, and which was in the form of instructions for a will, dated the 8th of April, 1821, he desired to give to Daniel Charles Rogers an annual sum of 200*l.* during the term of his natural life, and after his decease the same annual sum of 200*l.* to be continued to his wife during the term of her natural life, for her sole and separate use and benefit, and after the decease of both of them, he desired that the sum of 6,666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Three per cent. Consols Bank Annuities be transferred equally among such of their children as should attain the age of twenty-one years, which sum of 6,666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* would produce an annual sum of 200*l.* The said testator also desired to give his great niece, Mrs. Stone, wife of Mr. Robert Stone, of High-street, Marylebone, an annual sum of 200*l.* during her life, for her separate use, and after her decease he gave the sum of 6,666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Consolidated Three per cent. Bank Annuities to be divided equally among such her children as should attain the age of twenty-one years, and appointed his nephew, Samuel Harrison, and the said Daniel Charles Rogers and Robert Stone, executors. The testator died on the 16th of April, 1821, and the will was proved by all the executors on the 27th of April, 1821, in the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Mary Elizabeth Stone died on the 7th of May, 1845, leaving six children her surviving; and having had no other child who lived to attain the age of twenty-one years. At the death of Mrs. Stone, all her children excepting one had attained twenty-one, and five-sixths parts of the amount of stock which had been treated by the trustees for the purpose of answering this bequest, were sold out, and the produce paid to the five children who had attained twenty-one. The question now in dispute was as to the interest upon the remaining sixth part, until the youngest child attained twenty-one. The bill prayed, with regard to this question, "that it might be decreed that the remaining one-sixth of the said July dividend, and the dividend which became due in January 1846, and all future dividends which should, during the minority of the plaintiff, Georgiana Stone, become due, upon the said sum of 1,077*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.* Bank 3 per Cent. Consolidated Annuities, would belong to the said plaintiff in case she should attain her age of twenty-one years, and in case of her death under that age, would belong to the plaintiffs in equal fifth shares, and for investment and accumulation."

Russell and Campbell, for the plaintiff, contended that the gift was to a class which eventually might be less or more in number, but which class must eventually take the whole. At the time of the death of the tenant for life there were several persons then in being who took vested interests in the whole, defeasible only as between themselves.

Wigram, for the residuary legatee, argued that this intermediate interest was undisposed of, and that therefore it fell into the residue.

Moore, for the executor.

The following cases were cited: Wyndham v. Wyndham, 3 Bro. Ch. Ca. 58; Shaw v. Cunliffe, 4 Bro. Ch. Ca. 144; Harris v. Lloyd, 1 Turn. & Russ. 310; and Leake v. Robinson, 2 Mer. 363.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that his impression was, that as there were children who attained twenty-one, the gift was to them, subject to opening in favour of those who should afterwards attain twenty-one. He then directed that the sixth part should be brought into court, and the dividends accumulated, with liberty to apply. He would, however, mention the case again in a few days, should his present opinion be altered.

Tuesday, July 21.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR gave to the parties a written judgment, of which the following is a copy:—

"I have considered the will in this case, and, in addition to the cases mentioned at the bar (Wyndham v. Wyndham, Shaw v. Cunliffe, Leake v. Robinson, and Harris v. Lloyd, of which I question neither), I have looked at various authorities of a different kind, the bearing of which, upon the construction of the will, appeared to me possible. Among them I may mention Taylor v. Johnson, 2 P. Wms. Ellison v. Airey, Shepherd v. Ingram, Mills v. Norris, Whitbread v. Lord St. John, Gilbert v. Boorman, Davidson v. Dallas, and Deffis v. Goldschmidt. It struck me that these or some of them might, as well as others which I need not enumerate, be thought perhaps relevant. On the whole, I remain of opinion that the testator's great niece, the wife of Mr. Robert Stone, having survived the testator, and having left, at her decease, children, of whom some, though not all, had attained majority in her lifetime, the residuary legatee is excluded from claiming any portion of the dividends subsequent to her decease upon 6,666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* three per Cent. Consols, given 'after her decease,' 'to be divided equally among such her children as shall attain the age of twenty-one years.' With any question, if there was a question, between the child who had not, and the children who had, attained majority in the lifetime of Mrs. Stone, the residuary legatee, has nothing, and had nothing, to do. I say 'if there was a question,' because the adult children have consented that the minor shall, in the event of attaining majority, be considered as entitled to an equal share, and this from the death of their mother, for which the decree is to provide. I collected that there was not any child of Mrs. Stone that died in her lifetime, having attained majority."

NORRIS v. NORRIS.

Will—Construction.

A testator, by his will, made the following bequest:—"To my beloved wife I give all my interest in my house at Lavender-hill, the furniture, books, pictures, wines, &c. &c."—Held, that the gift was not confined to the furniture and other articles in the house at Lavender-hill at the time of the testator's death. James Norris, the testator in this cause, by his will, dated the 14th of February, 1832, after making certain bequests, proceeded:—"To my beloved wife I give all my interest in my house at Lavender-hill, the furniture, books, pictures, wines, &c. &c." and then gave directions for the conversion and investment of the residue of his property. The testator died on the 1st of December, 1838, and the will was shortly afterwards proved.

This suit was instituted by the widow of the testator for the administration of the estate, and one of the questions which arose in the suit was, whether the gift of the furniture and other articles was to be confined to those in the house, or to be extended to all of which the testator was possessed at his decease, wheresoever situate.

Swanston and J. Bailly for the plaintiff, cited Colleton v. Garth, 6 Sim. 19; Land v. Decaynes, 4 Bro. C. C. 537.

Goldfinch, for the infant defendants.

Roll and Glasse, for the executors.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that his impression was that it would be giving too strong an effect to the position of the words, and to the use of the definite article, to hold that the words were local. He thought that there was enough to create conjecture and suspicion that the testator meant to confine the gift of the furniture to the articles in the house, but he thought there was no more than that. His impression was, that it was a general gift; but if that impression should be removed, he would mention the case again.

July 21.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR gave a written judgment, of which the following is a copy:—"I have re-considered the will in this case and have not changed the opinion which I had at the close of the argument. There may be room to suspect or conjecture that in using the expressions 'the furniture, books, pictures, wines, &c. &c.' the testator had in his mind only such effects within the description as were then, or as, at his death, might be in the dwelling-house then occupied by him, especially when their place in the will is observed. But the expressions themselves have not necessarily so restricted a meaning—have not necessarily any local reference. It would, I think, be giving too much weight to the use of the definite article, and the particular position of the phrase, so to confine the construction. The language must, I conceive, be taken to have been used generally, not with regard to any particular place, nor with regard only to such 'furniture, books, pictures, wines, &c. &c.' as he had when he made his will."

COMMON LAW COURT.

ADMIRALTY COURT.

Salvo.A claim for salvage may be diminished by subsequent misconduct, or want of due nautical skill.

The facts of this case are briefly these:—The Duke of Manchester, of 369 tons, and valued, with cargo, at 10,500*l.* got upon the Goodwin Sands in December last, whilst on a voyage from London to Jamaica. The weather was obscured at the time. She was assisted by two boats, and one proceeded to Ramsgate and procured the Copeland steamer, of 100 horse power, and worth 4,500*l.* to lend more efficient aid. When the steamer came up, the Duke of Manchester was beating heavily upon the sands near the Gull Light. Measures were taken as soon as possible to get the barque off. She was in deep water, and the Copeland towed her towards the Downs. She, however, again struck on the sands at Sandwich Flats, and (as pleaded) in consequence of the want of skill by the crew of the Copeland. As usual, the evidence on both sides was of a most conflicting character; indeed, so much so, in this case, that the learned judge deemed it necessary to have the aid of the Trinity Masters. It was alleged, on the part of the Duke of Manchester, that the second striking was in consequence of her being unable to ply her helm. While on the flats two luggers came up and rendered aid, though in the first instance rejected, and took out some of the cargo, after which the barque again floated; but, having sustained much damage, she was taken into London for repairs, having got into the West India Docks on the 17th of the same month. The owners of the Copeland claimed high reward, as they alleged that the services rendered were at the risk of life and damage of their property. The owners of the barque pleaded the weather to be moderate, and the services comparatively slight. There was not any tender made in the suit.

The Queen's Advocate, for the owners, contended that, on the whole, some reward was due to the steamer and boatmen; but that no such services, as represented, had been performed.

Dr. Addams and Dr. Bayford contended, that nothing had been stated to derogate from the services of the steamer, which had been expressly called upon, and had rescued from danger a valuable property; and that, as the pilot was on board when the barque struck on the flats, and as he took that ordinary care that was required, the steamer had performed her duty.

The learned JUDGE said he might dismiss the questions raised as to luggers. As to the Copeland, the points must be divided into two classes. The assistance of the Copeland was asked; did she act rightly in the first and second instances, in getting a vessel, with so valuable a cargo, off the Goodwin, and also was there any improper conduct, as respected the striking on the Sandwich Flats? The learned Judge then referred to the main points of evidence. It was sworn that the steamer pitched so much, that the lives of all on board were in danger, and that the barque, with her cargo and crew, were in imminent peril. It was further stated, that if the steamer had touched the sand, she would have been in danger of total loss, in consequence of the weight of her engines. In connection with this branch of the case, he would put these questions to the Trinity Master:—"Was the Duke of Manchester in a state of imminent danger? Were the measures pursued by the Copeland proper, and was the barque got off in consequence of those measures, and was there any great danger to the Copeland, by pursuing such measures?" The learned Judge would not trouble the gentlemen by whom he was assisted to assess damages; that was the province of the Court. These were not all the material points of the case. After the Duke of Manchester had either been eased off or floated off, was the course taken by the pilot right in conducting the ship to the Downs? It had been decided in a previous case, that salvage service might be diminished by subsequent misconduct. Here it was said that the steamer had nothing to do with the steering of the Duke of Manchester. The case of the Duke of Sussex had been cited. In this case the Crown proceeded against the steamer, and he himself had decided that the pilot on board was responsible. Owners were not responsible if the orders of the pilot of the steamer were obeyed. In that case the Court held the Chieftain was not to blame, there being no negligence on the part of those on board the steamer. In the case of the Diana, where there was a pilot on board who did not do his duty, and the mate and crew had been negligent, the Court (and in its judgment it was supported by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council) had pronounced that the owners were liable. It was the duty of the master of a vessel to look after the pilot, to see that he was competent—that he was not drunk, or that he did not pursue a course tending to place valuable property, and more valuable lives, in jeopardy. It was not for a steamer to remain in sulky silence and not remonstrate against the conduct of a pilot in charge, in leading a ship into danger. The Court would next ask whether the ship getting on the Sandwich Flats was occasioned by the weather, or by the disabled state of the vessel? Secondly, could the stranding have been prevented by ordinary skill and vigilance, or was there a want of skill on the part of the Copeland? or did she knowingly run the vessel into danger? The Court thought it would be advisable for the Trinity Masters to retire and consider their answers to the questions.

The learned Judge retired with them, and after an absence of about half-an-hour entered the court again.

The learned JUDGE then read the questions over, and stated the replies of the Trinity Masters to be as follows:—They did not think the Duke of Manchester to be in such a perilous state as set forth by the owners of the Copeland, there being ten feet water; and if she remained staunch and tight, the next tide would have carried her into deep water. As to the second and third questions, the Trinity Masters held that the jerking of the ship had had the only effect that might have been expected, the carrying away the main chains, &c. As to the fourth point, the Trinity Masters were not of opinion that the Copeland had been exposed to danger. With respect to the remaining questions, the Trinity Masters were decidedly of opinion, that the getting on the Sandwich Flats was the result of the want of ordinary care and skill on the part of the steamer; and that there was, in their opinion, also a gross and culpable negligence on the part of the Copeland.

The learned JUDGE stated, that he concurred in the answers of the Trinity Masters, and considered that the grossest neglect had been exhibited by the steamer; the weather, and the knowledge of the coast which the crew must have had, being taken into account. The Court must pronounce against the Copeland, and with costs, allotting 5*l.* to each of the two first luggers, 10*l.* each to the masters, and 5*l.* each to the crew, the Ramsgate boats having 60*l.* to divide between them.

THE LEGISLATOR.

SUMMARY.

We give below some interesting and useful abstracts from Parliamentary Papers. No rumours of proposed measures for the next session have this week reached us.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

POPULATION, TAXATION, &c.—The population of Great Britain in 1801 was 10,942,646, and in 1845 it was 19,572,574. The national debt in 1796 was 301,861,306*l.* and in 1845, 768,789,241*l.* In 1796 the interest on the national debt, funded and unfunded, was 11,841,204*l.* and in 1845, 27,827,265*l.* The amount of county rates in 1796 was 229,390*l.* and in 1842, 703,526*l.* In 1843 the poor's rates were 5,348,205*l.* and in 1844, 6,848,717*l.* In 1813 there were 1,426,065 paupers in England, in 1843, 1,539,490. The declared value of exports from Great Britain to all parts, except Ireland, was in 1796, 25,130,624*l.* and in 1845, 150,645,801*l.* The imports, with the same exception, in the two years, were 20,422,440*l.* and 83,330,609*l.* In 1796 there were 879,197 quarters of wheat and wheat flour imported into Great Britain from all parts except Ireland, and 1,133,561 quarters in 1845, in which last-mentioned year the quantities of foreign and colonial wheat and wheat flour retained for home consumption were 308,493 quarters. The average price of wheat per quarter in 1796 was 70*s.* 3*d.* and in 1845 it was 50*s.* 10*d.* The fluctuation per cent. under the different laws is given. From 1842 to 1845 it was 14.31. In 1845 the duty on the average price was 20*s.* The number of acres enclosed (as far as returned) from 1800 to 1842 was 1,933,049 acres. The proportion per cent. of the population living on foreign corn was for the last fourteen years 5.73, and the number of days' consumption imported 34.35. Other returns were moved for by Mr. Francis Scott, and are given by the statistical department of the Board of Trade. The hon. member embraced six different subjects in his motion. They relate to wheat, exports, live stock, and the prices of meat. In London, in the past quarter, 1842, beef was 6*d.* per lb. mutton, 7*d.* and pork, 7*d.* whilst at Edinburgh picked meat was 6*d.* and common meat, 4*d.* per lb.

PUBLIC DEBT.—A Parliamentary paper has been issued giving an account of all additions which have been made to the annual charge of the public debt by the interest of any loan that hath been made or annuities created in the last ten years, pursuant to the Act 27th Geo. 3, c. 13. The first and last additions will show the nature of the document, and the application of "the Sinking Fund." In the year 1836, by virtue of the Act 6th and 7th Wm. 4, c. 82, the further sum of 3,432,974*l.* 0*s.* 1*d.* (on account of the grant of 20,000,000*l.* for compensation to owners of slaves) was authorised to be raised to defray the compensations which should be awarded to owners of slaves in the colonies of the Cape of Good Hope, or the Mauritius, or the Virgin Islands, by placing an amount of stock in the 3*l.* 10*s.* per Centum Reduced Annuities, in lieu of the said sum of 3,432,974*l.* 0*s.* 1*d.* to the credit of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, in the books of the Bank of England. The amount of capital in the Reduced Annuities at the rate of 100*l.* stock for 99*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* sterling, being the average price on the 30th of July, 1836, on which day the certificate of award did commence to be issued for the colony of the Mauritius, was 3,437,270*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.* and the annual charge created in respect of the capital, including 1,031*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* for management, at the rate of 300*l.* per million, was 121,335*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* No specific provision was made for the above charge in 1836, but it was authorised to be defrayed out of the Consolidated Fund. There are many additions in the account from 1836 to the present year. The following is the last addition made:—In the year 1844, by virtue of the Act 9 Geo. 4, c. 92, s. 50 and 51, the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt having applied the sum of 14,658*l.* 7*s.* 2*d.* in the purchase of Exchequer bills and the interest thereon between the 5th of July, 1843, and the 5th of April, 1844, and certified the said purchase to the Treasury on the 10th of April, 1844, became entitled to an amount of stock for the same to be placed to their account at the Bank of England, according to the conditions of the above-mentioned Act. The amount of capital thereby created in Three Pounds per Centum Consolidated Annuities, according to the quarterly average prices of Three per Centum Annuities, bought with the moneys commonly called the Sinking Fund during the said period of time, was 15,217*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*; and the annual charge created in 1844 in respect of the said capital of 15,217*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* Three Pounds per Centum Consolidated Annuities, including 4*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.* for management, at 300*l.* per million, was 461*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.* which charge was authorized to be defrayed out of the Consolidated Fund.

EDWARD CARDWELL.

Whitehall, Treasury Chambers, June 30, 1846.

MARRIAGES.—Sir Robert H. Inglis, as member of the University of Oxford, has obtained some interesting returns respecting the celebration of marriages, which were a few days ago made public. The first branch has reference to the number of places of religious worship in England registered for marriages under the Act 6th and 7th William 4, c. 85, since the 30th of June, 1842. The total number of places registered in the counties of England and Wales was 2,467, divided into eight classes:—Presbyterians, 196 places; Independent Congregationalists, 970; Baptists, 599; Methodists (Arminian), 267; Methodists (Calvinistic), 78; Roman Catholics, 301; foreign churches, 5; and miscellaneous, 52; making 2,467 places. In the second department returns are given of the number of marriages celebrated yearly from the 1st of January, 1841, to the 31st of December, 1844, inclusive. In the year ending the 31st of December, 1841, there were 122,496 marriages in England; 5,362 men and 16,285 women were not of full age; 39,954 men and 59,680 women signed with "marks." In the year 1842, the marriages were 118,825. There were 5,387 men and 16,003 women under age; 38,031 men and 56,965 women signed with "marks." In the next year the marriages were 123,818, of which 5,511 men and 16,403 women were under age; 40,520 men and 60,715 women signed with "marks." The marriages in the year 1844 were 132,249; 5,494 men and 17,362 women were under age; 42,769 men and 64,816 women signed with "marks." In the metropolis in 1844 there were 2,438 men and 4,991 women who signed with "marks." The third part of the document states the marriages celebrated in the same years in each superintendent registrar's district. In 1841 the marriages so celebrated numbered 18,093, of which 272 men and 1,240 women were under age; 2,061 men and 4,294 women signed with their "marks." In 1842 the marriages were 18,493 in the superintendent registrar's district, of which 292 men and 1,390 women were under age; 2,035 men and 4,067 women signed with "marks." In 1843 the marriages celebrated in the same manner numbered 18,493, of which 319 men and 1,399 women were under age; 2,206 men and 4,417 women made their "marks." And in 1844 there were 20,126 marriages in the same manner; 294 men and 1,569 women were under age; 2,438 men and 4,991 women made their "marks."

MORTMAIN.—A "return of all deeds executed and enrolled under the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, from the year 1840 to the year 1845, both inclusive." The whole number of deeds, &c. enrolled in the Enrolment-office in Chancery (including specifications of inventions and certificates for naturalization), for the several years above referred to, are stated below; but I am wholly unable to distinguish which of them are enrolled under the above-mentioned Act of Parliament, as the index does not give any information as to the Act under which deeds are enrolled.

NEW STATUTES

Of the Session 9 & 10 Victoria.

46. Clerk to send to commissioners of audit an account of all sums paid by him to treasurer.—That the clerk of every such court shall once in every year, and oftener if required, on such day as shall be appointed by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, make out and send to the said commissioners of audit an account of all sums paid over by him to the treasurer of the court, including all unclaimed balances carried to the account of the general fund, as herein-after provided; and every such account, duly vouched by receipts given under the hand of the treasurer, shall be a voucher to charge the treasurer in his account before the said commissioners of audit.

47. Accounts when audited to be sent to Treasury.—That it shall not be necessary to declare the accounts of the said treasurers before the Chancellor of the Exchequer, but the said commissioners of audit shall transmit a statement of every account examined and audited by them under the authority of this Act to the Lord High Treasurer, or the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the time being, who, having considered such statement, shall return the same to the commissioners of audit, together with his or their warrant, directing them to make up and pass the account, either conformably to the statement, or with such variations as he or they may deem just and reasonable; and the account having been made up pursuant to such directions, and signed by two or more of the said commissioners for auditing the public accounts, shall remain deposited in the Audit-office, and shall have the same force and validity, and be as efficient in law for all purposes whatsoever, as if the same had been declared according to the usual course by the Chancellor of the Exchequer; and the said commissioners shall thereupon, as soon as conveniently may be, cause such or the like certificate thereof, in the nature of a quietus, to be made out and delivered, as is now practised by them with regard to declared accounts, and which shall be equally valid and effectual to discharge the accountants, and to all other intents and purposes.

48. Treasurers, with approval of Secretary of State, to provide court-houses, offices, &c.—That the treasurer of any court holden under this Act for which a court-house and offices, with necessary appurtenances, shall not have been already provided, or where such court-house and offices are inconvenient or insufficient, shall, as soon as conveniently may be, with the approval of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, build, purchase, hire, or otherwise provide messuages and lands, with all necessary appurtenances, fit for holding the court therein, and for the offices necessary for carrying on the business of the said court, or instead of providing separate buildings, may, with the like approval, contract with any person, being the owner of or having the control and management of any county or town-hall or other building, for the use and occupation thereof, or of so much thereof as may be needed for the purposes of this Act, and subject to such annual rent, and to such conditions as to the repairs, alterations, or improvements of such hall or building, as may be agreed upon; and all lands, messuages, and other real and personal estates and effects belonging to the court shall vest in the treasurer for the time being, and in his successors in that office, in trust for the purposes of this Act.

49. Where common gaols are inconvenient, prisons belonging to courts under Acts cited in schedules (A) and (B) may be used; 5 and 6 Vict. c. 98.—That it shall be lawful for any court holden under this Act, with the approval of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, to use as a prison for the purposes of this Act any prison now belonging to any court holden under any of the Acts cited in the said schedules (A) and (B), in all cases where it shall appear to the said Secretary of State that the common gaol or house of correction of the county, district, or place in which the court is established is inconveniently situated, or is not applicable for the use of the said courts; and whenever any such prison shall be so allowed to be used it shall be deemed one of the common gaols of the county for which it shall be used, as if it had been provided, after presentment of the insufficiency of one common gaol for such county, under the provisions of an Act passed in the sixth year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend the Laws concerning Prisons," or where such prison shall be situated within a borough having a separate court of sessions of the peace, it shall be deemed a house of correction for such borough.

50. Power for purchasing land.—That the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, shall apply to the purchase of lands by the treasurer of any such court for the purposes of this Act, except so much thereof as relates to the purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement; and in construing the said Act the treasurer acting with the approval of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State shall be deemed the promoter of the undertaking for which such lands are required.

51. Treasurer empowered to borrow money for the purposes of this Act.—That for the purpose of defraying the expenses of building, purchasing, or providing any messuages and lands for the purposes aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said treasurer to borrow and take up at interest so much money as he shall find to be necessary, the amount thereof, and the rate of interest in each case, being first allowed by the said commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury; and the treasurer may enter into and execute such securities as may be required, and the securities so entered into shall be binding on him and his successors in the office of treasurer for securing repayment of the moneys borrowed, with interest for the same, out of the general fund hereinafter mentioned, and shall enter in a book belonging to the court, to be kept by him for that purpose, the names of the several persons by whom any money shall be advanced for the purpose aforesaid, in the order in which the same shall be advanced, and the moneys so borrowed shall be paid off in the same order.

52. A general fund to be raised for paying off money borrowed.—That for raising a fund for providing a court house and offices, and for paying off any moneys which may be borrowed as aforesaid, and the interest due in respect thereof, the clerk of every court holden under the authority of this Act, in which and while it shall be necessary to raise such fund, shall demand and receive from the plaintiff in any suit brought in that court the sum of sixpence when the debt or damage claimed shall exceed twenty shillings and shall not exceed forty shillings, and for every claim exceeding forty shillings one twentieth part thereof, neglecting any sum less than sixpence in estimating such twentieth part, or such other sum in either case, not exceeding the rates herein-before mentioned, as one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, from time to time shall order, which sum, if not paid in the first instance by the plaintiff upon suit brought in the court, may be deducted from the sum recovered for the plaintiff, and shall be considered as costs in the cause; and the clerk of the court shall keep an account of all moneys so paid to him, and shall pay over the amount from time to time to the treasurer of the court, and the amount thereof shall accumulate, to form a fund to be called "The General Fund of the County Court of _____ at _____"

and shall be applied in the first place toward paying the interest of the several sums so borrowed, and in the second place toward paying the rent and other expenses necessarily incurred in holding the court, and in the third place toward paying off the several principal sums borrowed, in the order in which they were borrowed, and in the fourth place toward defraying the other expenses herein charged on the said general fund, in such manner as the judge, with the approval of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, shall direct; and the surplus which shall from time to time accumulate, after providing for all the said expenses, shall be paid over to the credit of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; subject, nevertheless, to any charge which may arise from any future deficiency of the same fund.

53. Property of courts in Schedules (A) and (B) to vest in the treasurer of the county court.—That, as soon as a court shall have been established in any district under this Act, all messuages, lands, and tenements, and all real estates and effects, vested in or belonging to the commissioners, clerks, treasurers, trustees, or other officers of any of the courts mentioned in the said Schedules (A) and (B), which were holden in trust for the purposes of such court, shall vest in or belong to the treasurer of the county court for the time being, and his successors in the said office, in trust for the purposes of this Act, for the like estate and interest, and subject to all the covenants, conditions, and agreements on which the same were respectively holden; and the said commissioners, clerks, treasurers, trustees, and other officers, their heirs, executors, and administrators, shall be freed and discharged from all such covenants, conditions, and agreements, and from the consequences of their being unable to fulfil any covenants, conditions, and agreements into which any of them may have lawfully entered in execution of the provisions of any of the said Acts, as or before the repeal of such Act, with respect to their estate or interest in such messuages, lands, tenements, real and personal estates and effects, in consequence of the vesting thereof in the said treasurer; and all moneys and securities for money, and other property and effects of any kind whatsoever, in the hands of the commissioners, clerks, treasurers, trustees, or other officers of any such court, shall be paid, transferred, and delivered to the said treasurer, or to such person as he shall appoint to receive the same, and shall be applied in discharging all claims and demands to which the same were liable in the hands of such commissioners, clerks, treasurers, trustees, or other officers, and the residue thereof shall be applied to the same purposes to which the general fund is applicable.

54. Provisions for outstanding liabilities.—That it shall be lawful for the treasurer of the county court, with the approval of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and upon the certificate of the expediency thereof under the hand of the judge, to sell and dispose of all messuages, lands, and tenements which may be vested in him under the provisions of this Act which shall not be needed for the purposes of this Act, or which the treasurers shall think ought to be sold, for the purpose of better enabling him to discharge any just debts on account of any court for which the constitution shall be altered under this Act, or to provide other and more convenient buildings for holding a county court; and the proceeds of all such sales, and also all moneys and securities for money which shall be paid, transferred, or delivered to him on account of any such court as aforesaid, shall be applied towards discharging such debts; and in every case in which at the time of the alteration of the constitution of the court there shall be any just debts owing on account of any such court, or any salaries or annuities legally or equitably chargeable upon it payable out of the fees of such court, or out of any fund to which such fees are payable, over and above what may be discharged by the moneys and effects so paid, transferred, or delivered to the treasurer on account of such court, and over and above the proceeds of the sale of any such messuages, lands, and tenements, in case the same or any part thereof shall be sold, such debts, salaries, and annuities shall be treated as if they were debts which had been incurred for the purpose of providing a court house for holding the county court for the district in which the place is included where such court was holden, and shall be liquidated out of the general fund hereinbefore mentioned, if the same shall be sufficient for that purpose, and any deficiency therein shall be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

55. Clerks to have the charge of the court houses, &c. and to appoint and dismiss serjeants, &c.—That the clerk of every court shall have the care of the court house and offices of the court, and shall appoint and have power to dismiss the necessary servants for taking charge of such court house and offices, at such salaries as shall be from time to time authorized by the judge, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury; and the clerk of the court, under the direction of the said commissioners, and subject to such regulations as they may require to be enforced, shall make all necessary contracts or otherwise provide for repairing and furnishing, and for cleaning, lighting, and warming, the said court house and offices, and for supplying the said court and offices with law and office books and stationery, and for defraying all other necessary expenses not otherwise provided for incident to the holding of the said court, and the charge of the court house and offices, and expenses thereby incurred, shall be paid out of the general fund of the court: provided always that the treasurer or clerk of any court, or the partner of any such treasurer or clerk, or any person in the service or employ of any such treasurer or clerk, shall not be directly or indirectly concerned or interested in any such contract, or in supplying any articles for the use of the said courts and offices: provided also, that no payment for any such charge shall be allowed in the clerk's accounts until allowed under the hand of the judge.

56. Judge to hold the court where her Majesty shall direct.—Notices for holding courts to be put up in a conspicuous place.—That the judge of each district shall attend and hold the county court at each place where her Majesty shall have ordered that the county court shall be holden within his district at such times as he shall appoint for that purpose, so that a court shall be holden in every such place once at least in every calendar month, or such other interval as one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State shall in each case order; and notice of the days on which the court will be holden shall be put up in some conspicuous place in the court house and in the office of the clerk of the court, and no other notice thereof shall be needed; and whenever any day so appointed for holding the court shall be altered, notice of such intended alteration, and of the time when it will take effect, shall be put up in some conspicuous place in the court house and in the clerk's office.

57. Process of the court to be under seal.—That for every court holden under this Act there shall be made a seal of the court, and all summonses and other process issuing out of the said court shall be sealed or stamped with the seal of the court; and every person who shall forge the seal or any process of the court, or who shall serve or enforce any such forged process, knowing the same to be forged, or deliver or cause to be delivered to any person any paper falsely purporting to be a copy of any summons or other process of the said court, knowing the same to be false, or who shall act or profess to act under any false colour or pretence of the process of the said court, shall be guilty of felony.

58. Jurisdiction of the court.—That all pleas of personal actions, where the debt or damage claimed is not more than twenty pounds, whether on balance of account or otherwise, may be holden in the county court, without writ; and all such actions brought in the said court shall be heard and determined in a summary way in a court constituted under this Act, and according to the provisions of this Act: provided always, that the court shall not have cognizance of any action of ejectment, or in which the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments, or to any toll, fair, market, or franchise, shall be in question, or in which the validity of any devise, bequest, or limitation under any will or settlement may be disputed, or for any malicious prosecution, or for any libel or slander, or for criminal conversation, or for seduction, or for breach of promise of marriage.

59. Suits to be by plaint.—That, on the application of any person desirous to bring a suit under this Act, the clerk of the court shall enter in a book to be kept for this purpose in his office a plaint in writing, stating the names of the last known places of abode of the parties, and the substance of the action intended to be brought, every one of which plaints shall be numbered in every year according to the order in which it shall be entered; and thereupon a summons, stating the substance of the action, and bearing the number of the plaint on the margin thereof, shall be issued under the seal of the court according to such form, and be served on the defendant so many days before the day on which the court shall be holden at which the cause is to be tried, as shall be directed by the rules made for regulating the practice of the court, as hereinafter provided; and delivery of such summons to the defendant, or in such other manner as shall be specified in the rules of practice, shall be deemed good service; and no misnomer or inaccurate description of any person or places in any such plaint or summons shall vitiate the same, so that the person or place be therein described so as to be commonly known.

60. Summons may issue, though cause of action may not arise in the district.—That such summons may issue in any district in which the defendant or one of the defendants shall dwell or carry on his business at the time of the action brought; or, by leave of the court for the district in which the defendant or one of the defendants shall have dwelt or carried on his business, at some time within six calendar months next before the time of the action brought, or in which the cause of action arose, such summons may issue in either of such last-mentioned courts.

61. Processes out of district of court may be served by bailiff of any other court.—That any summons or other process which under this Act shall be required to be served out of the district of the court from which the same shall have issued may be served by the bailiff of any court holden under this Act in any part of England, and such service shall be as valid as if the same had been made by the bailiff of the court out of which such summons or other process shall have issued within the jurisdiction of the court for which he acts.

62. Proof of service of process out of the district, or in the absence of the bailiff.—That service of any summons or other process of the court which shall require to be served out of the district of the court may be proved by affidavit purporting to be sworn before any judge of a county court, or before a master extraordinary in Chancery, or any person now authorized by law to take affidavits; and the fee for taking such affidavits shall not be more than one shilling, and shall be costs in the cause; and in every case of the unavoidable absence of the bailiff by whom any summons or other process of the court shall have been served the service of such summons or other process may be proved, if the judge shall think fit, in the same manner as a summons served out of the district of the court, but without additional charge to either of the parties to the suit.

63. Demands not to be divided for the purpose of bringing two or more suits.—That it shall not be lawful for any plaintiff to divide any cause of action for the purpose of bringing two or more suits in any of the said courts, but any plaintiff having cause of action for more than twenty pounds, for which a plaint might be entered under this Act if not for more than twenty pounds, may abandon the excess, and thereupon the plaintiff shall, on proving his case, recover to an amount not exceeding twenty pounds; and the judgment of the court upon such plaint shall be in full discharge of all demands in respect of such cause of action, and entry of the judgment shall be made accordingly.

64. Minors may sue for wages.—That it shall be lawful for any person under the age of twenty-one years to prosecute any suit in any court holden under this Act, for any sum of money not greater than twenty pounds which may be due to him for wages or piecework, or for work as a servant, in the same manner as if he were of full age.

65. Cases of Partnership and intestacy.—That the jurisdiction of the County Court under this Act shall extend to the recovery of any demand, not exceeding the sum of twenty pounds, which is the whole or part of the unliquidated balance of a partnership account, or the amount or part of the amount of a distributive share under an intestacy, or of any legacy under a will.

66. Executors may sue and be sued.—That it shall be lawful for any executor or administrator to sue and be sued in any court holden under this Act, in like manner as if he were a party in his own right and judgment, and execution shall be such as in the like case would be given or issued in any superior court.

67. No privilege allowed.—That no privilege, except as hereinafter excepted, shall be allowed to any person to exempt him from the jurisdiction of any court holden under this Act.

68. One of several persons liable may be sued.—That where any plaintiff shall have any demand recoverable under this Act against two or more persons jointly answerable, it shall be sufficient if any of such persons be served with process, and judgment may be obtained and execution issued against the person or persons so served, notwithstanding that others jointly liable may not have been served or sued, or may not be within the jurisdiction of the court; and every such person against whom judgment shall have been obtained under this Act, and who shall have satisfied such judgment, shall be entitled to demand and recover in the County Court under this Act, contribution from any other person jointly liable with him.

69. Judge alone to determine all questions, unless a jury be summoned.—That the judge of the County Court shall be the sole judge in all actions brought in the said court, and shall determine all questions as well of fact as of law, unless a jury shall be summoned as hereinafter mentioned; and no suitors shall in any case be summoned to hold or have any jurisdiction in any court holden under this Act.

70. Actions may be tried by a jury when parties require it.—That in all actions where the amount claimed shall exceed five pounds it shall be lawful for the plaintiff or defendant to require a jury to be summoned to try the said action; and in all actions where the amount claimed shall not exceed five pounds it shall be lawful for the judge, in his discretion, on the application of either of the parties, to order that such action be tried by a jury; and in every case such jury shall be summoned according to the provisions hereinafter contained: provided always, that the party requiring a jury to be summoned shall give to the clerk of the court, or leave at his office, such notice thereof as shall be directed by the rules made for regulating the practice of the court as hereinafter provided; and the said clerk shall cause notice of such demand of a jury, made either by the plaintiff or defendant, to be communicated to the other party to the said action, either by post, or by causing the same to be delivered at his usual place of abode or business; but it shall not be necessary for either party to prove on the trial that such notice was communicated to the other party by the clerk.

71. Party requiring jury to make a deposit.—That every party requiring any jury to be summoned shall at the time of giving the said notice, and before he shall be entitled to have such jury summoned, pay to the clerk of the court the sum of five shillings for payment of the jury, and such sum shall be considered as costs in the cause, unless otherwise ordered by the judge.

72. Who shall be jurors.—That the sheriff of every county, and the high bailiffs of Westminster and Southwark, shall cause to be delivered to the clerk of the court a list of persons qualified and liable to serve as jurors in the courts of assize and nisi prius for their county, city, and borough respectively, within fourteen days from the receipt of the jury book from the clerk of the peace of the county or other officer, each list containing only the names of persons residing within the jurisdiction of the court, for which list the said sheriffs and high bailiffs shall be entitled to receive out of the general fund of the court a fee after the rate of two-pence for every folio of seventy-two words; and whenever a jury shall be required the clerk of the court shall cause so many of the persons named in the list as shall be needed in the opinion of the judge to be summoned to attend the court at a time and place to be mentioned in the summons, and shall administer or cause to be administered to such of them as shall be impanelled to try any cause or causes an oath to give true verdicts according to the evidence; and the persons so summoned shall attend at the court at the time mentioned in the summons, and in default of attendance shall forfeit such sum of money as the judge shall direct, not being more than five pounds for each default; and the delivery of such summons to the person whose attendance is required on such jury, or delivery thereof to his wife or servant, or any inmate at his usual place of abode, trading, or dealing, shall be deemed good service: provided always, that no person shall be summoned or compelled to serve on such jury more than twice within one year, or who shall have been summoned and shall have attended upon any jury at the assizes, or at any court of nisi prius, or at the Central Criminal Court for the same county, within six calendar months next before the delivery of such summons.

73. Number of the jury.—That whenever there are any jury trials five jurymen shall be impanelled and sworn, as occasion shall require, to give their verdicts in the causes which shall be brought before them in the said court, and being once sworn shall not need to be re-sworn in each trial; and either of the parties to any such cause shall be entitled to his lawful challenge against all or any of the said jurors in like manner as he would be entitled in any superior court; and the jurymen so sworn shall be required to give an unanimous verdict.

74. Proceedings on hearing the plaint.—That on the day in that behalf named in the summons the plaintiff shall appear, and thereupon the defendant shall be required to appear to answer such plaint; and on answer being made in court the judge shall proceed in a summary way to try the cause, and give judgment, without further pleading, or formal joinder of issue.

75. No evidence to be given that is not in summons.—That no evidence shall be given by the plaintiff on the trial of any such cause as aforesaid of any demand or cause of action, except such as shall be stated in the summons hereby directed to be issued.

76. Notices to be given to the clerk of special defences, who shall communicate the same to the plaintiff.—That no defendant in any court holden under this Act shall be allowed to set off any debt or demand claimed or recoverable by him from the plaintiff, or to set up by way of defence and to claim and have the benefit of infancy, coverture, or any statute of limitations, or of his discharge under any statute relating to bankrupts, or any Act for relief of insolvent debtors, without the consent of the plaintiff, unless such notice thereof as shall be directed by the rules made for regulating the practice of the court shall have been given to the clerk of the court; and in every case in which the practice of the court shall require such notice to be given the clerk of the court shall, as soon as conveniently may be, after receiving such notice, communicate the same to the plaintiff by the post, or by causing the same to be delivered at his usual place of abode or business; but it shall not be necessary for the defendant to prove on the trial that such notice was communicated to the plaintiff by the clerk.

77. Suits may be settled by arbitration.—That the judge may in any case, with the consent of both parties to the suit, order the same, with or without other matters within the jurisdiction of the court in dispute between such parties, to be referred to arbitration, to such person or persons, and in such manner, and on such terms as he shall think reasonable and just; and such reference shall not be revocable by either party, except by the consent of the judge; and the award of the arbitrator or arbitrators or umpire shall be entered as the judgment in the cause, and shall be as binding and effectual to all intents as if given by the judge; provided that the judge may, if he think fit, on application to him at the first court held after the expiration of one week after the entry of such award, set aside any such award so given as aforesaid, or may, with the consent of both parties aforesaid, revoke the reference, or order another reference to be made in the manner aforesaid.

78. Forms of procedure in courts to be framed by the judges.—That five of the judges of the superior courts of common law at Westminster, including the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, or one of the said chiefs at least, shall have power to make and issue all the general rules for regulating the practice and proceedings of the county courts holden under this Act, and also to frame forms for every proceeding in the said courts for which they shall think it necessary that a form be provided, and also for keeping all books, entries, and accounts to be kept by the clerks of the said courts, and from time to time to alter any such rule or form; and the rules so made, and the forms so framed, shall be observed and used in all the courts holden under this Act; and in any case not expressly provided for herein, or by the said rules, the general principles of practice in the superior courts of common law may be adopted and applied at the discretion of the judges, to actions and proceedings in their several courts.

79. Proceedings if plaintiff does not appear or prove his case.—That if upon the day of the return of any summons, or at any continuation or adjournment of the said court, or of the cause for which the said summons shall have been issued, the plaintiff shall not appear, the cause shall be struck out; and if he shall appear, but shall not make proof of his demand to the satisfaction of the court, it shall be lawful for the judge to nonsuit the plaintiff, or to give judgment for the defendant, and in either case, where the defendant shall appear and shall not admit the demand, to award to the defendant, by way of costs and satisfaction for his trouble and attendance, such sum as the judge in his discretion shall think fit, and such sum shall be recoverable from the plaintiff by such ways and means as any debt or damage ordered to be paid by the same court can be recovered: provided always, that if the plaintiff shall not appear when called upon, and the defendant, or some one duly authorized on his behalf, shall appear, and admit the cause of action to the full amount claimed, and pay the fees payable in the first instance by the plaintiff, the court, if it shall think fit, may proceed to give judgment as if the plaintiff had appeared.

80. Proceedings if the defendant does not appear.—That if on the day so named in the summons, or at any continuation or adjournment of the court or cause in which the summons was issued, the defendant shall not appear, or sufficiently excuse his absence, or shall neglect to answer when called in court, the judge, upon due proof of service of the summons, may proceed to the hearing or trial of the cause on the part of the plaintiff only, and the judgment thereupon shall be as valid as if both parties had attended: provided always, that the judge in any such case, at the same or any subsequent court, may set aside any judgment so given in the absence of the defendant, and the execution thereupon, and may grant a new trial of the cause, upon such terms, if any, as to payment of costs, giving security for debt or costs, or such other terms as he may think fit, on sufficient cause shewn to him for that purpose.

81. Judge may grant time.—That the judge may in any case make orders for granting time to the plaintiff or defendant to proceed in the prosecution or defence of the suit, and also may from time to time adjourn any court, or the hearing or further hearing of any cause, in such manner as to the judge may seem fit.

82. Defendant may pay money into court. Notice of such payment to be given to plaintiff.—That it shall be lawful for the defendant in any action brought under this Act, within such time as shall be directed by the rules made for regulating the practice of the court, to pay into court such sum of money as he shall think a full satisfaction for the demand of the plaintiff, together with the costs incurred by the plaintiff up to the time of such payment; and notice of such payment shall be communicated by the clerk of the court to the plaintiff by post, or by causing the same to be delivered at his usual place of abode or business; and the said sum of money shall be paid to the plaintiff; but if he shall elect to proceed, and if the plaintiff shall recover no further sum in the action than shall have been so paid into court, the plaintiff shall pay to the defendant the costs incurred by him in the said action after such payment; and such costs shall be settled by the court, and an order shall thereupon be made by the court for the payment of such costs by the plaintiff.

83. Parties and others may be examined.—That on the hearing or trial of any action or on any other proceeding under this Act the parties thereto, their wives and all other persons, may be examined, either on behalf of the plaintiff or defendant, upon oath, or solemn affirmation in those cases in which persons are by law allowed to make affirmation instead of taking an oath, to be administered by the proper officer of the court.

84. Persons giving false evidence guilty of perjury.—That every person who in any examination upon oath or solemn affirmation before any judge of the county court shall wilfully and corruptly give false evidence shall be deemed guilty of perjury.

85. Summons to witnesses.—That either of the parties to the suit or any other proceeding under this Act may obtain, at the office of the clerk of the court, summonses to witnesses, to be served by one of the bailiffs of the court, with or without a clause requiring the production of books, deeds, papers, and writings in their possession or control, and in any such summons any number of names may be inserted.

86. Penalty on witnesses neglecting summons.—That every person on whom any such summons shall have been served, either personally or in such other manner as shall be directed by the general rules or practice of the courts, and to whom at the same time payment or a tender of payment of his expenses shall have been made on such scale of allowance as shall be from time to time settled by the general rules of the practice of the court, and who shall refuse or neglect, without sufficient cause, to appear, or to produce any books, papers, or writings required by such summons to be produced, and also every person present in court who shall be required to give evidence, and who shall refuse to be sworn and give evidence, shall forfeit and pay such fine, not exceeding ten pounds, as the judge shall set on him; and the whole or any part of such fine, in the discretion of the judge, after deducting the costs, shall be applicable toward indemnifying the party injured by such refusal or neglect, and the remainder thereof shall form part of the general fund of the court in which the fine was imposed.

87. Fines how to be enforced and accounted for.—That payment of any fine imposed by any court under the authority of this Act may be enforced upon the order of the judge in like manner as payment of any debt adjudged in the said court, and shall be accounted for as herein provided.

88. Costs to abide the event of the action.—That all the costs of any action or proceeding in the court, not herein otherwise provided for, shall be paid by or apportioned between the parties in such manner as the judge shall think fit, and in default of any special direction shall abide the event of the action, and execution may issue for the recovery of any such costs in like manner as for any debt adjudged in the said court.

89. Judgments how far final.—That every order and judgment of any court holden under this Act, except as herein provided, shall be final and conclusive between the parties, but the judge shall have power to nonsuit the plaintiff in every case in which satisfactory proof shall not be given to him entitling either the plaintiff or defendant to the judgment of the court, and shall also in every case where he has the power, if he shall think fit, to order a new trial to be had upon such terms as he shall think reasonable, and in the meantime to stay the proceedings.

90. No actions to be removed into superior courts but on certain conditions.—That no plaint entered in any court holden under this Act shall be removed or removable from the said court into any of her Majesty's superior courts of record by any writ or process, unless the debt or damage claimed shall exceed five pounds, and then only by leave of a judge of one of the said superior courts, in cases which shall appear to the judge fit to be tried in one of the superior courts, and upon such terms as to payment of costs, giving security for debt or costs, or such other terms as he shall think fit.

91. Who may appear for any party in the superior courts.—That no person shall be entitled to appear for any other party to any proceeding in any of the said courts unless he be an attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of record, or a barrister-at-law instructed by such attorney on behalf of the party, or, by leave of the judge, any other person allowed by the judge to appear instead of such party; but no barrister, attorney, or other person, except by leave of the judge, shall be entitled to be heard to argue any question as counsel for any other person in any proceeding in any court holden under this Act; and no person, not being an attorney admitted to one of her Majesty's superior courts of record, shall be entitled to have or recover any sum of money for appearing or acting on behalf of any other person in the said court; and no attorney shall be entitled to have or recover therefor any sum of money, unless the debt or damage claimed shall be more than forty shillings, or to have or recover more than ten shillings for his fees and costs, unless the debt or damage claimed shall be more than five pounds, or more than fifteen shillings in any case within the summary jurisdiction given by this Act; and in no case shall any fee exceeding one pound three shillings and sixpence be allowed for employing a barrister as counsel in the cause; and the expense of employing a barrister or an attorney, either by plaintiff or defendant, shall not be allowed on taxation of costs in the case of a plaintiff where less than five pounds is recovered, or in the case of a defendant where less than five pounds is claimed, or in any case unless by order of the judge.

92. Court may make orders for payment by instalments.—That the judge may make orders concerning the time or times and by what instalments any debt or damages or costs for which judgment shall be obtained in the said court shall be paid, and all such moneys shall be paid into court, unless the judge shall otherwise direct.

93. Cross judgments.—That if there shall be cross judgments between the parties execution shall be taken out by that party only who shall have obtained judgment for the larger sum, and for so much only as shall remain after deducting the smaller sum, and satisfaction for the remainder shall be entered, as well as satisfaction on the judgment for the smaller sum, and if both same shall be equal satisfaction shall be entered upon both judgments.

94. Court may award execution against goods.—That whenever the judge shall have made an order for the payment of money, the amount shall be recoverable, in case of default or failure of payment thereof forthwith, or at the time or times and in the manner thereby directed, by execution against the goods and chattels of the party against whom such order shall be made; and the clerk of the said court, at the request of the party prosecuting such order, shall issue under the seal of the court a writ of fieri facias as a warrant of execution to the high bailiff of the court, who by such warrant shall be empowered to levy, or cause to be levied, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such party, such sum of money as shall be so ordered, whosoever they may be found within the district of the court, whether within liberties or without, and also the costs of the execution; and all constables and other peace officers within their several jurisdictions shall aid in the execution of every such warrant.

95. Execution not to issue till after default in payment of some instalment, and then if may issue for the whole sum due.—That if the judge shall have made any order for payment of any sum of money by instalments, execution upon such order shall not issue against the party until after default in payment of some instalment according to such order, and execution or successive executions may be issued for the whole of the said sum of money and costs then remaining unpaid, or for such portion thereof as the judge shall order, either at the time of making the original order, or at any subsequent time, under the seal of the court.

96. What goods may be taken in execution.—That every bailiff or officer executing any process of execution issuing out of the said county court against the goods and chattels of any person may by virtue thereof seize and take any of the goods and chattels of such person (excepting the wearing apparel and bedding of such person or his family, and the tools and implements of his trade to the value of five pounds, which shall to that extent be protected from such seizure), and may also seize and take any money or bank notes (whether of the bank of England or of any other bank), and any cheques, bills of exchange, promissory notes, bonds, specialties, or securities for money, belonging to any such person against whom any such execution shall have issued as aforesaid.

97. Securities seized to be held by high bailiff.—That the high bailiff shall hold any cheques, bills of exchange, promissory notes, bonds, specialties, or other securities for money which shall have been so seized or taken as aforesaid, as a security or securities for the amount directed to be levied by such execution, or so much thereof as shall not have been otherwise levied or raised for the benefit of the plaintiff; and the plaintiff may sue in the name of the defendant, or in the name of any person in whose name the defendant might have sued, for the recovery of the sum or sums secured or made payable thereby, when the time of payment thereof shall have arrived.

98. Parties having obtained an unsatisfied judgment may obtain a summons on charge of fraud.—That it shall be lawful for any party who has obtained any unsatisfied judgment or order in any court held by virtue of this Act, or under any Act repealed by this Act, for the payment of any debt or damages or costs, to obtain a summons from any county court within the limits of which any other party shall then dwell or carry on his business, such summons to be in such form as shall be directed by the rules made for regulating the practice of the county courts as herein provided, and to be served personally upon the person to whom it is directed, requiring him to appear at such time as shall be directed by the said rules to answer such things as are named in such summons; and if he shall appear in pursuance of such summons he may be examined upon oath touching his estate and effects, and the manner and circumstances under which he contracted the debt or incurred the damages or liability which is the subject of the action in which judgment has been obtained against him; and as to the means and expectation he then had, and as to the property and means he still hath, of discharging the said debt or damages or liability, and as to the disposal he may have made of any property; and the person obtaining such summons as aforesaid, and all other witnesses whom the judge shall think requisite, may be examined upon oath touching the inquiries authorised to be made as aforesaid; and the costs of such summons and of all proceedings thereon shall be deemed costs in the cause.

99. Commitment for fraud, &c.—That if the party so summoned shall not attend as required by such summons, and shall not allege a sufficient excuse for not attending, or shall, if attending, refuse to be sworn, or to disclose any of the things aforesaid, or if he shall not make answer touching the same to the satisfaction of such judge, or if it shall appear to such judge, either by the examination of the party or by any other evidence, that such party, if a defendant, is incurring the debt or liability which is the subject of the action in which judgment has been obtained has obtained credit from the plaintiff under false pretences, or by means of fraud or breach of trust, or has wilfully contracted such debt or liability without having at the same time a reasonable expectation of being able to pay or discharge the same, or shall have made, or caused to be made, any gift, delivery, or transfer of any property, or shall have charged, removed, or concealed the same, with intent to defraud his creditors, or any of them, or if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the judge of the said court that the party so summoned has then, or has had since the judgment obtained against him, sufficient means and ability to pay the debt or damages or costs so recovered against him, either altogether, or by any instalment or instalments which the court in which the judgment was obtained shall have ordered, and if he shall refuse or neglect to pay the same as shall have been so ordered, or as shall be ordered pursuant to the power hereinafter provided, it shall be lawful for such judge, if he shall think fit, to order that any such party may be committed to the common gaol or house of correction of the county, district, or place in which the party summoned is resident, or to any prison which shall be provided as the prison of the court, for any period not exceeding forty days.

100. Power of judge to rescind or alter orders.—That it shall be lawful for the judge of any court before whom such summons shall be heard, if he shall think fit, whether or not he shall make any order for the commitment of the defendant, to rescind or alter any order that shall have been previously made against any defendant so summoned before him for the payment, by instalments or otherwise, of any debt or damages recovered, and to make any further or other order, either for the payment of the whole of such debt or damages and costs forthwith, or by any instalments, or in any other manner as such judge may think reasonable and just.

101. Power to examine and commit at hearing of the cause.—That in every case where the defendant in any suit brought in any county court shall have been personally served with the summons to appear, or shall personally appear at the trial of the same, the judge at the hearing of the cause, or at any adjournment thereof if judgment shall be given against the defendant, shall have the same power and authority of examining the defendant and the plaintiff and other parties touching the several things hereinbefore mentioned, and of committing the defendant to prison, and of making an order, as he might have and exercise under the provisions hereinbefore contained in case the plaintiff had obtained a summons for that purpose after the judgment obtained as hereinbefore mentioned.

102. Mode of issuing and executing warrants of commitment.—That whenever any order of commitment shall have been made as aforesaid, the clerk of the said court shall issue under the seal of the court a warrant of commitment, directed to one of the bailiffs of any county court, who by such warrant shall be empowered to take the body of the person against whom such order shall be made; and all constables and other peace officers within their several jurisdictions shall aid in the execution of every such warrant; and the gaoler or keeper of every gaol, house of correction, and prison mentioned in any such order shall be bound to receive and keep the defendant therein until discharged under the provisions of this Act, or otherwise by due course of law; and no protection, order, or certificate granted by any court of bankruptcy, or for the relief of insolvent debtors, shall be available to discharge any defendant from any commitment under such last-mentioned order.

103. Imprisonment not to operate as a satisfaction for the debt, &c.—That no imprisonment under this Act shall in anywise operate as a satisfaction or extinguishment of the debt or other cause of action on which a judgment has been obtained, or protect the defendant from being anew summoned and imprisoned for any new fraud or other default rendering him liable to be imprisoned under this Act, or deprive the plaintiff of any right to take out execution against the goods and chattels of the defendant, in the same manner as if such imprisonment had not taken place.

104. How execution may be had out of the jurisdiction of the court.—That in all cases where a warrant of execution shall have been issued against the goods and chattels of any party, or an order for his commitment shall have been made under this Act, and such party, or his goods and chattels, shall be out of the jurisdiction of the court, it shall be lawful for the high bailiff of the court to send such warrant of execution or of commitment to the clerk of any other court constituted under this Act, within the jurisdiction of which such party, or his goods and chattels, shall then be or be believed to be, with a warrant thereto annexed, under the hand of the high bailiff and seal of the court from which the original warrant issued, requiring execution of the same, and the clerk of the court to which the same shall be sent shall seal or stamp the same with the seal of his court, and issue the same to the high bailiff of his court, and thereupon such last-mentioned high bailiff shall be authorized and required to act in all respects as if the original warrant of execution or commitment had been directed to him by the court of which he is the high bailiff, and shall, within such time as shall be specified in the rules of practice, return to the high bailiff of the court from which the same originally issued, what he shall have done in the execution of such process, and in case a levy shall have been made, shall, within such time as shall be specified in the rules of practice, pay over all moneys received in pursuance of the warrant to the high bailiff of the court from which the same shall have originally issued, retaining the fees for execution of the process; and where any order of commitment shall have been made, and the person apprehended, he shall be forthwith conveyed, in custody of the bailiff or officer apprehending him, to the gaol or house of correction or other prison of the court within the jurisdiction of which he shall have been apprehended, and kept therein for the time mentioned in the warrant of commitment, unless sooner discharged under the provisions of this Act; and all constables and other peace officers shall be aiding and assisting within their respective districts in the execution of such warrant.

105. Power to judge to suspend execution in certain cases.—That if it shall at any time appear to the satisfaction of the judge, by the oath or affirmation of any person, or otherwise, that any defendant is unable, from sickness or other sufficient cause, to pay and discharge the debt or damages recovered against him, or any instalment thereof ordered to be paid as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the judge, in his discretion, to suspend or stay any judgment, order, or execution given, made, or issued in such action, for such time and on such terms as the judge shall think fit, and so from time to time until it shall appear by the like proof as aforesaid that such temporary cause of disability has ceased.

106. Regulating the sale of goods taken in execution.—That no sale of any goods which shall be taken in execution as aforesaid shall be until after the end of five days at least next following the day on which such goods shall have been so taken, unless such goods be of a perishable nature, or upon the request in writing of the party whose goods shall have been taken; and until such sale the goods shall be deposited by the bailiff in some fit place, or they may remain in the custody of a fit person approved by the high bailiff, to be put into possession by the bailiff; and it shall be lawful for the high bailiff, from time to time as he shall think proper, to appoint such and so many persons for keeping possession, and so many sworn brokers and appraisers for the purpose of selling or valuing any goods, chattels, or effects taken in execution under this Act, as shall appear to him to be necessary, and to direct security to be taken from each of them, for such sum and in such manner as he shall think fit, for the faithful performance of their duties without injury or oppression; and the judge or high bailiff may dismiss any person, broker, or appraiser so appointed; and no goods taken in execution under this Act shall be sold for the purpose of satisfying the warrant of execution, except by one of the brokers or appraisers so appointed; and the brokers or appraisers so appointed shall be entitled to have, out of the produce of the goods so distrained or sold, sixpence in the pound on the value of the goods for the appraisement thereof, whether by one broker or more, over and above the stamp duty, and for advertisements, catalogues, sale and commission, and delivery of goods, one shilling in the pound on the net produce of the sale.

107. As to the liability of goods taken in execution under 8 Anne, c. 17; landlords may claim certain rents in arrear; bailiffs making levies may distrain for rent and costs; in case of replevins; 57 Geo. 3, c. 93.—That so much of an Act passed in the eighth year of the reign of Queen Anne, intitled "An Act for the better Security of Rents, and to prevent Frauds committed by Tenants," as relates to the liability of goods taken by virtue of any execution, shall not be deemed to apply to goods taken in execution under the process of any court holden under this Act; but the landlord of any tenement in which any such goods shall be so taken shall be entitled, by any writing under his hand or under the hand of his agent, to be delivered to the bailiff or officer making the levy, which writing shall state the terms of holding, and the rent payable for the same, to claim any rent in arrear then due to him, not exceeding the rent of four weeks where the tenement is let by the week, and not exceeding the rent accruing due in two terms of payment, where the tenement is let for any other term less than a year, and not exceeding in any case the rent accruing due in one year; and in case of any such claim being so made, the bailiff or officer making the levy shall distrain as well for the amount of the rent so claimed, and the costs of such additional distress, as for the amount of money and costs for which the warrant of execution issued under this Act, and shall not proceed to sell the same or any part thereof within five days next after such distress taken; and if any replevin be made of the goods so taken, such of the goods shall be sold under the execution as shall satisfy the money and costs for which the warrant of execution issued, and the costs of the sale; and the overplus of such sale (if any), and also the residue of the goods, shall be returned as in other cases of distress for rent, and replevin thereof; and for every such additional distress for rent in arrear the high bailiff of the court shall be entitled to have as the costs of the distress, instead of the fees allowed by this Act for making such distress, and keeping possession thereof, the fees allowed by an Act passed in the fifty-seventh year of the reign of King George the Third, intitled "An Act to regulate the Costs of Distresses levied for Payment of small Rents."

108. No execution shall be stayed by Writ of Error.—That no judgment or execution shall be stayed, delayed, or reversed upon or by any Writ of Error, or superedeas thereon, to be sued for the reversing of any judgment given in any court holden under the provisions of this Act.

109. Execution to be superseded on payment of debt and costs.—That in or upon every warrant of execution issued against the goods and chattels of any person whomsoever the clerk of the court shall cause to be inserted or endorsed the sum of money and costs adjudged, with the sums allowed by this Act as increased costs for the execution of such warrant; and if the party against whom such execution shall be issued shall, before an actual sale of the goods and chattels, pay or cause to be paid or tendered unto the clerk of the court out of which such warrant of execution has issued, or to the bailiff holding the warrant of execution, such sum of money and costs as aforesaid, or such part thereof as the person entitled thereto shall agree to accept in full of his debt or damages and costs, together with the fees herein directed to be paid, the execution shall be superseded, and the goods and chattels of the said party shall be discharged and set at liberty.

110. Debtor to be discharged from custody upon payment of debt and costs.—That any person imprisoned under this Act who shall have paid or satisfied the debt or demand, or the instalments thereof payable, and costs remaining due at the time of the order of imprisonment being made, together with the costs of obtaining such order, and all subsequent costs, shall be discharged out of custody, upon the certificate of such payment or satisfaction, signed by the clerk of the court, by leave of the judge of the court in which the order of imprisonment was made.

111. Minutes of proceedings to be kept.—That the clerk of every court holden under this Act shall cause a note of all plaints and summonses, and of all orders, and of all judgments and executions, and returns thereto, and of all fines, and of all other proceedings of the court, to be fairly entered from time to time in a book belonging to the court, which shall be kept at the office of the court; and such entries in the said book, or a copy thereof bearing the seal of the court, and purporting to be signed and certified as a true copy by the clerk of the court, shall at all times be admitted in all courts and places whatsoever as evidence of such entries, and of the proceeding referred to by such entry or entries, and of the regularity of such proceeding, without any further proof.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

BELOW will be found the Report of the Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales, shewing the progress of commutation during the year 1845. The committee justly complain of the obscurity and unsettled state of the law on this subject. Other matter of interest follows.

Report of the Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales, to her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the Act 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71:—1846.

Tithe Commission, 19th August, 1846.

Sir,—It is our duty to report to you the progress of the commutation of tithes in England and Wales, to the close of the year 1845.

We have received notices that voluntary proceedings have commenced in 9,623 tithe districts; of these notices 29 were received during the year 1845.

We have received 7,031 agreements, and confirmed 6,704; of these 67 have been received and 88 confirmed during the year 1845.

5,489 notices for making awards have been issued, of which 944 were issued during the year 1845.

We have received 3,916 drafts of compulsory awards, and confirmed 3,376; of these 592 have been received and 585 have been confirmed during the year 1845.

We have received 8,995 apportionments, and confirmed 8,660; and of these 657 have been received and 741 confirmed during the year 1845.

In 10,080 tithe districts, as will be seen from the above statement, the rent-charges to be hereafter paid, have been finally established by confirmed agreements or confirmed awards.

We have in our possession agreements and drafts of awards as yet unconfirmed, which will include 867 additional tithe districts; and make a total, when completed, of 10,947 districts in which the tithes will have been commuted.

We have to repeat the assurance which we have happily been able to give in all our former reports, that the processes of commutation are going on, on the whole, tranquilly and satisfactorily.

We have adverted, in two former reports, to the state of the law under what is called Lord Tenterden's Act.

We have to express our deep regret that that law remains as uncertain as ever. While this uncertainty continues, it is impossible for us to adjudicate with any justice to the parties in very many cases which await our decision, and in which proceedings are necessarily suspended.

We have before explained the very serious delay which must result from postponing these cases.

All the alterations and fresh powers which we have ventured to suggest in our two last reports will be carried out, if a bill now before the legislature should receive the royal assent this session.

We have the honour to be, Sir,

Your faithful and obedient Servants,

WM. BLAMIRE,
R. JONES.

To the Right Hon.

Sir George Grey, Bart. &c. &c. &c.
Home Office.

ADDITIONAL CORONERS FOR THE COUNTY OF GLOUCESTER.—An Act of Council, dated Osborne House, 27th August, 1846, directs that the county be divided into four districts, for the purposes of the Act 7th and 8th Victoria, "to amend the law respecting the office of County Coroner." The 1st district is to be called the Lower Division, and to comprise all the western parliamentary division on the south side of the Severn, except the parishes of Arlingham and Beverstone; the 2nd to be called the Stroud Division, and comprise the boroughs of Stroud and Cirencester; the southern part of the eastern parliamentary division of the county and the parishes of Arlingham and Beverstone; the 3rd to be called the Upper Division, and comprise the town of Cheltenham, and the northern part of the eastern parliamentary division, except certain parishes and hamlets on the north-west side of the Severn, and exclusive of the borough of Tewkesbury and the city of Gloucester; the 4th to be called the Forest Division, and to comprise the whole of the western parliamentary division of the county on the north-west side of the Severn, and the parishes or hamlets of Ashleworth Corse, Forthampton, Hasfield, Hartpur, Highleadon, Highnam, Over and Linton, Lassington, Malsemore, Tirley and Haw, and Twynning, part of the eastern parliamentary division, on the north-west side of the Severn. The Courts for the election of coroners in each division are to be held, and the polls taken, when necessary: for the Lower Division, at Wickwar; for the Stroud Division, at Stroud; for the Upper Division, at Cheltenham; for the Forest Division, at Newnam. Compensation (to be assessed by the Commissioners of the Treasury) is awarded to William Joyner Ellis, one of the present coroners, who had for seven years before the passing of the Act acted as coroner for the part of the Forest of Dean, and several parishes and places on the forest side of the Severn, which will be taken from his customary district. Neither of the other coroners has claimed or is entitled to compensation.

THE MILITIA.—The annexed communication, which was issued from the War-office, on Wednesday, September 9, will put at rest, at all events for the present, any further speculation and excitement regarding the embodying of the Militia. What the intention of the present Government may be with regard to the future it is impossible to say, but the fact that nothing can occur until the next meeting of Parliament should be generally known. The letter, dated September, 9, and signed by Mr. Fox Maule, Deputy-Secretary-at-War, proceeds:—"With reference to the circular communications from the War-office, dated 23rd of May and 27th of June last, on the subject of re-organizing the staff of the — regiment of Militia, under your command, I have the honour to acquaint you that it is not intended at present to take any further measures for revising the laws relating to the Militia, nor for assembling that force for training and exercise. I have therefore to request, that in all cases where any sergeant belonging to the corps under your command shall have been admitted to the out-pension list, you will be pleased to suspend the filling up of the vacancy, and also any vacancies which might have existed from other causes on the reduced establishment of the staff, until the course to be taken by her Majesty's Government in reference to the Militia shall have been further considered."

PAUPER LUNATIC STATISTICS OF ENGLAND AND WALES.—A recent parliamentary return shews that in January last there were in England alone 16,310 lunatics and idiots chargeable; and in Wales, 1,295; which, with an estimate for places not in union with parishes, makes a total of 17,887—9,712 being lunatics, and 8,175 idiots. Of these county asylums contained 4,675, unions 4,397. In licensed houses, 3,363; and with their friends, or elsewhere, there were 3,873. The ages varied from 5 to upwards of 70; there being 5 under 5 years old, 61 from 5 to 10, 940 from 10 to 20, 3,158 from 20 to 30, 3,682 from 30 to 40, 3,584 from 40 to 50, 2,563 from 50 to 60, 1,575 from 60 to 70, and 699 from 70 years old and upwards. Of the whole 4,244 were dangerous to themselves. It will be seen by the above return that the malady prevails most between the ages of 20 and 30.

THE GAME-LAWS IN GERMANY.—According to a law promulgated in 1840, the gamekeepers of noblemen in Germany have the right of firing at poachers, if the latter do not throw down their guns upon the first summons.

SUPERINTENDENT OF CONVICTS.—By Act of last session (9 & 10 Vict. c. 26) male persons convicted in Great Britain, and sent out of England to labour either on land or on board a vessel, are taken out of the charge of the superintendent of convicts (Mr. Capper), and placed under the charge of the governor of the place. The office of "superintendent of convicts" in England under sentence or order of transportation is to be abolished on the next vacancy, and the convicts thenceforth to be under the care of a person or persons appointed by the Government.

TURNPIKES IN SOUTH WALES.—An abstract of the general statements of the income and expenditure of the turnpike-roads in South Wales, for the year 1845, has been printed in a Parliamentary paper. The total income was 9,917l. 5s. 5d. from the six counties, and the expenditure was 9,236l. 5s. 2d. The annuities payable in 1846 amounted to 11,046l. 17s. There is a column in the return for "law expenses;" but it seems that none were incurred in the year. The salaries of the clerks to county-roads' boards, amounted to 315l.; to district-roads' boards, 345l.; to surveyors, 1,365l.; and to pay-clerks, 60l.

The following buildings have been duly registered for the solemnization of marriages, pursuant to the Act of the 6th and 7th Wm. IV., c. 85:—Blackfriars Chapel, situated at Canterbury, in the County of Kent. The Independent Chapel, situated in Hartlepool, in the parish of Hartlepool, in the County of Durham, in the district of Stockton and Sedgfield. St. George's Presbyterian Church, situated in Myrtle-street, in the parish of Liverpool, in the county of Lancaster, in the district of Liverpool. Sardis Chapel, situated at Comun Coed Yr Ynis, in the parish of Llangunlodd, in the county of Brecknock, in the district of Crickhowell.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

WE invite attention to a letter from Mr. DURANT, of Chelmsford, and the report of the decision of Mr. GEPP, the County Clerk for Essex (which will be found under the head "Correspondence"), on the circumstance of Attorneys lending their names to unqualified persons, who, thenceforth, practise under such sanction. There is both justice and truth in the subjoined letter, addressed to the "Editor of the Times," on the subject of the Certificate Duty. The last paragraph, we fear, unfolds the true reason why an energetic attempt is not made by the profession in one body to rid themselves of that partial and oppressive burthen—The Certificate Duty.

INEQUALITIES OF TAXATION.

THE CERTIFICATE DUTY.

To the Editor of the Times.

SIR,—Having read your remarks on the subject of the extremely heavy manner in which our system of taxation bears upon the professional man and the small tradesman, in which you instance especially the case of the country surgeon, may I be excused for bringing under your notice, and that of your readers, another case—that of the London attorney? It must be pretty generally known how peculiarly difficult it is for a young man in this profession to get into employment. It must also be known how small an amount of business can be transacted in any given space of time without the assistance of clerks; yet in this profession alone are its members obliged to pay an annual duty altogether distinct from the income-tax. A London attorney pays 6l. a year as such duty if he has not been admitted three years, and 12l. after three years; if he spend the first three years of his professional career in a clerkship, he has to pay the 12l. a year from the commencement of his practising. Thus in his first year, in which he may make perhaps 200l. and in three or four subsequent years, during which, unless aided by extraneous circumstances, which fall to the lot of the few only, he can scarcely ever (though using great personal exertion and undergoing much mental anxiety) reach an income of 1500l. a year, he has, nevertheless, to pay an income-tax of—as the case may be—from double to quadruple, or even six or seven times the proportion imposed by Sir Robert Peel's Act! Is not this a crying injustice?

It may be asked, if this be so great a hardship on the profession, why has not their voice yet been heard exclaiming against it? The answer is, the senior and more influential members of the profession enjoying tolerable incomes (for I do not think, although the profession is a most laborious one, that the incomes of its members are ever large) do not feel it, and would rather perhaps that it should be continued, as it operates to the exclusion of junior competitors. Thus are the juniors crushed without remedy.

I am, Sir, your obedient humble servant,
Sept. 2. ONE OF THE SUFFERERS.

THE ORIGIN OF COURTS MARTIAL.

THE recent Hounslow flogging case having excited so much public attention, it may be interesting to our readers to know something of the origin and jurisdiction of courts martial. In tracing their origin it is necessary to advert to the court of chivalry (curia militaris), which, according to Coke, is said to have been the fountain of the martial law, and the only court military known to, and established by, the permanent laws of the land. It was formerly held before the Lord High Constable and Earl Marshal of England, jointly, but after the extinction of the former office, it has usually, with respect to civil matters, been held before the Earl Marshal only, who throughout exercised both a judicial and ministerial power, for he had not only to preside as one of the judges, but to see execution done. From the sentence of the court of chivalry there lay an appeal immediately to the King in person. Sir William Blackstone says that this court was in great reputation in the times of pure chivalry, and afterwards, during our connections with the continent, in the territories which our princes held in France; but in his time it had gone almost entirely out of use, on account of the feebleness of its jurisdiction, and want of power to enforce its judgments. The jurisdiction of this court is declared by statute 13 Rich. 2. c. 2, to be—"That it hath cognizance of contracts touching deeds of arms, or of war, out of the realm; and also of things which touch war within the realm, which cannot be determined or discussed by the common law, together with other usages and customs to the same matters appertaining." Without pursuing the inquiry further as to the court of chivalry, we may mention that though its authority was never objected to, even in criminal cases, till the post of high constable became forfeited to the Crown on the occasion of that officer, in the person of Edward Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, being attainted of high treason, in the year 13 Henry VIII., yet its jurisdiction was encroached upon much earlier; for by the statute 16 Henry VI., c. 19, desertion from the king's army was made felony, and by statutes 7 Henry VII., c. 1; 3 Henry VIII., c. 5, benefit of clergy is taken away, and authority given to justices of peace to inquire thereof, and hear and determine the same. And Rapin quotes an instance of Henry VII. having ordered those accused of holding intelligence with the enemy after the battle of Stoke, 1487, to be tried by commissioners of his own appointing, or by courts martial, according to the martial law, instead of the usual court of justice, which was not so favourable to his design of punishing them only by fines. This, however, seems to have been an avaricious, arbitrary, and illegal exercise of power, not authorized by any law of the land. From the time that the court of chivalry was abridged of its criminal jurisdiction by the suppression of the post of high constable until the revolution, there appears to have been no regular established court for the administration of martial law. For although the Earl Marshal still continued to hold the court of chivalry, yet its jurisdiction was confined to civil matters; and there are instances during that period of other courts being created for the administration of martial law, and not only military persons made subject to it, but many others punished thereby, some entirely at the discretion of the Crown, and others by the appointment of the Parliament only; and so repugnant to the spirit of liberty were such commissions regarded, that we find in the Petition of Right, 3 Charles I., c. 1, one clause to the effect that the commissions for proceeding by martial law should be dissolved and annulled, and no such commission be issued for the future. Though undoubtedly these commissions were unconstitutional, yet the necessity of subordination in the army, and the impossibility of estab-

Showing that subordination without martial law, soon became apparent; and the two houses of Parliament, in the beginning of their rebellion against Charles I. passed an ordinance appointing commissioners to execute martial law. This ordinance was passed in 1644, and afterwards renewed by the Parliament, and in process of time adopted as a model for the Mutiny Act, passed after the revolution. At the restoration, one of the first steps taken by the Parliament was to disband the army, and to regulate the militia, among whom a military subordination was established whenever they were drawn out, and fines and imprisonment imposed upon them for particular delinquencies. Charles II. however, kept up 5,000 regular troops, for guards and garrisons, by his own authority, which James II. by degrees increased to 30,000, and more numerous armies were occasionally raised by authority of Parliament; yet we find no statute for their government, nor was it till after the revolution that a regular Act of the whole legislature passed for punishing mutiny and desertion, &c. by courts martial. This Act was first occasioned by a mutiny in a body of English and Scotch troops, upon their being ordered to Holland to replace some of the Dutch troops which William III. had brought over with him, and intended to keep here. The king immediately communicated this event to Parliament, who readily agreed with him to give their sanction to punish the offenders, and on the 3rd of April, 1689 (1 William and Mary), passed an Act for punishing mutiny and desertion, which was to continue in force only until November following. It was, however, renewed in January, 1690, and has, with the interruption of three years only, from April, 1698, to February, 1701, been annually renewed ever since, with occasional alterations and amendments, as well in times of peace as war. Such is the origin of courts martial.—Correspondent of Liverpool Mercury.

THE PRACTICE OF WILLS.

By G. S. ALLNUTT, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.
BOOK II.

PROBATE OF WILLS.

CHAPTER IV.—WHAT INSTRUMENTS NECESSARY TO BE PROVED.

Wills of foreigners, &c.—Where a testator has left no personal estate in England, it is not generally necessary that his will should be proved here. Thus in Jouney v. Sealey (1 Vern. 397), where A died beyond sea and made a nuncupative will, B took out administration here and brought his bill for a discovery of the supposed intestate's personal estate. The defendant pleaded the will, and that he was executor, and that A left no assets but what were beyond sea. The Court allowed the plea, and said, "the testator having left no estate in England, it was not necessary that the will should be proved here, no more than if a man died and left an estate in Scotland." See also Currie v. Burcham (1 Dowl. & Ry. 35).

In the case of Logan v. Pairlie (2 Sim. & Sta. 284), Sir J. Leach observed, "If a testator die in India, and his personal estate be wholly in India, and his executor be resident there, and the will be proved there, and the executor remit to a legatee in England, or to some other person in England for the specific use of the legatee, the amount of his legacy, I am of opinion that the legacy duty is not payable upon such remittance; inasmuch as the whole estate is administered in India, and the remittance is in respect of a demand which is to be considered as established there. But if a part of the assets of the testator is found in England in the hands of the agent of such executor without any specific appropriation, and a legatee in England institute a suit here for the payment of his legacy, then such assets are to be considered as administered in England, and the legacy duty is payable in respect of them." This statement was approved of by Lord Commissioner Peppys (1 Myl. & Cr. 67), and although the case principally relates to the payment of legacy duty, it may be usefully mentioned here.

Where a suit by a foreign executor is necessary to recover a debt due to his testator, administration ad item must be obtained from the Ecclesiastical Court here. (Attorney-General v. Cockerell, 1 Price, 179.)

A will made in a foreign country disposing of personal property in England, should, although proved in the country where it was made, be proved here also. (Lee v. Moore, Palm. 163; Townton v. Flower, 3 P. Wms. 369.) This second proof is made by means of a copy, duly authenticated, being transmitted from the court in which the will has been proved. (Raymond v. De Willeville, 2 Cas. temp. Lee, 358.)

Personal property having no situs of its own, follows the domicile of its owner (see Thomson v. The Advocate-General, 12 Cl. & Fin. 1), and therefore the rights of a person constituted here the representative of an individual deceased, domiciled in England, will extend to personal property wherever situated. (See Spratt v. Harris, 4 Hagg. 405.)

It should be mentioned, that the law of the testator's domicile is the rule by which the Ecclesiastical Court here is guided, in admitting a will to probate. (Curling v. Thornton, 2 Add. 21; and in the goods of Maraver, 1 Hagg. 498.) And this extends to the will of a British subject, domiciled in a foreign state (Stanley v. Bernes, 3 Hagg. 374), or in some part of the British dominions out of England. (Hare v. Nasmyth, 2 Add. 25; see also Price v. Dewhurst, 4 Myl. and Cr. 76.)

The validity, however, of the will of a British subject, who is resident in a foreign state, but not domiciled there, will be decided by the law of England. In Anstruther v. Chalmers (2 Sim. 1), a native of Scotland domiciled in England, having personal property only, executed during a visit to Scotland, and deposited there a will prepared in the Scotch form, and died in England; it was held that the will was to be construed according to the English law.

It is generally the practice to grant probate, upon production of an exemplified copy of the will, proved where the domicile was. (Larper v. Sindry, 1 Hagg. 382; in the goods of Cringan, 1 Hagg. 549; and in the goods of Riobee, 2 Add. 461.) But in the case of Read (1 Hagg. 474), Sir John Nicholl expressed some doubt as to the propriety of this course.

CHAP. V.—RENUNCIATION BY AN EXECUTOR.

The executors appointed by a testator may renounce (Bac. Abr. Executors, E. 9.), even though they have promised the testator to accept the office. (Doyle v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lef. 239.)

The executor may, however, be conveyed by the ordinary, to the intent to prove or refuse the testament (21 Hen. 8, c. 5, s. 8); and upon his neglect to appear, he may be pronounced contumacious, and be punished according to the 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 2. (See also 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 93.) The time for issuing this citation depends upon the discretion of the judge; but by the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 37, it is enacted that "if any person shall take possession of, and in any manner administer any part of the personal estate and effects of any person deceased, without obtaining probate of the will or letters of administration of the estate and effects of the deceased within six calendar months after his or her decease, or within two calendar months after the termination of any suit or dispute respecting the will or the right to letters of administration, if there shall be any such, which shall not be ended within four calendar months after the death of the deceased, every person so offending shall forfeit the sum of one hundred pounds, and also a further sum at and after the rate of ten pounds per centum on the amount of the stamp-duty payable on the probate of the will or letters of administration of the estate and effects of the deceased."

Where a person named as executor required time to consider whether he would prove the will or not, the ordinary, according to an old practice not now in use, granted in the meantime letters ad colligendum. (Broker v. Charter, Cro. Eliz. 92.)

Mode of renunciation.—The renunciation by an executor must be by some act entered or recorded in the Ecclesiastical Court. (Wentw. Off. Ex. 88; Long v. Symes, 3 Hagg. 776.) A letter sent by the executors to the ordinary renouncing the office has, upon its being recorded, been held to be a sufficient renunciation. (Broker v. Charter, Cro. Eliz. 92; S. C. Owen, 44; Moor, 272; 1 Leon. 135.)

The renunciation is usually before the ordinary; but if the ordinary be the executor, he may renounce before his commissary. (Wentw. Off. Ex. 89.)

An oath is usually taken by the person renouncing that he has not intermeddled with the goods of the deceased, and will not intermeddle therewith; but if the renunciation is by proxy, this oath is dispensed with. The refusal to take the usual oath is held to be a renunciation of the office of executor. (Rees v. Raines, 1 Raym. 363.)

The renunciation should be accompanied by the original will of the deceased. (In the goods of Fenton, 3 Add. 35.)

An executor of an executor may administer the goods of his own testator, and renounce administration of the first testator; but in all other cases, an executor cannot renounce an executorship in part only. (Shep. Touch. 464; Hayton v. Wolfe, Cro. Jac. 614, S. C. Palm. 156, Hutton, 30; Wentford v. Wankford, Freem. 521, S. C. 1 Sal. 309; Paule v. Moodie, 2 Roll. Rep. 132; 11 Vin. Abr. 139, pl. 10.)

What acts amount to an administration.—It has been before stated that if the executor administer, he will be liable to a penalty if he neglect to prove: it will be necessary, therefore, to consider what are the acts which amount to an administration. These acts may be stated to be such as evince an intention on the part of the executor to administer. Thus the taking possession of and converting the testator's goods, receiving or giving releases for debts due to the testator, taking possession without the assent of a co-executor of a specific legacy bequeathed to him, advertising for persons to pay debts due to the testator to the person by name as executor, may be mentioned as some of the acts which amount to an administration rendering it necessary for the executor to prove. (See Wentw. c. 3 pp. 93, 94; 1 Roll. Abr. 917, pl. 7, 8, 9, 12, 13; Bac. Abr. tit. Exors. (E), 10; Pytt v. Fendall, 1 Cas. temp. Lee, 553; and Long v. Symes, 3 Hagg. 771.)

In Harrison v. Graham (1 P. Wms. 241, 6th edit. note y), a testatrix appointed her mother, her two sisters, Margaret and Elizabeth, and her brother, executors. Margaret alone proved the will, and acted chiefly as executor; and in a letter of attorney, to empower her to receive some stock, and which was executed by the others described as executors, she was described as the only acting executor. The brother, by virtue of another letter of attorney executed by the other executors, transferred South Sea Stock belonging to the testatrix, received the money, and paid it over on the same day to Margaret. Margaret and the mother afterwards died, and left the brother their executor. The question in the case was, whether what the brother had done amounted to such an act of administration as to render his own estate chargeable. In giving judgment Lord Hardwicke observed:—"The question in the case is, whether or no this defendant had acted as an executor, and, consequently, whether he is chargeable? I agree that there may be cases where an executor may act as an attorney to the other executors. If an executor renounces, and then acts under a letter of attorney, it is no administration, for it depends on the nature of the act, accompanied with any other acts. Here is a will and four executors. The will is proved by one only, with a reservation of the rights of the other three. Here appear to have been acts done by them all, and a letter of attorney given by the defendant, together with the other executors, to Margaret, who, indeed, is described therein as the only acting executrix. But the defendant describes himself there as an executor. This was clearly acting as an executor. Then he afterwards accepts another letter of attorney from Margaret and the rest of the executors. Shall executors be allowed to discharge themselves at their pleasure from being liable to assets? Money comes into his hands, he pays it over to Margaret; this cannot discharge him."

An executor is not considered as administering by assisting a co-executor, who has proved the will, in writing letters to collect debts, or by writing to a debtor of the testator, requiring payment. (Orr v. Newton, 2 Cox, 274. See also Dove v. Bervard, 1 Russ. & Myl. 231; and Stacey v. Elph, 1 Myl. & Keen, 195.)

Consequences of renunciation.—The renunciation may be retracted at any time before administration is granted (McDonnell v. Prendergast, 3 Hagg. 212); and this has been allowed, all the parties consenting, where an executor has renounced in order to become a witness in a suit regarding the validity of the will. (Thompson v. Dixon, 3 Add. 272.)

After administration cum testamento annexo has been granted to another person, upon the executor's renunciation, the executor cannot be admitted to prove. (Broker v. Charter, Cro. Eliz. 92; S. C. Owen, 44; Mea. 272; 1 Leon. 135; Wentw. Off. Ex. 95; in the goods of Thornton, 3 Add. 273.)

Where, however, some of the executors renounce, and the will is proved by the others, those who have renounced may at any time afterwards come in and administer (Hensloe's case, 9 Co. 37, a; Middleton's case, 5 Co. 28, a; Brookes v. Brookes,

1 Salk. 3; and upon the death of the acting excocutors, the right to the administration survives to them. (Pawlet v. Fresh, Hardr. 111; Brooke
v. Stroud, 7 Mod. 39; Wankford v. Wankford,
1 Salk. 307; Hewse v. Lord Petre, 1 Salk. 311;
Rae v. Simpson, 3 Burr. 1463; S. C. 1 W. Bl.
456; Hayward v. Dale, 2 Cas. temp. Lee, 333;
Arnold v. Blencowe, 1 Cox, 426; and Cottle v.
Aldrich, 4 Mau. & Selw. 177.)

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY LORDS LIEUTENANT.
BANFFSHIRE.—J. Fraser, esq. to be Deputy Lieutenant.

J. G. Shepherd, esq. to be captain.

SURREY.—R. W. Edgell, esq. to be Deputy Lieutenant.

IRELAND.—Letters patent having passed the Great Seal of Ireland constituting and appointing the Right
Hon. David Richard Pigot, Lord Chief Baron of her Majesty's Exchequer, he was this day sworn in before the Right Hon. the Lord High Chancellor accordingly.

COURT PAPERS.

REVISING BARRISTERS.—Mr. Arnold, appointed revising barrister for the city, opened his court on Tuesday the 15th inst. D. C. Moylan, esq. appointed to revise the lists for Finsbury, will hold his court, at the court of his Honour the Vice-Chancellor of England, in Lincoln's-inn, on Thursday the 17th instant.

On Wednesday the following notice was issued in the city of London, pursuant to the 5th of Victoria,
c. 18, sec. 25. The overseers of all parishes in the city of London are required to attend the sittings of the revising barrister at the Court of Common Pleas, in the Guildhall of the said city, on the 15th instant, and to deliver to the revising barrister the several lists made by them respectively, and also the original notices of claims or objections under the said Act.
The parish lists and notices will be received according to the order in which the parishes stand upon the register, i. e. according to the polling places. Upon Wednesday, the 16th instant, the revision of the lists of freemen will be commenced, and proceeded with in alphabetical order till they are concluded. After the lists of freemen are closed, the revision of parish lists will be commenced, and proceeded with in the same order in which they were delivered in. The clerks of the respective companies and the overseers are required to attend the court upon the days upon which their lists are respectively revised, of which public notice will be given from day to day. No other business than the receiving the lists and notices will be transacted on the first day of the sitting.

THE INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT.—The sittings of this court are appointed to be resumed for the hearing of cases on Monday next for three weeks, and then another short recess will follow. In the first week, according to the rota, Mr. Commissioner Harris will preside, Mr. Commissioner Phillips in the second, and the Chief Commissioner in the third.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

DEATH BY ACCIDENTS.—On the 26th ultimo, the Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93), for compensating the families of persons killed by accidents came into operation. An action can now be maintained against any person or company causing death by neglect or default. It must be commenced within twelve months of the person killed, and be brought in the name of the executor or administrator of the deceased for the benefit of the wife, husband, parent, and child of the person killed. The Act does not apply to Scotland.

ART-UNIONS.—The Act passed last month to legalize art-unions (9 & 10 Vict. c. 48) on complying with certain regulations, extends the indemnity granted by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 57, against the penalties incurred from the 1st of August last, as specified by the rectified Act, to the 1st of November next.

GENERAL POST OFFICE NOTICE.—The following notice has just been issued from the General Post Office:—"By command of the Postmaster General.
—Much inconvenience having been occasioned in some instances, owing to no person being in readiness to receive the letters from the letter-carrier on his morning delivery, and in others from parties refusing to take in letters in consequence of not being prepared with the means of paying the postage, or not being properly authorized to receive them, the public are requested to provide for the reception of letters on the letter-carrier going his rounds, as if there are no means of delivering the correspondence when first presented, it may be taken back to the office to be sent out by another opportunity."

A FINE OF 3,000l.—At a special Court of Commissioners of Sewers for the liberty of Westminster, held on Tuesday, Mr. W. H. Jenkins, of Paddington, builder, was sentenced to pay the large fine of 3,000l.
for contempt of the authority of the Commissioners.

THE TEMPLE GARDENS.—In consequence of the noise and confusion created in the Temple on Sundays by visitors to the gardens, a notice was posted on Sunday last on the principal entrance, intimating that the gardens would not be open on Sundays.

Mr. Sheriff Laurie, who is now in Paris, where he has gone for the purpose of inspecting the Parisian prisons, was honoured with an invitation to dine with King Louis Philippe at Neuilly, on Saturday.

THEFT OF BOOKS FROM GRAY'S INN.—On Saturday information was received by the police that a number of bound volumes of Acts of Parliament had been abstracted from the library of Gray's Inn.

The Calcutta papers mention the death of Mr.
Charles Thackeray, barrister, and advocate of the Supreme Court.

We learn by the Indian mail (just arrived) that the appointment of Sir David Pollock to the Indian Bench was approvingly spoken of at Bombay.

IRELAND.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR'S ASSISTANT RE-GISTRAR.—We understand that an important question has been raised with regard to the legality of the late appointment by Sir Edward Sugden, of his son, Henry Sugden, esq. to the office of Assistant-Registrar to the Court of Chancery, in the room of Yelverton O'Keefe, esq. promoted to the full Registrar-ship, vacated by the death of the late Francis Prendergast, esq. The question has been raised by John Kelly, esq. the Chief Clerk of the Chancery Registrar-office, who, after thirty-seven years' service, claims the appointment now filled by Mr. Sugden, by virtue of the 6th and 7th Wm. 4, c. 74, and who has procured the opinion of Mr. O'Connell and Mr. E.
L. Corbet in support of his claim. Mr. Henn, Q.C. is stated to have given a contrary opinion; the matter will, however, come before the Lord Chancellor upon the first day of next Term, when both parties will have an opportunity of having their rights fully discussed, and no doubt properly adjudicated upon.—
Saunders's News Letter.

PUBLIC DINNER TO MR. SERGEANT MURPHY.
—The Cork Examiner states that Mr. Sergeant Murphy has arrived in that city for a few weeks of relaxation, and that he is to be entertained at a public dinner by gentlemen of all shades of political opinion.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CURIOUS INSTANCE OF THE APPLICA- TION OF OLD LAW.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.
SIR,—One of the peculiar and most valuable properties of the common law of England is its expansiveness or elasticity. It is in a constant course of development by the judges, and moulds and adapts itself to meet the various and increasing wants of the community. A recent example of this peculiar attribute is afforded by the summary committal by Baron Platt, on the Western Circuit, of some witnesses who were said to have perjured themselves in open court, in the presence of judge and jury, in the course of a prosecution. If it were not for the known predilection of that learned judge for British institutions, some doubt might have been entertained whether the peculiar mode of trial adopted by him was one of them; but the character of the learned judge affording an unquestionable guarantee against the introduction of any novel or unconstitutional proceeding, any doubt on the legality of the course may well be referred to a less profound and intimate acquaintance with the vast resources of our law, and the institutions we have inherited from our Saxon ancestors, or to less dexterity in handling and applying them than that learned judge is known to possess.

It may not, therefore, be unacceptable to offer one or two suggestions of the probable sources from which the mode of trial adopted by the learned Baron was derived.

It appears from Blackstone that under certain circumstances, our law admits of a trial by inspection.
In the third vol. of his Commentaries, page 331, he thus writes:—"Trial by inspection or examination is, when for the greater expedition of a cause in some point or issue, being either the principal question, or arising collaterally out of it, but being evidently the object of sense, the judges of the court, upon the testimony of their senses, shall decide the point in dispute."

This is a sufficient authority for the part the learned judge took in the matter. It remains to see whether there is not equal authority for the conjoint operation of the jury. For, it will be remembered, that the proceeding was a compound or complex one, of which the act of the judge and the acts of the jury were the simple elements. The judge and jury were conjunctive in their conviction. The judge first saw and condemned the perjury, and the jury afterwards concurred.

This latter part of the proceeding would seem to be a revival of the original function of the jury, which was to speak the truth or give a verdict (verum de-tum) from their own knowledge, and not as now from evidence laid before them. The jury had direct knowledge of the perjury—they saw and heard it.

From the above it will be seen that the proceeding was not more summary than well founded.

The advantage of the proceeding is, that one prosecution for perjury need seldom give birth to a other, since all the witnesses who perjured themselves may at once be convicted and sentenced with the original prisoner. Indeed, a prosecution for perjury may be saved in many instances where the perjury committed in open court.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.
QUILL.

SHAM LAWYERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Amongst the many exposures of sham lawyers in your journal, I have seen no case that on equal the effrontery and success with which one of these pests of society carries on business in this city.

The person I am alluding to is named William Jefferson, and was, two or three years back, a writing clerk in the office of a Mr. Edward Pate, a proctor, carrying on business in the Abbey-square in this city. Mr. Pate died, to the best of my recollection, about two or three years since, and shortly before his death Jefferson married his (Pate's) servant. Pate made a will, leaving most of his property, which was very trifling, to Jefferson, and left him executor.
Shortly after Pate's death, Jefferson announced himself as an accountant and collector of rents, &c.; and though many cases had come under my notice in which he had acted quasi lawyer, I did not think it prudent to interfere till a poor Irishman named Murphy called at my office, the other day, to complain of a most shameful imposition that had been practised upon him, and left documents in my hands which fully satisfied me that Mr. Jefferson had made himself amenable to the laws, and I considered it would be advisable to publish a full statement of the case in your valuable journal, and take the opinion of the profession generally as to the best course to be adopted for punishing Mr. Jefferson.

It appears that Murphy had an account owing him of about 6l. and that he was recommended to go to Jefferson, who would get him the amount. He called upon Jefferson and placed the account in his hands, and Jefferson informed him he would obtain payment of the amount, and he saw him afterwards several times upon the subject, and was at length told that he (Jefferson) had succeeded in getting 2l.
on account, and that he would issue a writ to compel payment of the balance. From the time that had elapsed, and the shuffling manner in which Jefferson had acted, Murphy thought all would be right, and after calling repeatedly on Jefferson for the 2l. at length succeeded in finding him in, and demanded his papers, and also the 2l. that had been received as account.

Jefferson refused to deliver the papers up, or the cash, till he had deducted his bill. Murphy then called upon me, and I advised him to demand the papers and money again, and inform Jefferson that he was not entitled to make any charge. Murphy, acting under my advice, did demand his papers and the money; and Jefferson then made out a bill, amounting to 18s. for which he gave a receipt, and then handed over all the papers (viz. the account due to plaintiff, copy of application to defendant, and what appears to be intended as a receipt for a writ and the bill and receipt), and also 1l. 2s. the balance. I am acquainted with Jefferson's handwriting, and can speak to these all being written by him.

I send you copies of the documents alluded to, which I should feel obliged by your publishing in your next journal, together with this letter, and such remarks as you may think the case requires.

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,
A SOLICITOR.

Chester, September 7th, 1846.

P.S.—Since writing the above, I have seen the defendant, who has placed in my hands two letters from Jefferson, which are copied after the first application.
These clearly shew that he was representing himself as an attorney. I have also been informed by the defendant, that Jefferson threatened to commence proceedings against him a short time since, and he (the defendant) told him the amount should be paid on a day certain; but, before that time arrived, a writ was issued by an attorney in Chester, and debt and costs paid to him.

(Copy.)

"Abbey-square, 30th Aug. 1846.

"Mr. John Blagney—

"Dear Sir,—Thomas Murphy has placed his accounts in my hands, with instructions to recover from you (without delay) the balance now due to him for work and labour done for your use.

"I have gone through the account item by item, and find that the balance due to him is 6l. 2s. 10d.

and as he is staying in Chester entirely on your account (by reason of your not having settled with him), I must request that there be no delay in this matter, otherwise you will, of necessity, be put to further expense. TESTIMONIAL TO MR. WAKLEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—It is with great pleasure I read in your last week's number the letter from "C. R. G." suggesting some testimonial or mark of respect from the Profession to Mr. Wakley. The Gray's-Inn deputation were about proposing the same thing, for of all the members of the House of Commons no one evinced a more earnest zeal to serve us, or was more indefatigable in our cause, and whose endeavours to modify and alter such clauses of the Small Debts Bill as were likely to operate to the disadvantage of the Profession, were in many instances attended with successful results; in fact, I may say Mr. Wakley was the only advocate we could rely upon, and had we possessed three members like him we could have carried any thing, or so divided the House upon every clause, that the Bill would have been shelved for the session. Both the legal and medical professions are deeply and equally indebted to Mr. Wakley. Lord G. Bentinck and Mr. Henley (the member for Oxfordshire), and even Sir Fitzroy Kelly, shewed every desire to aid and assist, and, to a certain extent, did us signal service; but there was a heartiness in our cause about Mr. Wakley, who sat down with us for nearly two hours, and went through the clauses seriatim. Well might Mr. Wakley say, "But why come to me, when there are so many legal men in the house?" and, added he, "I should say the lawyers united could do and carry any thing."

I need not perhaps tell you that we explained to him that the attorneys of England were the most supine, apathetic, selfish, unworthy, and disunited set of men, as a body, that ever existed; and as for the legal members in the House, like all other great men who have risen and made their way by and through the patronage of the attorneys, they no sooner reach their wished-for elevation, than the attorneys may go to the devil, for aught they care. "Well," says Mr. Wakley, "I'll do the best I can for you," and truly he kept his word, and I hope that we shall not, as a body, be wanting in a creditable token and expression of gratitude for his exertions. There is yet much to be done, and the next cry must be, "Hurrah! for the repeal (not of the Union, but) of the certificate duty!" and the Palace-court must be thrown open, or abolished. Mr. Wakley is fully alive to it. Six attorneys in London are to have the privilege of a concurrent jurisdiction, and nearly 3,000 to be denied it. Such is the Attorney-General's notion of justice and fair play; and although he thanked me at the interview with the deputation at his chambers, and desired Mr. Solicitor-General to make an especial note of the Palace-court, which he said had been quite overlooked; yet, when we saw him in the lobby of the House of Commons, he said, "I can't help it, it cannot be interfered with, it is a Patent Office," &c. &c. Let us for once rescue our name from that ungrateful indifference towards our own interests, under which it has so long laboured, and shew the legal members of the House of Commons that, to their discredit and shame, it is not to them we can look for support.

A shilling subscription, as suggested by C. R. G. will do all that is wanted, and I shall be happy to form one of a committee for the purpose of carrying out the obtaining and presentation of the testimonial.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

London, Sept 9, 1846.

PHULAX.

P.S. If those members of the Profession who have copies of the Small Debts Bill, as printed on the 6th, 11th, and 18th of August, will compare them with the Small Debts Act, they will at once see the (to us) important alterations effected mainly by Mr. Wakley's exertions.

[Though the want of unity and the inactivity of the Profession in matters regarding their interest as a body have more than once been lamented by us in these columns, we cannot subscribe to the character given of them by our correspondent to Mr. Wakley. Our correspondent has, of course, forwarded his address.]

ATTORNEYS' DEPUTIES.

DENNES AND OLD.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Enclosed I send you a report, taken from the Chelmsford Chronicle of Friday last, which shews my ultimate success in abating the nuisance of malpractice which I believe, in Old's instance, has existed since these thirteen or fourteen years past, so that in fact the man seems to have believed that, however originally wrong, he had at length acquired a prescriptive right to go on. Although I have incurred no inconsiderable trouble in this matter, I feel myself repaid by having satisfactorily shewn that these parties are not unassailable, and that any gentleman may, singlehanded, beat them from their supposed strongholds by an ordinary exercise of patience and perseverance.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

GEORGE JOHN DURRANT.

Chelmsford, Sept. 10, 1846.

PRACTICE OF ATTORNEYS.—Mr. Durrant called attention to the case of Mr. Old, on which some discussion took place at the last court, and said he should be glad if the county clerk, in accordance with intimation on the last occasion, would give his opinion on non-professional men coming there, on the pretence that they were agents to solicitors residing at a distance, and practising in the names of persons not living, or being in any manner domiciled in the town. He stated at the last sitting, that he should be able to refer the Court to a number of cases, shewing that the superior Courts at Westminster, had repeatedly expressed their disapprobation of the practice. The first case was Gill v. Lougher, 1 C. and J. p. 170—in which Mr. Justice Bayley observed—"Now the debt here was small, the instructions were given through a person who was not competent, in contemplation of law, to give the party adequate advice." This was precisely the case that came before the Court at the last sitting, when he (Mr. Durrant) challenged Mr. Old, to say that Mr. Dennes had any personal knowledge of the application he was then making, and he did not venture to say he had. The fact was, Mr. Old received instructions from the party, he advised that party, and made the application; and therefore he came within the words of Mr. Justice Bayley, as "a person who was not competent, in contemplation of law, to give the party adequate advice."—Mr. Gepp. Mr. Dennes has intimated that Mr. Old is his clerk residing here; your case goes to not allowing a person to practise who has no ostensible head.—Mr. Durrant contended that Mr. Old came within the meaning of Mr. Justice Bayley as not being competent in law "to give the party adequate advice."—Mr. Gepp said, the question last time was whether a person would be allowed to practise not being a solicitor.—Mr. Durrant said, in the case of Hopkinson v. Smith, 1 Bingham, p. 113, "where a person not an attorney carried on business in the plaintiff's name at a town five miles from the plaintiff's residence, where the attorney shewed his face only once a week, and never interfered in the business, it was held that he could not recover." In Taylor v. Glassbrook, 3 Starkie, p. 75, where the attorney stationed his articled clerk in a town at a distance from him, and all the business was transacted by the clerk, the result was the same. That, Mr. Durrant contended, was not so strong a case as the present, because there the party was in a course of legal training, but here it was not so—this was the case of a wholly unqualified person, and according to the rules of the profession he was excluded from practising.

Mr. Gepp.—It is unnecessary to go further. I shall certainly not allow any person to practice in the way Mr. Old desired to do. It is not likely this Court will long exist, but so long as it does I shall feel it my duty to prevent persons practising in that way. There may be cases where a hardship would be inflicted, if we were not to allow a clerk to come forward, but as a general rule I do not think it right that they should be allowed to do so to the prejudice of the suitors of the Court.

WHAT NEXT?

THE Small Debts Bill is law. We have our misgivings as to its working, but hope they they will be found visionary. Rather would we have the reputation of a false prophet than that the Profession should be subjected to such mischiefs as have foreshadowed themselves on our mind while contemplating the probable consequences of that measure. But the mortification which every reflecting man will feel at the hasty and ill-considered legislation of the session lately closed, is not less on account of the positive evils inflicted than of the good which will be prevented.

But lamentation is useless. The die is cast. The Small Debts Bill is law, and the question that ought now to engage the attention of the Profession is, how shall its mischiefs best be met; what next is to be done?

To this there can be but one reply. The change that has been begun must be carried out to its legitimate conclusions. The reform, if it deserve the name, which has been made this session is but a first step, and unless it be followed up, a grievous injustice will be inflicted both upon the Profession and their clients. There must be an entire and sweeping revision of the fees of court, an abolition of all taxes bearing exclusively upon the Profession, a reform of the stamp laws, and a more stringent protection of the qualified practitioners against the invasions of Sham Lawyers and Sham Conveyancers.

First, the lawyers must insist upon an entire revision of the fees of Court, with a view to their abolition or great reduction. These fees form no small portion of their bills of costs, so the lawyers reap all the odium without any compensating advantage, for the client cannot or will not distinguish between the items for fees paid and the items for work done. The impression we entertain at present, so far as we have had opportunity to investigate the subject, is, that fees in courts of justice ought to be entirely abolished. All officers should be paid by fixed salaries, and to prevent a resort to unsubstantial suits, we would substitute for fees a small per centage upon the money or value of the thing to recover which the suit is instituted, which should be paid by the plaintiff on issuing his writ, subject to the result of the suit, to be repaid to him by the defendant in case of the verdict going against him. In such a plan there are manifold advantages. It offers no impediment to the bond fide suitor, and it would be sufficient to prevent a wanton resort to legal proceedings. It would force the plaintiff to weigh well what amount of damages he is really entitled to, before he brings his claim into court, otherwise he will be likely to pay a great deal more than he can hope to recover. It would be an equitable apportionment of the burden of the Law Courts upon those who make use of them, and this in precise ratio to the amount of advantage they seek. The man who asks their help to recover a thousand pounds, will no longer, as now, pay the same as a man who procures through them fifty pounds. It will relieve the lawyers from much of the odium of costs that are not really theirs. It will give satisfaction to the client, for he would gladly pay a small fixed per centage for the recovery of his debts and demands. And, lastly, it will yield a certain revenue, affording ample provision for all the officers, and expenses of the courts, the judges included.

We throw out this suggestion rather as a matter for serious consideration hereafter, than in the shape of a decided opinion. But that the present fee system is utterly indefensible will be denied by nobody. The eye cannot run over the list of fees in the Common Law Courts, without being struck by its absurdities. How many of them are charged for forms that are of no practical utility; that serve only to swell the cost of a suit, with the paltriest gain to the lawyer, the larger proportion of the item being paid in the form of a fee, as if it was for the sake of the fee alone that the form is maintained! But on this we need not now dwell, inasmuch as we purpose to go through the list, and exhibit its absurdities in detail.

The second duty of the Profession is to demand the concession of an act of simple justice, long denied, but now, we should think, armed with an argument that must be irresistible. The Certificate Duty is a tax utterly without justification—a tax levied upon the lawyers exclusively, upon the pretence that the law had secured to them certain profits of a large amount, and that, therefore, they could not object to a tax which would, on the other hand, be itself a shield against any attempt to reduce those profits. That argument, however plausible formerly, cannot be repeated now. Since it was made the pretence for imposing the tax, those profits have been reduced by three-fourths, but the tax is continued undiminished. True it is that for this the lawyers have chiefly themselves to blame, for they really have made no serious effort as yet to procure relief from the burden. The Small Debts Act will, however, compel them to exertion. They must no longer submit tamely to be cuffed and kicked on all sides. A little spirit and energy will yet save them. It will be a work of labour and perhaps of time, but it can be successfully done if it be resolutely done. Organization, union, systematic effort, and, above all, a representative in the next Parliament, will assuredly redeem much that has been lost, secure the concession of a large debt of justice due, and make more difficult than hitherto those wild schemes for changing the practice of the law, which, for some ten years past, have afflicted our amateur legislators like a mania.

SHAM LAWYERS.

THE good county of Devon, we perceive, is much infested by these worthies, and it is a duty the Profession there absolutely owe to the public, (who are often urged to the recovery of their money by these sharpers, and too often cajoled out of it afterwards,) to make a vigorous effort to put them down. We publish a threatening letter from one of this class; and a circular from one Mr. CHARLES ELLIOTT, which we strongly recommend him to desist from further distributing; and we caution him not to take upon himself the office of the Attorney.

Exeter, 26th August, 1846.

Sir,—I am requested by Mr. John Johnston, on behalf of Mr. James Kennedy, to apply to you for the payment of 9s. 5d. and unless the same is paid within three days from this date, with the expense of this letter, I am instructed to proceed against you.

THOMAS LAKEMAN & Co.

The following is Mr. Elliott's circular:—

CHARLES ELLIOTT

Respectfully returns his sincere thanks to the Professional Gentlemen and others of the city of Exeter, for whom he has for many years past collected rents, &c. also to the tradesmen and his friends generally who have intrusted him with the collection of their outstanding debts; and he begs to inform them that his undivided attention will be given, on the most liberal terms, to the settlement of all accounts that may be placed in his hands.

THE VERULAM SOCIETY.

THREE numbers of the Society's Reports are now ready, and will be forwarded to the members in the beginning of the week—namely, No. XXI. Criminal Law Cases; No. XXI. Magistrates' Cases, completing Vol. I.; and No. XVIII. Practice Cases. Another number of Real Property Cases is in a forward state of preparation.

LAW TIMES EDITION OF IMPORTANT STATUTES.

THE SMALL DEBTS ACT.

THE edition of this Act, by Mr. PATERSON, containing a complete analysis and copious index, will be ready on Tuesday. In reply to a correspondent, who suggests the incorporation of the provisions of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127, we may state that Mr. PATERSON has not deemed it necessary to give them, because these statutes, so far as affects the recovery of debts under 20l. are of no force in the districts where the recently past Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, shall be put into operation, consequently they are supererogative to an edition of "the Small Debts Act."

A COURSE OF LECTURES ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS.

BY PROFESSOR CAREY.

Delivered at the University College.

LECTURE XVII.

I have drawn to a conclusion what I have had to say with respect to the contract of sale. There is another contract, very general in its nature, which we will now consider—that of bailment. Bailment is defined by Blackstone "a delivery of goods in trust, upon a contract expressed or implied, that the trust shall be faithfully executed on the part of the bailee." The definition of Sir William Jones is perhaps preferable: it is, that "a bailment is a delivery of goods on a condition expressed or implied that they shall be restored by the bailee to the bailor, or according to his directions as soon as the purpose for which they are bailed shall be answered." This definition has been criticised in "Story on Bailments," apparently without sufficient reason. In the case of Coggs v. Barnard, six kinds of bailment are enumerated by C. J. Holt:—Depositum, Commodatum, Locatio, Conductio, Pawn (which he calls Vadium—not a word in Roman law), Locatio Operam, and Mandatum. Sir William Jones reduces these six heads to five, including the 5th under the 3rd, that is putting together Locatio, Conductio, and Locatio Operam. His reason is derived not so much from the nature of the transaction as from a simple want of precision in the language of the Roman law, in which two contracts, very different in their nature, are clubbed together under the same name, Locatio, Conductio. By C. J. Holt these two different contracts were distinguished, and as far as it may be necessary to adhere to the Latin nomenclature, I shall follow the distinction laid down in Coggs v. Barnard, in preference to that adopted by Sir William Jones.

It seems astonishing that so important a branch of jurisprudence should have been so long and so glaringly unsettled in a great commercial country, and that from the reign of Elizabeth to the reign of Anne the doctrine of bailments should have produced more contradiction and confusion, more diversity of opinion and inconsistency of argument, than any other part perhaps of judicial learning, at least any other part equally simple in its elements. And the means of dispelling this confusion have, however, existed during the whole of this time. It is to be found in Bracton, who wrote a learned work in the time of Henry III. a complete, finished, and systematic performance, giving a complete view of the law in all its titles, as it stood at the time when it was written.

Now it appears at the time when it was written the feudal law and the cumbersome machinery of the courts had been brought forth into a complicated system purely English, that is to say, without any elements of the Roman law in them. But many of the more ordinary transactions between man and man were little touched upon. The Roman law had always retained a considerable influence on the continent, and its study had lately been prosecuted with new vigour. Teachers of the Roman Law, Varius and others, had published in English, and Bracton had evidently applied himself to the pursuit, improving thereby both his notions of general jurisprudence and his language. In those points of the subject in which materials failed him in the maxims of our own law, he applied at once to the Roman law (whether to the institutes of Justinian alone, or to what other of the older resources would be a matter of interesting inquiry); however that may be, he borrowed from that source largely in treating of the law of contracts. It is singular how little influence this part of the work of Bracton exercised upon the general condition of our law. The Roman principles with respect to bailments are there to be found nearly in the very words of the institutes. But they seem to have slept there. There is little or no trace in the year-books of his authority having been appealed to or recognized. The law of bailment continued down to a modern period a mass of confusion and contradiction; and we are rightly told by Mr. Jones, a case of difficulty occurs in the reign of Queen Anne: the whole doctrine is propounded at length by the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench in a judgment which has been ever since recognized as the leading authority on the subject, and the whole groundwork of that judgment is drawn from the so long neglected authority of Bracton (the case of Coggs v. Barnard). Barnard had undertaken to carry a cask of brandy for Coggs, and he did it so negligently that the cask was damaged, and the brandy lost. It was argued that an action would not lie unless Barnard was a common carrier, and so, by his public employment, under an obligation to use due care and skill, or unless he undertook the work for a consideration. A gratuitous bailment, it was argued, was under no liability, because it is nudum pactum, an undertaking without a consideration. With respect to instances of this kind, the expression of the Roman law is re contra obligatio: the contract is made re by the fact of the deposit, not consensu. The English judges adopted an expression much to the same import, that a trust creates an obligation; that a trust is a consideration. The rule, therefore, is now established thus: if a man promises to undertake any work without recompense, he cannot be compelled to do it; and if he refuses, the person to whom he made the promise has no right of action to recover damages (it is, nudum pactum); but if he does undertake a work, and by want of care or skill, damage is occasioned or loss sustained, he is liable to make it good. The question arises, what is the degree of care and skill (diligentia, in the Roman law) that is required? What degree of want of care or skill would make a bailee responsible? This depends upon the relative position created between the parties by the contract or bailment. Is the bailment for the benefit of the bailor? The bailee, though he receives no benefit by the bailment, yet, inasmuch as he has undertaken the duty, he is bound to execute it, but he is only responsible when guilty of considerable negligence. The bailor, having received the benefit of the bailee's labour without stipulation for giving him any remuneration in return, is not at liberty to call him to account for any slight degree of negligence. Is the bailment for the benefit of the bailee? Having the goods of the bailor entrusted to him for his own use without paying anything in return, it is but reasonable that he should take more than ordinary care of the things bailed; and it is said, however slight may be the negligence, it is not fair that the loss occasioned thereby should fall on the person who has lent him the goods gratuitously. Is the bailment for the advantage of both parties? There we have a contract entered into as a mere matter of business; both parties standing on equal ground, neither of them conferring a favour on the other—neither of them entitled to a greater favour than the other. A party who in such a case has in his keeping the goods of another, is bound to take ordinary and usual care of them, and no more. (Dean v. Keate, 3 Campb. 4.) In all cases of bailment it must be remembered that the bailee is empowered to deal with the thing only according to the nature of the bailment; if he employs it for any other purposes, he becomes himself answerable for the consequences. Whatever may be the nature of the bailment, the bailee is responsible for any loss that may be occasioned by his own wilful misconduct; whatever difference there may be as to the degrees of care and diligence, there is none as to the bona fides required. Even where the degree of diligence required by the nature of the transaction is slight, a bailee may be relieved even from this limited responsibility by an express agreement; but no agreement will avail to limit his responsibility where he has been guilty of fraud. That is expressed in the language of the Digest—Non valet si convenient sedotus praestetur.

Bailments are, therefore, properly divisible into three heads; first, those in which the trust is for the benefit of the bailor; secondly, those in which the trust is for the benefit of the bailee; thirdly, those in which the trust is for the benefit of both parties. If I deliver goods to A. B. to keep till my return, without recompense, this is an instance of the first class. If I lend a horse to A. B. without receiving any hire, this is an instance of the second class. In either of these cases, if there is a recompense, if I am to pay for the rent of the warehouse, or if A. B. is to pay me for the hire of the horse, this is an instance of the third class. According to the language of the Roman law, which has been sometimes adopted in our own, in number three, where the transaction is a mere matter of business, ordinary diligence is required, and the party is answerable only for common culpa. In the second case, where the transaction is a matter of favour to the bailee, more than ordinary diligence is required, and he is answerable for a greater degree of culpa—culpa levis. In the first class of cases, where the transaction is a favour conferred by the bailor, he is answerable only for gross negligence, lata culpa. Taking the Latin names mandatum and depositum, so far as they ought to be considered, the terms come under the first head. Mandatum, according to the doctrine of the Roman law, is not essentially a bailment. Mandatum is the giving an order for the thing to be done. That may be giving an order for a thing to be done without a condition that any recompense is to be paid. Mandatum, strictly speaking, falls not within the head of bailments, but within the head of principal and agent; nevertheless, in the course of business, property and goods may be deposited as part of the thing to be done, and so accidentally it is brought within the contract of bailment. Depositum is where one person trusts goods with another to be taken care of without hire. In these cases the bailee is answerable according to the language of the Roman law only for gross negligence. He is answerable for gross negligence, in the language of our courts of law down to a very recent period. If there is not great or somewhat extraordinary negligence on the part of the bailee, to use the words of Lord Tenterden, he ought not to be made liable. That was in an action against a coachman, who undertook gratuitously to deliver a parcel, and lost it; the question was, was it negligence, or was it something more than ordinary negligence? unless there was he was not answerable. (Beauchamp v. Powley, 1 Mood. & Rob. 40.)

It has sometimes been said that all that is required is, that such gratuitous bailee should take the same care of the goods bailed as he does of his own: if he be a negligent man that is the bailor's own folly. But it has been held, that though he may keep the goods entrusted to him with as much care as his own, yet if he is in fact guilty of gross negligence he may be answerable. In the case of Dorman v. Jenkins, 2 Ad. & E. 256, money was deposited with a man: he put it in the same box with his own money, and it was lost or stolen, and the jury found that he was guilty of gross negligence, and being so guilty, though he took the same care of the money deposited with him as his own, he was held to be answerable. So that the doctrine of taking the same care as one's own is not the test: the test is simply negligence or not. The reason on which the older opinion rested was, that the gross negligence for which such a bailee was responsible was deemed hardly distinguishable from fraud (which is the doctrine of the Roman law); and if a man took as much care of another's goods as he did of his own there was no presumption of fraud; on the contrary, the keeping the goods as he kept his own was an argument of his honesty. When the gratuitous bailee or agent undertakes to do a thing to the best of his skill, when his situation or profession is such as to imply skill, an omission of that skill is imputable to him as gross negligence. That is stated in the case of Shiells v. Blackburn, 1 Hy. Bl. 158. There Blackburn was employed, gratuitously, to make an entry on a certain letter that was to be exported; he entered it, and in the entry he described it as of another sort of letter, whereby he deceived the Custom-house by the misdescription. It was not his situation or profession, as a general merchant, to enter those things at the Custom-house; had he been a Custom-house officer, or a person who knew how those things were to have been done, by his profession, he would have been answerable; as it was, he was held not to be answerable. The doctrine here laid down in Shiells v. Blackburn has in effect been recently acted upon, though the language employed has been different. In Wilson v. Brett, 11 M. & W. 113, a man was asked to ride a horse to be shewn to a purchaser, without being paid for it; he rode the horse carelessly, and broke one of its knees; the man was a person conversant with and skilled in horses; it was held that there was no difference between that case and that of a borrower. It may be observed in this case, as to the distinction between negligence and gross negligence, the use of the terms is thrown down. "I cannot," says one of the learned judges, "see any difference between negligence and gross negligence, but that it is the same thing, with the addition of the imperative epithet." It is not meant by this that there is no distinction between the different degrees of liability of different kinds of bailees; what is meant is, that the distinction is not to be marked by any phrases to which it is, at least in the practice of our law, difficult to attach any definite meaning. Where does negligence begin to be gross? The distinction is to be marked by considering the different circumstances of different cases. A man is asked to ride a horse—does he do it for hire? If so, then it is his business to ride carefully and skilfully. He undertakes it as a matter of business; if so, it is his business to ride carefully and skilfully; if from want of skill the horse is damaged, he is liable. Does he do it without being paid for it? Then, if he is a skilful rider, his want of exercise of that skill which he has is clearly negligence in him, and makes him liable. If he is not a skilful rider, he is not answerable for his want of skill—he does not profess it to be his business; if he does his best, he does all that the other party can expect of him; still, if he fails to do his best, he becomes guilty of negligence, and makes himself liable. That is the doctrine—that is the law. You may call it in the one case negligence, in the other case gross negligence. You thereby use a technical expression, but you convey no very accurate idea, because the negligence does not depend upon the thing itself: it depends upon the man. That which is simple negligence, negligence of a light kind, or no negligence at all in the one, would be gross negligence in the other. One of the judges says, the distinction is, that the gratuitous bailee is only bound to exercise such skill as he possesses; whereas a hirer or borrower may usually be taken to represent to the party who lets, or from whom he borrows, that he is a person of competent skill. Another of the judges says, where a man is shewn to be a person of competent skill, there is no difference between that case and that of a borrower, because the only difference is, in the one case the party bargains for the use of competent skill, in the other, if the party is of such competent skill, the bargain becomes immaterial. A case of commodatum is the gratuitous lending of goods to be returned. The word "lending" in our language is equivocal; there are two words which refer to it, commodatum and modatum. Modatum is where you lend another man goods, the contract being that a like quantity of things of the same kind shall be returned to you again. There is no bailment there. The goods which are lent to you become your property as soon as they come into your hands, and they cease to be the property of the person lending them. In commodatum, the property still remains my own; I allow you the use of it, and when the purpose for which it is lent is at an end, you are to return me the same thing again. And in commodatum, the borrower, is required to take considerable care; according to the language of the Roman law, he is required to take the highest degree of care. It is his business, when the object for which the thing is lent is satisfied, or the time for which it is lent is out, to return the goods in as good a state as they were, reasonable wear and tear excepted, or inevitable accident.

I have said that the degree of care which a person may undertake to perform, in consequence of a bailment, may be modified by the agreement between the parties. Sir Edward Coke says, that in the case of a deposit, if goods are deposited with me, and I do not wish to be answerable for them, at all events, I must undertake specially to take care of them only as my own goods, that if I undertake to keep them safely, I shall be bound to answer even for inevitable accident; and further, that if I undertake to keep them, and nothing more, that that will be undertaking to keep them safely, and make me liable for inevitable accident. That doctrine, however, is denied in Coggs v. Bernard; and I think there can be no doubt that, at the present time, if goods are deposited with a man, and nothing is said as to the degree of care he is to take of them, a reasonable care is all that will be required of him. I apprehend also, from some of the language that I have already adverted to, that a contract to take care of goods as one's own, would, in the present day, have a very doubtful meaning. There is a case in Willes's Reports in which an action of detinue was brought for certain valuable property. The declaration stated that the plaintiff had delivered the goods to the defendant, to be by him safely kept; the plea was, that the goods were delivered to the defendant to be kept as his own—that is, to be shewn for sale; that the defendant kept them as his own, and shewed them for sale, and that they were stolen. Issue was joined on the purpose for which they were delivered to him; and it was there held, that as they were delivered to him to be kept as his own, and for purpose of sale, he was not answerable for the loss which occurred in shewing them about. The doctrine, then, is not denied, that there may be a difference between the taking care of things as our own, and taking care of them safely; the doctrine there seems to be admitted. Nevertheless, it is very doubtful whether it could be acted upon at the present day; and if you look into the facts, the judgment there is sensible enough. If you deliver goods to a person merely for the purpose of being taken care of, his business is to put them into some safe custody; if he does not, he is guilty of negligence; but if you deliver them to him to be shewn about for the purposes of sale, if he does take them about for the purposes of sale, and so accidentally loses them, he loses them in doing the very thing which is the object of their being deposited with him. That which would be negligence if he was only to keep them, would not be negligence if his business was to take them about. In all these cases, probably, the way in which it would be looked at would be very different from that suggested by Sir Edward Coke in Ratle v. Bower. It is quite clear, I apprehend, now with respect to the main points, that if a person undertakes merely to keep goods, that he is not bound to keep them safely; in the words of Sir Edward Coke, that he is not bound to a warranty of their security, only to a certain amount of care. Then the whole question is, whether a person, undertaking to keep goods safely, is bound to be answerable for them? At all events, it is admitted here that he would be. It has never been decided precisely.

There is one other kind of bailment which requires a specific notice—Pawn, called by Holt, C. J. Bailment. I am not sure whether he got the word Bailment from Bracton; if he did, Bracton did not get it from the Roman law. Here the contract is a pledge, as where the goods are given as security for a debt, and there is an advantage on both sides, because the person who deposits gains credit, for he gets his loan, and the person with whom the deposit is made, gets a security for repayment; there is a benefit on both sides, and, according to the doctrine of the Roman law, a mutual degree of diligence was required of the bailee. If the goods perish without any fault of the bailee, then the bailor loses his security, but he does not lose his debt. Suppose a carriage is deposited as security for 50*l*. and the carriage is accidentally burned. Both parties then lose: the person with whom it is deposited loses the pledge, and the security it gave him; and the owner loses the property itself, but the debt stands exactly as it did before. If, however, the carriage should be destroyed by the negligence of the bailee, he would then be answerable to the bailor. With respect to gratuitous bailment, there is a case which throws some light on it in 1 B. & Ald. 59. A lent a horse for the night to B, who turned it out after dark into a pasture-field adjoining, though separated from the field of C by a fence which C was bound to repair. The horse, from the bad state of the fence, fell from one field into the other, and was killed. The plaintiff was simply a gratuitous bailee; but as such he owed it to the owner of the horse not to put it in a dangerous pasture, and if he do not exercise a proper degree of care he would be liable for any damage the horse might sustain.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

A Series of Observations, suggested on a perusal of the Eighth Report of the Commissioners on Criminal Law. By Mr. GEORGE E. WILLIAMS. 8vo. 1846. Stevens and Norton.

THE title of this tract so fully explains the writer's purpose, that nothing remains for us to do further than to shew the nature and value of the comments here made on the Report of the Criminal Law Commission. Mr. WILLIAMS is undoubtedly a man who has for some years occupied a position offering considerable advantages for observing the working of the Criminal Law, and consequently for arriving at a sound judgment as to the changes which are desirable. Mr. WILLIAMS prefers an unpaid to a paid magistracy, for reasons we think hardly clear and satisfactory. We give this opinion in his own words:—

It is not uncommonly supposed and suggested that a stipendiary magistracy would be more efficient than an honorary and gratuitous one, but in point of fact that does not seem so clear, if at least we may credit the reports of magisterial proceedings, as given in the newspapers of the metropolis, where undoubtedly with more power under the Metropolitan Police Act, and so with less personal responsibility, stipendiary magistrates do not seem, as a body, very superior to their brethren of the general commission of the peace.

This observation is not meant as any sneer at the stipendiary magistrates of London; though in any honest dissertation on this subject 'tis impossible to avoid drawing a comparison which may be censured on a matter of fact.

But, admitting any practical superiority at all, we must undoubtedly consider the advantage to the community generally, from the circumstance of a large body thereof, who are so directly interested in its social order, its property, and its prosperity, being officially employed in the administration of its laws.

This body is commonly known as the gentry of the country, who, it is much to be lamented, have no practical education in those laws, and who are indeed almost totally ignorant of the constitution of the peace for any knowledge of them at all. It is too true that from one end of the kingdom to the other persons are placed in that commission from personal favoritism or political predilection; but, in the main, the system is necessary, and I know of no member of society more meritorious and worthy than the country gentleman who industriously habituates himself to the duties of an useful and an active magistrate.

Mr. WILLIAMS is averse to the creation of "Public Prosecutor," and observes that it were far better to leave magistrates' clerks at full liberty, as they are now, to conduct to a class, at the assizes or sessions, prosecutions which they, under the superintendence of the magistrates, have been mainly engaged in establishing. We confess that the reasons here advanced against the creation of a "Public Prosecutor" have not changed our views on the subject, nor are they sufficient, we think, to satisfy the public.

That the following remarks on the short-sighted jealousy with which magistrates regard the county purse, and on the seals of allowances to witnesses, are just, we think all practical men will admit.

It has been the custom of late years in some counties, and especially in this county (Gloucester), for magistrates in quarter sessions to view the scale of allowances, not only to professional men, as counsel, barrister, and attorney, but to prosecutors and witnesses, with a very jealous and thrifty eye, out of a vigilant regard to the county rate. However disposed and determined I may be to discuss any subject with independence and freedom on which I may choose to write, I will not dilate upon the judgment of the magistrates, so far as any question connected with my own profession may be concerned, saving that it has frequently occurred to me that now and then fairness to that profession is sacrificed, either to a little love of popularity, or a very unwise or really unnecessary parsimony in reference to the public purse, which could not in its general contribution, feel the loss of the indefinable fraction which to the few would be but just remuneration and no more. But my present purpose is to refer to a recently brought about scale of allowances in this county in reference to prosecutors and witnesses, and from which the following is an extract:—

To each prosecutor or witness being a practitioner of the profession of law or physic, per day—Class 1..... £1 1 0

To each ditto, being a yeoman, farmer, master artificer, master tradesman, or person of similar or higher rank, except—
Class 1, per day—Class 2 0 7 6
To each ditto, being a person of lower rank of life than class 1 and 2, per day—
Class 3 0 5 6
To each ditto, if resident in Gloucester .. 0 3 6
To each prosecutor or witness for the expenses of travelling and subsistence going to and returning from the sessions, for a mile each way—Class 1 and 2..... 0 0 4
To each ditto—Class 3..... 0 0 3
But for such portions as can be travelled by railway, the amount of second-class fares only shall be allowed.

That a person in the profession of the law or physic is not reasonably compensated by a payment of one guinea a day, it is unnecessary to observe; but that persons high or low should in their compulsory attendance in the service of the public be made to travel in a second-class railway carriage, at the probable risk in an inclement season of injury to health, is, to my humble judgment, not a very reasonable requirement. I think such persons are entitled to the most liberal consideration; and it is a parsimony of this description which gives to criminal jurisprudence a contempt of caste which it ought not to bear, and of course suggests to prosecutors to evade a prosecution if they can.

When the public mind has long dwelt on a subject, and come to a pretty general conclusion, that conclusion will commonly bear the scrutiny of the most rational and rigid inquiry. I believe it may be affirmed that nearly all classes of professional life, and those out of that walk who look beyond mere forms, the utility whereof has long ceased, consider that the grand jury is an unnecessary interruption and hindrance in the progress of a prosecution. With respect to the prosecutor, or he who comes to promote the ends of public justice, the case (if a difficult one) stands a chance of defeat from the huddled assembly of the tribunal in its very formation and movement, and the opportunity, at least, of occult appeals to some one or other of those who form it. As to the accused, the evidence is purely ex parte, and with respect to him, no probable advantage of at least a fair kind can be predicted, and on the other hand a prejudice may be excited by the words "true bill." As to any purpose of inquiry, therefore, there is none, so that has already taken place in the face of open day before the public and in the presence of the nation, and he has or may have the whole of the evidence against him. I need hardly say that no word of disrespect by these observations is meant towards those who compose this tribunal, and many of whom I believe thoroughly condemn it.

With Mr. WILLIAMS's opinion on the subject of abolishing grand juries we must close our notice of a tract which, if the reasoning it offers in support of its author's views is not always as close and cogent as it might be, nevertheless offers some useful remarks and suggestions for the improvement of the Criminal Law.

It is most difficult to find any one reason for its continuance. It may be said that it brings the gentry of the country together, and that they receive an elegant and elaborate charge from the judge, but exactly in the same degree that any purpose is really useless, so is the solemnity of its more machinery ridiculous, and with all the reverence which I trust and know I do sincerely feel towards the highest and the purest class of men in this country, viz. its judges,—I must say, that I never knew any one practical benefit result from their charges, however beautifully oratorical and soundly sensible; but, on the other hand, with the common valedictory remark to the grand jury, ceased all the impression of the speech; and as to the public, they go to the assizes for more curious material. The truth is that criminal or civil trials should be viewed as mere matters of business, and the less that's merely said on them, the better,—at all events before the trial really commences.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

A PRACTICAL COMMENTARY ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS RELATING TO REAL PROPERTY.

By WILLIAM HUGHES, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

Conditional limitations, how far barable.—A conditional limitation so far partook of the nature of an executory devise, that it could not have been barred by any act of the tenant for life. But where the limitations were after, or in defeasance, or in breach of a condition annexed to an estate tail, a recovery by the tenant in tail, before the event or condition happened, would have barred the estate arising on that event or condition; and the same object may, it is apprehended, be now attained by a disentailing deed under the recent Fine and Recovery Substitution Act, 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74.

Of the requisites to support a conditional limitation.—The validity of a conditional limitation will depend upon the legality and possibility of the condition, and its not being repugnant or inconsistent with the nature or quality of the preceding estate. Hence if lands were to be devised in tail, with a proviso that, if the devisee should alienate the lands, they should go over to another, such a condition would be void. And, upon the same principle, it has been long since determined, that, if lands are devised in tail, with a proviso that, if a tenant in tail suffered a recovery, his estate should cease, was a void condition, and, consequently, that the limitation depending on it must fail; the power to suffer a recovery being one of the inherent properties of an estate tail, and not to be restrained by condition (Taiterum's case, 18 Edw. 4, pl. 16; Co. Litt. 226 a, 224 b); limitation, custom (Cro. Jac. 96); recognizance, (Taylor v. Shaw, Carth. 6, 22; statute (Poole's case, Moor. 610); or covenant. (Collins v. Plummer, 1 P. Wms. 104.)

What conditions may be valid.—And although a proviso against alienation generally is void, yet it will be otherwise if it be restricted to a particular time (Smith and Davis's case, 2 Leon. 38; Moor. 271; Hob. 13, 261); or to a particular person. And even a condition not to alien unless it be to a particular person has been held good. (Doe dem. Gill v. Pearson, 6 East, 173, 180; 2 Smith, 295; and see also Muschamp v. Bluel, Bridg. Rep. 132.) According to Mr. Fearn, a condition to avoid the preceding estate must determine it altogether, and not in part only, leaving it good as to the residue; and that upon this principle it had been adjudged that a proviso to make the estate of the tenant in tail to cease during his life was void, for that although the whole estate may be determined by the condition, yet a part of it only during the tenant for life shall not; and that such a proviso is ineffectual on account of its repugnancy to a rule of law. This is certainly the case with respect to a condition properly so called; and of which none but the grantor and his heirs can take advantage, and which must therefore necessarily determine the whole estate to which it is subject; but there appears to be no reason why this construction should be extended to a limitation which operates in defeasance of a preceding estate, on the ground that it defeats the estate in part only; and it is observable in all the cases cited by Mr. Fearn in support of this doctrine (Corbet's case, 1 Rep. 83 b; Jermyn v. Arscott, cited 1 Rep. 85 a; Mildmay's case, 6 Rep. 40; Fox v. Hinde, Cro. Jac. 697), the limitation was either defective in the terms of its creation, or was repugnant to the nature of the incidents of the estate on which it was grafted, or was contrary to the rules of law fixing the period within which such interests must be limited to arise. When, therefore, these circumstances do not occur, it seems that a condition that on the happening of certain events an estate tail shall be reduced to an estate for life only may be good. This construction has been made in the case of a condition annexed to devise of an estate in fee-simple (Wright v. Wright, 1 Ves. sen. 409), and upon the same principle it seems that it would also be extended to a condition annexed to an estate tail. And where the limitation over is not to take effect until a certain period, the preceding estate will not be divested until that period arrives. Hence where there was a devise to a wife, provided she remained a widow, but in case she married a second husband then to testator's nephew when he should attain the age of twenty-three years, it was held that the widow had an estate till the nephew attained the age of twenty-three, though she herself got married before that time. (Doe dem. Dean and Chapter of Westminster v. Freeman, 1 T. R. 369; Fearn, C. R. 240.)

A conditional limitation will not be defeated where the preceding estate to which it was annexed never takes place.—When a remainder is limited to take effect on breach of a condition annexed to a particular estate, which never arises, as where it is limited to a person not in esse who never comes in being (Jones v. Westcomb, 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 245; Andrews v. Fulham, 1 Wils. 107, cited; Gulliver v. Wickett, 1 Wils. 105; Slatham v. Bell, Cow. 40; Murray v. Jones, 2 Ves. & Bea. 313), or fails of effect; as by the death of the party to whom it is limited, in the testator's lifetime (Scatterwood v. Edge, 1 Salk. 229; Hopkins v. Hopkins, Ca.

temp. Talb. 44; Avelyn v. Ward, 1 Ves. sen. 420; Doe dem. Wells v. Scott, 3 Man. & Selw. 300), the limitation over will, nevertheless, take effect; the first estate being considered as a preceding limitation, and not a condition to give effect to the remainder, which, though it cannot operate strictly as such, the preceding estate which was to have supported it having failed, may still be good by way of executory devise. (Scatterwood v. Edge, supra; see also Fearn, C. R. 510, 512.)

Otherwise where such particular estate takes place and afterwards fails by any other event.—But where a preceding estate to which a condition is annexed actually takes place, an estate limited to take effect on breach of the condition will fail if the estate be determined by any other event; as where A devised his estate to his son in tail male, remainder to B for life, remainder to his (B's) sons in tail male, on condition he should change his name; and if he or any son of his refused to do so, then he directed the devise to be void, and gave the estate to D, &c. The son died without issue; B performed the condition and died without issue; and upon a question whether D should have the estate after B's death the judges of the King's Bench certified their opinion that D took no estate on the death of B, but that it went to the testator's heir-at-law by law; which opinion was afterwards confirmed by the House of Lords. (Amherst v. Lytton, 3 Bro. P. C. 486; Fearn, C. R. 238; see also Sheffield v. Orrey, 3 Atk. 282.)

Impossible conditions.—An impossible condition is a mere nullity. (Puff. lib. 3, s. 2; Co. Litt. 206.) If it be precedent to the estate, both the estate and the condition are alike invalid; if subsequent to the estate, then the estate will be absolute and the condition void. (1 Ins. 206; 9 Rep. 128.) Where, however, a condition is of two parts, the one possible and the other impossible, the condition will be good as far as the possible part is concerned, and void as to the impossible part. (Cro. Eliz. 780; 1 Roll. Abr. 44; 2 Mod. 202.) And if a condition becomes impossible by the act of God; as where an estate is devised to A, upon condition that within a certain time he intermarry with I. S. before the expiration of which period I. S. dies; or a devise on condition that he marry with the consent of C and D, who die before the marriage, the condition will be discharged, and the estate will become absolute. (Thomas v. Howell, 1 Salk. 170; Payton v. Burry, 2 P. Wms. 529; Graydon v. Hicks, 2 Atk. 16; Lester v. Garland, 15 Ves. 248; Aislabie v. Rice, 3 Mad. 256.) Nor can a condition be annexed to an estate created under a power without an express authority. (Pawlett v. Pawlett, 1 Wils. 224; Alexander v. Alexander, 2 Ves. sen. 640; Lene v. Page, Amb. 233; see also Burleigh v. Pearson, 1 Ves. sen. 281; Daubeny v. Cockburn, 1 Mer. 626, 645.)

Conditions in restraint of marriage.—Conditions in restraint of marriage have not, it is said, been generally favoured, being considered contrary to sound policy; and if the condition be such as amounts to an absolute injunction of celibacy, it will be void. But almost any restriction, unless it goes to that extent, may be supported. (Co. Litt. 42; Williams v. Porter, 1 Cha. Cas. 142; Booth v. Booth, 2 ib. 109; Harvey v. Aston, 1 Atk. 361; Reynish v. Martin, 3 ib. 350; Reeves v. Heme, 5 Vin. Abr. 343, pl. 31; Pulling v. Ready, 1 Wils. 21; Scott v. Tyler, 2 Bro. C. C. 431; Stackpole v. Beaumont, 3 Ves. 98; Ellis v. Ellis, 1 Sch. & Lef. 1; Long v. Ricketts, 1 Sim. & Sta. 179.) Hence a condition prescribing the ceremonies and place of marriage has been held good; so where the condition limits the prohibited time to twenty-one, or any other age, provided it be not used evasively as a cover to restrain marriage generally. (Scott v. Tyler, 2 Bro. C. C. 431.) An injunction to ask consent is also lawful. (Sutton v. Jewkes, Cha. Rep. 95; Creagh v. Wilson, 2 Vern. 572; Astken v. Astken, Pre. Cha. 226; Chauncey v. Graydon, 2 Atk. 616; Hemmings v. Munckley, 1 Bro. C. C. 304; Dashwood v. Bulkeley, 10 Ves. 230.) A condition prohibiting a widow from marrying is not unlawful. (Barton v. Barton, 2 Vern. 308.) Neither is a condition not to marry a particular person (Stackpole v. Beaumont, 3 Ves. 97); or one of a particular country, as a Scotchman, or the like. (Perryn v. Lloyd, 9 East, 170.) There is a diversity, however, in the construction of conditions of this kind depending, first, upon whether such conditions are subsequent or precedent; secondly, upon the nature of the property to which they are annexed. If subsequent, and attached to a devise of real estate, and there is a limitation over on breach of the condition, then it will be a conditional limitation (Stedfast's case, Plow. 403; 3 Rep. 206, s; Largy's case, 2 Leon. 82; Ramsdale v. Eiley, Carth. 170; Dy. 127; Fry's case, 1 Vent. 199; Anon. 2 Mod. 7), on breach of which the party to whom the estate is limited over will become entitled without entry or claim. If no estate be limited over, then it will be a condition at common law, of which the heir of the testator can alone take advantage, which he must do by entry, and until this be done the estate will remain unaltered; and unless such entry be made within twenty years after breach of the condition, the estate will become absolute. (Stat. 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, ss. 2, 3). If a condition subsequent is attached to a bequest of personal estate, then, if there is a limitation over, the party to whom it is so limited over, will become entitled immediately upon such breach being committed; but if there be no limitation over, the condition will be considered as only in terrorem, to make the party careful, but not to avoid the gift (Bellasis v. Ermine, 1 Cha. Cas. 22; Sutton v. Jewkes, 2 ib. 95; Hicks v. Penderves, 2 Freem. 41; Stratton v. Grimes, 2 Vern. 337; Astken v. Aston, ib. 452; Samphill v. Baily, Pre. Cha. 562; S. C. 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 213; Piggott v. Thorne, Sel. Cas. in Cha.; Chauncey v. Graydon, 2 Atk. 616; Wheeler v. Bingham, 3 Atk. 364; Clarke v. Parker, 19 Ves. 14); unless the marrying without consent be confined to the minority of the party, in which a marriage contrary to, or without such consent will be a forfeiture. (Stackpole v. Beaumont, 3 Ves. 98.) When conditions in restraint of marriage are annexed to portions charged on real estate, the same rules of construction will prevail as in the case of a devise of the lands themselves; if on personal estate, the same rules of construction as are applicable to bequests of personal property.

Where marriage is a condition precedent.—But in either case, if the condition attached to the gift is a condition precedent, that condition must be performed before the party claiming under it can become entitled; the performance of the condition forming, in fact, the essence of the gift. (Gorbull v. Hinton, 1 Atk. 381; Ellis v. Smith, 1 Sch. & Lef. 1; Lloyd v. Branton, 3 Mer. 116), consequently if the party die before the marriage, the donation must fail altogether. (Harvey v. Aston, 1 Atk. 361; Astken v. Hicocks, ib. 500; Ellison v. Elton, 3 ib. 504; Reeves v. Heme, 5 Vin. Abr. 343, pl. 31; Stackpole v. Beaumont, 3 Ves. 98; Monkhouse v. Holmes, 1 Bro. C. C. 300; Lowe v. Manners, 5 B. & Ald. 917; Long v. Ricketts, 2 Sim. & Sta. 179.)

Condition to avoid the estate in case of bankruptcy or insolvency.—A condition to determine the estate in the case of bankruptcy or insolvency may be either annexed to a devise, or a settlement of real, or personal property; but to be effectual it must determine the whole estate; for it will not be permitted to avoid it as to part, and leave it good as to the residue. (Lockyer v. Savage, 2 Str. 947; Dummett v. Bedford, 3 Ves. 149; Poley v. Burnell, 1 Bro. C. C. 274; Shee v. Hale, 13 Ves. 404; Brandon v. Robinson, 18 ib. 429; Cooper v. Wyatt, 3 Swanst. 515.)

When an estate may be enlarged upon condition or contingency.—As on the one hand an estate may be destroyed by the breach of a condition, or the happening of a contingency, so on the other it may arise or become enlarged by the performance of a condition, or the happening of some uncertain specified event; as, for example, if lands were limited to A for life, or in tail, and that if he perform such an act, or if some particular occurrence takes place, he shall have the fee; in either of these cases, A, on performing the condition, or on the happening of the contingency, will be entitled to the fee. (Stafford's (Lord) case, 8 Rep. 74; Fearn, C. R. 279.) But in order that an estate may be so enlarged, it must have the five following incidents:—1. The condition upon which it is to arise must be both possible and legal; for upon an impossible condition it cannot, and upon an unlawful one it shall not, increase. (Shep. Touch. 129.) 2. There ought to be a particular estate as a foundation for the increase to take effect upon, which particular estate Lord Coke held must not be an estate at will, nor revocable, nor contingent. 3. Such particular estate should continue in the lessee, grantee, or devisee, until the increase happens, without any alteration of privity of estate by alienation by such grantee, lessee, or devisee, though the alienation of the grantor will not affect it; nor is it necessary that such increase should take place immediately upon the determination of the particular estate, for it may enure as a mediate remainder, subsequent to an immediate remainder for life or in tail in somebody else. 4. The increase must vest and take effect immediately upon the performance of the condition; for if an estate cannot be enlarged at the very instant of time appointed for enlargement, the enlargement shall never take place. 5. The particular estate and increase must take effect by one and the same instrument, or deed, or by several deeds delivered at one and the same time; because the particular estate and the increase thereupon, is only a grant to take effect out of one and the same root; and notwithstanding the increase vest at a different time, yet when it is vested it has its force and effect from the same grant. (Fearn, C. R. 179, 180.)

On the doctrine of election.—The doctrine of election is defined to consist in alternate donations, with an intention, either express or implied, that one shall be in substitution for the rest; not that the donee shall be entitled to both benefits, but to the choice of either (1 Swans, 395, n.); consequently, the second gift is only designed to take effect in case of his declining the first; and the substance of the gifts combined is an option, which, by an equitable arrangement, gives effect to a donation of that which is not the property of the donor, and over which he has no legal power of control. (Boughton v. Boughton, 2 Ves. sen. 12; Streetfield v. Streetfield, Ca. temp. Talb. 179.) Hence, where a person has a claim under a will, and also a claim altogether independent of it, he will be obliged to elect between his original and substituted rights, and will not be allowed to accept the former, unless he also consents to renounce the latter. Thus, in Noyes v. Mordaunt (2 Ves. 500), where a testator had several daughters who had a claim under marriage articles, and also a claim under the will, and one of the daughters claimed, not only under the latter, but under the articles also, when it was held that she must either acquiesce under the will, or renounce all benefit therefrom.

What will be sufficient to raise an election.—An absolute power of disposition, and an intention to exercise that power, seem in general sufficient to raise an election; therefore, a devise to a testator's heir-at-law, which, prior to the stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 106, s. 3, would have been inoperative (as the heir, whether disputing or admitting the will, must have taken by descent, and not under the devise), would yet compel him to elect between the devised estate, and claiming adversely to the will, and the estate which descended upon the heir descended subject to this implied condition. (Noyes v. Mordaunt, 2 Vern. 581; Whistler v. Webster, 2 Ves. 370; Thelluson v. Woodford, 1 Dow. 249; Welby v. Welby, 2 Ves. & Bea. 187.) It also appears to be immaterial whether a testator in disposing of that which is not his own, is aware of the actual situation, or proceeds upon the erroneous supposition that he is exercising a power which actually belongs to him. Still, in order to raise a case of election, the intention must be clearly expressed; for equivocal or ambiguous terms will be insufficient; consequently it has been held that a general devise of real estate is not a sufficient indication of such intent, although the testator has no real estate of his own upon which the will can operate.

What persons will be bound to elect—Heir.—Where lands were attempted to have been devised by a will incapable of passing them on account of its not having been attested pursuant to the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2 & 3, s. 5), the heir claiming a benefit under it with respect to personal estate as to which it was valid and effectual, would not have been put to his election, unless the will contained an express condition not to dispute its validity. (Herle v. Greenbank, 3 Atk. 715; S. C. 1 Ves. sen. 306; Boughton v. Boughton, ib. 15; Whistler v. Webster, 2 ib. 371; Carey v. Askew, 8 Ves. 492; Thelluson v. Woodford, 13 ib. 223; S. C. in D. P. 1 Dow. 429.) This doctrine can now, however, only relate to wills made previously to the year 1838, as the same formalities are required in a will made subsequently to that time to pass the personal, as the real estate; and if incapable of passing the latter description of property, it will be equally ineffectual as to the former. (Stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9.) And no election will arise where a person under twenty-one years of age attempts to make any disposition of either his real or personal estate. (1 Vict. c. 26, s. 7.) The doctrine of election, it has been decided, extends also to deeds as well as wills (Llewellyn v. Mackworth, Barnardist. 445; Freke v. Barrington (Lord), 3 Bro. C. C. 274; Chetwynd v. Fleetwood, 1 Bro. P. C. 300; Moore v. Butler, 2 Sch. & Lef. 249; Birmingham v. Kirwan, 2 Sh. & Lef. 266; Green v. Green, 2 Mer. 86.)

Issue in tail.—Issue in tail also will be put to their election where the entailed estates are devised, and they claim as legatees under the same will. (Herne v. Herne, 2 Vern. 555; and see 2 Ves. 14, 617.)

Widow.—A widow may be put to her election where she is entitled to dower or a jointure, and is likewise a legatee under her husband's will, and she claims her legacy and her jointure or dower also, in opposition to the will. (Gosling v. Warburton, Cro. Eliz. 128; Co. Litt. 366; 4 Rep. 4; Birmingham v. Kirwan, 2 Sch. & Lef. 444; Chalmers v. Storil, 2 Ves. & Bea. 222.) She has likewise been put to her election between a devise or bequest and the benefit to be derived from her marriage settlement, and this, notwithstanding the will, was incapable of passing real property. (Newman v. Newman, 1 Bro. C. C. 186.) In order, however, to preclude a wife from taking under her husband's will, there must be a plain intent to exclude her; the rule of equity being that a widow cannot be put to an election, except by an express declaration, or necessary inference from the inconsistency of her claim with the dispositions of the will (Babington v. Greenwood, 1 P. Wms. 533; French v. Davis, 2 Ves. 577; Birmingham v. Kirwan, 2 Sch. & Lef. 452); therefore if both may stand together, she will not be obliged to elect between them. Hence a mere gift by the husband to the wife of a larger amount than her dower, will not put her to her election, but she may claim both. (French v. Davis, 2 Ves. 572; Brown v. Parry, 2 Dick. 685; Strahan v. Sutton, 3 Ves. 249.) Nor does a bequest to a wife in bar and satisfaction of her thirds, exclude her right and title as next of kin. (Foster v. Cooke, 3 Bro. C. C. 350; Middleton v. Cater, 4 ib. 409.) Neither does a bequest of the residue of the personal estate (Ayres v. Willis, 1 Ves. sen. 230; Thompson v. Nelson, 1 Cox, 44; nor the bequest of an annuity (ib. ib.) bar her claim to dower. And notwithstanding a testator has given a provision to his wife expressly, in bar of any claim she might have against any other objects of his bounty; yet, if by any accident these objects should be unable to claim the benefit of that exclusion, no other person can set it up against the widow. Hence, where a testator gave his wife real and personal estate in bar of her dower and thirds, and bequeathed the residue to charities, which bequest was void under the statutes of mortmain, it was held that the widow should not be put to her elections. (Pickering v. Stamford, 3 Ves. 332.) Whether a rent-charge given to a widow, issuing out of the lands from which she is dowable, will be sufficient to put her to her election, still remains a doubtful point. Lord Northington (Arnold v. Kempstead, Amb. 466), Lord Camden (Villa Real v. Galeway (Lord), ib. 683; 1 Bro. C. C. 682), Sir Thomas Sewell (Jones v. Collier, Amb. 730), and Mr. Justice Buller (Wake v. Wake, 3 Bro. C. C. 255), seem to have considered a devise of this kind a satisfaction. But Lord Hardwicke (Pitt v. Snowden, mentioned 3 Ves. 252), Lord Bathurst (Davis v. Edwards, mentioned 1 Bro. C. C. 292), Lord Thurlow (Foster v. Cooke, 3 Bro. C. C. 347), and Lord Alvanley (French v. Davis, 2 Ves. 278), entertained a directly contrary opinion. Amidst such a variety of conflicting authorities, it is difficult to decide; but the prevailing opinion of the profession appears to be in favour of the wife. (See 1 Mad. Pract. 59, 2nd edit.) And even where a widow is bound to elect, she will, nevertheless, be allowed to ascertain which fund is the most beneficial for her to take; and, therefore, she may file a bill to have the debts and legacies paid, and the funds clearly ascertained (Wake v. Wake, 2 Ves. 255).

Children.—Children also may be put to their election between interests given them by will, and benefits which they are entitled to by settlement, when both claims are inconsistent. (Whistler v. Webster, 3 Ves. 367.) But it seems that children will not be bound by the election of their parents, where their interests are distinct and separate. (Ward v. Baugh, 4 Ves. 623.)

Creditors.—Creditors also may be put to their election by a bequest inconsistent with the claim of their debts. (Graves v. Boyle, 1 Atk. 509.) It must be observed, however, that election is a doctrine inapplicable as to the funds out of which the debts are to be paid. They are payable first out of the personal estate, and if that should prove insufficient for the purpose, the creditors may then resort to any property liable to such payment. (Kilney v. Cousmaker, 12 Ves. 154.)

What acts will amount to an election.—The acts from which an election must be implied, must be decided rather by the particular circumstances of each individual case, than upon any general or fixed principle. (Ardsioife v. Bennett, 2 Dick. 463; Wilson v. Townsend, 2 Ves. 693; Bor v. Bor, 3 Bro. P. C. 167; Northumberland (Earl of) v. Aylesford (Earl of) Amb. 540; Wake v. Wake, 2 Ves. 255; Buttrick v. Broadhurst, 3 Bro. C. C. 88; Rumbold v. Rumbold, 3 Ves. 65; Simpson v. Vickers, 14 ib. 341; Welby v. Welby, 2 Ves. & Bea. 187, 200; Stanford v. Powell, 1 Ball & B. 1.) If the question of election is doubtful, it may be sent to a jury. (Roundell v. Currer, 2 Bro. C. C. 67.) Election may be compelled on the part of an adult, by a direction or a decree on the original hearing, that if he neglects or refuses to signify his election within some given time (six months, for instance), he shall be understood as having elected to take his paramount rights. (Streetfield v. Streetfield, Ca. temp. Talb. 176.) If the person is under restraint and cannot elect, his claim must be barred as long as his disability continues. (Wilson v. Lord John Townsend, 2 Ves. 697.) Where, however, the devisee is an infant, or a feme covert, the usual practice, if there be any doubt upon the matter, is to refer it to the Master to say which is most for the benefit, taking under or against the will (ib. ib.) Still it seems that where an infant is a heir, he will be allowed until he comes of age to elect. (Boughton v. Boughton, 2 Ves. 15.) The party bound to elect is also entitled first of all to ascertain the value of the funds; (Hender v. Row (3 P. Wms. 124, n.); Pusey v. Desboursie (ib. 315); Boynnton v. Boynnton (1 Bro. C. C. 443); Buttrick v. Broadhurst (3 ib. 88); Wake v. Wake (ib. 255; Chalmers v. Storil, 3 Ves. & Bea. 222); and for that purpose, may sustain a bill in equity to have all the necessary accounts taken; and an election made under a misconception of the extent of claims on the fund is not conclusive. (Kilney v. Cousmaker, 12 Ves. 136.)

Application of the devised property when the devise elects to take in opposition to the will.—When the party elects to take in opposition to the will, the interest given him by such will, will be applied in compensation to the disappointed devise. (Anon. Gilb. Eq. Rep. 15; Ward v. Baugh, 4 Ves. 629.) But the estate thus taken in opposition to the will vests in the party, with all the legal consequences attached to it. Hence, where a tenant in tail devised away the estate, and gave the issue in tail, who was a married woman, and also her husband, other benefits by his will, and she elected to take her estate tail, but her husband took under the will, some time after which the wife died, upon which he entered as tenant by the curtesy, when it was contended that as he took under the will he could not claim in opposition to it; but it was, nevertheless, ruled that the wife took the estate tail with all its legal incidents, and that, consequently, her husband upon surviving her became entitled to be tenant by the curtesy in right of her seisin, notwithstanding that he claimed in his own right under the will. (Cress (Lady) v. Pulteney, 2 Ves. 544; 3 ib. 384; and see Brodie v. Barry, 2 Ves. & Bea. 127.)

It must be ascertained in whom the legal estate is vested.—Another important point in investigating a title is to ascertain in whom the legal estate is vested. This will depend not only upon the terms in which the property is limited, but also upon the kind of instrument by which it is conveyed; for the same words, when contained in an ordinary conveyance by release, or in a will, would receive a different construction when found in an indenture of bargain and sale, or in a deed of appointment executing a power. Previously, however, to pointing out the operation of the various instruments, it will be advisable first of all to attempt a brief outline of the doctrine of uses as they stood originally at common law, in order to shew more clearly the alteration effected by the statute of uses (27 Hen. 8, c. 10), by which they were executed into possession.

Uses before the statute.—A common law use was a trust or confidence reposed in another, who was tenant of the land, that he should dispose of the same according to the intentions of cestui que use, or him to whose use it was granted. This use did not arise out of the land as a rent, condition, or right of common, but was a thing collateral annexed in privity to the estate, and to the person concerning the land, that the cestui que use should take the profits, and that the terre tenant, or feoffee to uses, should make estates according to his directions, and plead such pleas as he should supply him with at the costs of the cestui que use; so that the feoffee had the seisin or sole property, whilst the cestui que use had neither the jus in re nor the jus ad rem—neither a right in possession, or in action, but only a confidence and trust, of which the common law took no notice, but for which relief might have been obtained by subpoena in Chancery. (Shep. Touch. 502; Chudleigh's case, 1 Rep. 121; Co. Litt. 271, b; Delamere's case, Plow. 346; Brent's case, 2 Leon. 14; Tr. Eq. lib. 2, ch. 1, s. 2; Jones v. Morley, 1 Lord Raym. 291; Gibb. Uses, 16; 2 Roll. Abr. 780.) Uses, it appears, were first instituted in this kingdom about the close of the reign of Edward 3 (Bac. Uses, 8; 2 Black. Com. 328), by means of foreign ecclesiastics, who introduced them for the purpose of evading the statutes of mortmain; which, as Sir William Blackstone observes (vol. 2, p. 329), though introduced fraudulently, afterwards continued to be used innocently, and was sometimes very laudably applied to a number of civil purposes; particularly as it removed the restraint of alienation by will, and permitted the owner of lands in his lifetime to make various designations of their profits, as prudence, or justice, or family convenience might from time to time require. Till at length, during our long wars in France, and the subsequent civil commotions between the houses of York and Lancaster, uses grew almost universal, through the desire that men had (when their lives were continually in hazard) of providing for their children by will, and of securing their estates from forfeitures—when each of the contending parties, as they became uppermost, alternately attained the other. But, on the other hand, uses were considered in many instances as opening a door to fraud and injustice; and Lord Bacon complains (Use of the Law, 153) that this course of proceeding was turned to deceive many of their just and reasonable rights. A man that had cause to sue for land knew not against whom to bring his action, or who was the owner of it. The wife was defrauded of her thirds; the husband of his curtesy; the lord of his wardship, relief, heriot, and escheat; the creditor of his extent for debt, and the poor tenant of his lease. To remedy these inconveniences abundance of statutes were provided, which made the lands liable to be extended by the creditors of cestui que use (50 Ed. 3, c. 6; 2 Rich. 2 Sess. 2, 3; 19 Hen. 7, c. 15); allowing actions for the freehold to be brought against him if in the actual enjoyment of the property (Stat. 1 Rich. 2, c. 9; 4 Hen. 4, s. 7, c. 15; 11 Hen. 6, c. 3; 1 Hen. 7, c. 1); made him liable to actions of waste (11 Hen. 6, c. 5); established his conveyances and leases made without the concurrence of the feoffees (1 Rich. 3, c. 1); and gave the lord the wardship of his heir, with certain other feudal perquisites (4 Hen. 7, c. 17; 19 Hen. 7, c. 15.) The provisions just alluded to all tended to consider the cestui que use as the real owner of the estate, and at length that idea was carried into full effect by the statute 27 Hen. 8, c. 10, usually called the Statute of Uses, which, after reciting the various inconveniences before mentioned, and many others, enacts, that "when any person shall be seised of lands, &c. to the use, confidence, or trust of any other person, or body politic, the person or corporation entitled to the use in fee simple, fee tail, or for life, or years, or otherwise, shall from thenceforth stand and be possessed of the lands, &c. of and in the like estates as they have in the use, trust, or confidence; and that the estate of the person so seised to use shall be deemed to be in him or them that have the use, in such quality, manner, form, and condition, as they had before in the use." The statute thus executes the use, or, in other words, conveys the actual possession to the use, and by that means in technical language transfers the use into possession; thereby making cestui que use complete owner of the lands, as well at law as in equity (2 Black. Com. 332, 333; Shep. Touch. 504; Lutwick v. Mitton, Cro. Jac. 604; Isham v. Morrice, Cro. Car. 110; Saffyn's case, 5 Rep. 124; Barker v. Keat, 2 Mod. 252.)

SALE OF LAND.—The estate of Sydsen, in East Lothian (lately under litigation in the case Waddell v. Hope), was sold by auction on Wednesday last, in Mr. Cay's sale-rooms. It was knocked down at the sum of 10,370*l*. being 1,000*l*. above the upset price, and something more than thirty-seven years' purchase of the present rental.

The Ford Abbey Estate, together with the splendid monastery, was sold on Thursday at the Auction Mart, by Mr. George Robins, for 50,100 guineas; and Messrs. Osborne and Ward, of Bristol, it is believed, the leading bankers of that city, are the purchasers.

WILL OF THE LATE MRS. E. FRY.—The testatrix, wife of J. Fry, esq. of Upton, Essex, enjoyed a life interest over certain trust property, under the respective wills of her sisters, Priscilla Gurney and Rachel Gurney, with a power of disposition over the same, by deed, will, or otherwise, and of which there was remaining unappropriated, and at her disposal, a sum of 11,000*l*. This she has directed to be applied for the benefit of her family in the following manner:—the interest of 6,000*l*. to her husband for life, and afterwards the principal to be divided equally amongst her children. To her daughter, Katharine Fry, who has always lived with her, but to whom no provision has hitherto been made, she leaves the interest of 4,000*l*. and 2,000*l*. on her marriage, and the remaining 1,000*l*. to her son, D. H. Fry. The bequests are entirely confined to the trusts under which she was empowered by the deeds of disposition. She executed her will in 1840, appointing her sons J. G. Fry and J. Fry, jun. esqrs. executors, to whom special letters of administration with the will was granted, the husband consenting. She was in her 66th year.

SINGULAR BEQUEST.—The will of Mary Anne Johnson, late of Well-walk, Hampstead, spinster, who died on the 16th ult. passed the seal of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury on the 1st instant. The personal estate of the testatrix is sworn under 25,000*l*. The will contains the following bequests:—"I give to my black dog Carlo an annuity of 30*l*. a year during the dog's life, to be paid half-yearly. Unto each of the cats, Blacky, Jemmy, and Tom, I give an annuity of 10*l*. a year for the three cats, to be paid half-yearly. Margaret Potson and Harriet Holly, my mother's old servants, to take charge of the dog and cats."—Query: What will the authorities at the Legacy Duty Office do? As it respects "legacy duty," the legatees are certainly "strangers in blood" to the deceased, and in that capacity are liable to a duty of 10 per cent. on the value of their life interest; but the Legacy Duty Act, on the other hand, says nothing about duty payable on legacies bequeathed to dogs and cats.—Globe.

THE following scale of charges, reduced more than one-third, has been adopted for Advertisements of Estates for Sale, &c. exceeding 10 lines in length:

For the first 70 words 5*s*.
For every succeeding 30 words . 1*s*.

BRANDAO V. BARNETT.
Lien of Bankers.

Brandao v. Barnett (1 M. & G.) confirmed, and the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber reversed.

This was a writ of error in a judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber. The facts were as follows, as contained in a special verdict:—The plaintiff in error is a Portuguese merchant, residing in Portugal; the defendants in error are bankers in London. The plaintiff employed as his agent in London a Mr. Edw. Burn, a merchant; and, from time to time, remitted bills of exchange and money to him to invest in Exchequer bills. Edward Burn was also employed by other correspondents to purchase Exchequer bills for them, which he did through a broker, who dealt with him as a principal, not knowing on whose account the bills were bought. The defendants were Burn's bankers, with whom he kept an account as one of the firm of James Burn and Co. He kept several tin boxes at the banking-house, one of which he appropriated exclusively for Exchequer bills, himself keeping the key. It is the custom of bankers to receive the interest of Exchequer bills for their customers, and to exchange the Exchequer bills when necessary, and they performed these offices for Burn several times prior to December 1836. On the 1st of that month Burn handed to them out of the tin box about 10,000*l.* worth of Exchequer bills, belonging to plaintiff, and two Exchequer bills belonging to other parties. The defendants having received the interest on the bills, and placed it to Burn's account, exchanged them for new ones, which were deposited by Burn as usual in the tin box, where they remained till July 1837, when Burn stopped payment, owing a considerable balance on his drawing account to defendants, who in satisfaction of it detained the Exchequer bills which were the property of the plaintiff, and for which he brought his action in the Court of Common Pleas. He obtained the judgment of that Court, which the Court of Exchequer Chamber reversed. The writ of error in the latter judgment was argued in this House for several days in February and March last.—Lord Campbell now, in moving the judgment, went fully into the facts as set out in the special verdict. There was no doubt of the proposition that bankers had a general lien on deposits of their customers for all balances of account, but here that proposition did not apply, as the facts shewed the defendants in error never got a lien on these Exchequer bills. The keys were always held by Burn, and he gave out the bills for special purposes, and after those purposes were effected he locked the bills up again.—The other lords present having concurred, The judgment of the Exchequer Chamber was reversed.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

July 30 and 31.

DAMER V. LORD PORTARLINGTON.

Mortgagor and mortgagee staying proceedings on the defendant's application.

Where the defendant offers to perform and afford all the acts and relief sought for by the prayer of the plaintiff's bill, the Court will stay proceedings, notwithstanding the plaintiff may have some interest in the subject-matter of the suit, which might be affected in the progress of the suit.

This was an appeal motion to discharge an order of the Vice-Chancellor of England, refusing a motion made on behalf of Lord Portarlington, to stay all proceedings in the suit, and that the Law Life Insurance Company might be at liberty, during the long vacation, to inspect and take copies of all deeds and documents relating to the Portarlington estates. It appeared that in 1832, two sums, one of 350,000*l.*, and the other of 50,000*l.*, were borrowed by the late Earl of Portarlington from several contributors, and the repayment of the amount secured by mortgages on the estates. Subsequently this suit was instituted to carry into execution the trusts of a deed executed by the late Earl of Portarlington for the benefit of the contributors, and other incumbrancers on the estate. The object of the present motion was to enable the present Earl of Portarlington, who had succeeded to the estates upon the death of his uncle, the late earl, and who had devised them to him, subject to the payment of the incumbrances thereon, to get rid of the heavy and ruinous law expenses which the estates were at present, in consequence of the numerous incumbrances thereon, subject to by taking upon himself the payment of such incumbrances. This he proposed to do by obtaining from the Law Life Insurance Company a loan of money sufficient for that purpose, and which they had consented to lend on being satisfied with the evidence of title to the estates. The motion was opposed by the plaintiff, Colonel Damer, who is entitled in remainder to the estates, in case the present Earl of Portarlington should die without leaving male issue, and he has also an incumbrance on the estates to the extent of 500*l.* The defendant offered to pay off the plaintiff's incumbrance. The Vice-Chancellor had refused the application with costs, upon the ground that he had no jurisdiction to do what was asked, and as this was not an application of a party who had the money in his hands to pay over the money to the plaintiff and incumbrances, but it was sought by the motion to obtain the interference of the Court to carry out the arrangement with the Law Life Insurance Office, on which the Law Life Insurance Company were to exercise their own judgment.

Stuart, Jas. Parker, and Toller, in support of the appeal.—The plaintiff, Colonel Damer, the uncle of the present Lord Portarlington, the defendant, was only an incumbrancer on the estates to the extent of the sum of 500*l.* interest and costs, and he was the only person who had opposed the motion made on behalf of Lord Portarlington to stay all further proceedings in this suit, by his paying off all the incumbrances on the estates, by raising the money necessary for that purpose from the Law Life Insurance Company, and thereby save the estates from the ruinous law expenses which they were now subject to, there being forty persons, incumbrancers on the estates, parties to this suit; and there were no less than fourteen solicitors engaged on their behalf in the suit. If the cause was taken into the Master's office, the expenses there would be enormous. At present it cost 1,500*l.* a year, the expenses of passing the receiver's accounts alone. All the other incumbrancers, to the amount nearly of 400,000*l.* had willingly consented to the application of Lord Portarlington, as the most beneficial arrangement for the interest of all parties. Colonel Damer was the only dissident, although he had been offered by Lord Portarlington to have the 500*l.* due to him, with interest and costs, paid at once.

Bethell, Follett, and Palmer opposed the application on behalf of Colonel Damer, who, they said, was not only an incumbrancer on the estates, but also had an equal interest in the equity of redemption of the estates with Lord Portarlington, being entitled to the estates in question in remainder, in the event of Lord Portarlington dying without leaving male issue, and therefore he was interested in seeing the incumbrances paid off with the utmost possible economy, in order that something might be saved out of those family estates if possible; and on these grounds he was anxious that the trusts of the trust-deed entered into by the late Lord Portarlington should be carried into execution under the decree of the Court.

Cooper, Bagshaw, Lovat, Beales, Glasse, and B. Maxwell appeared for the various contributors and incumbrancers on the estates, and consented to the application.

The LORD CHANCELLOR remarked that the number of counsel who appeared for the different parties to the suit shewed what the costs would be if this suit was to go on. In order to induce the Court to interfere by granting this application, the counsel for Lord Portarlington must satisfy the Court that the case which he represented was substantiated by the proceedings in the case, and that all interest which Colonel Damer had in the suit Lord Portarlington was ready to satisfy and discharge at once.

Stuart, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Where a suit is instituted by one party against another, in order to have a particular interest satisfied, and the defendant comes into the court and tenders satisfaction to the plaintiff of all his claims in the suit, the Court, in such a case as that, had jurisdiction to put a stop to all further proceedings in the suit. The circumstances of this case are very complicated. If the plaintiff to the extent of his interest in the case is to be at once satisfied by the defendant, and the other parties to this suit having interest as incumbrancers, as well as the plaintiff, are to be also satisfied by the defendant, and they all consented that the further prosecution of this suit should be stayed, I am of opinion the Court in that case will not hesitate to grant the application now made to it. But, in order to do that, the Court must be satisfied that the case stated in the support of the application is made out on the face of the proceedings, and for that purpose I will read through the papers and the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor before I finally decide the matter.

JUDGMENT.

July 31.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The case is now reduced to the simple question whether, if all the allegations of the bill are true, and the defendant submits to do all that is prayed by the bill, the Court is not right in staying all further proceedings in the suit. I am unable to discover any relief prayed by this bill, except for payment of the sums alleged to be due to the plaintiff; and the defendant has offered to pay the plaintiff all principal, interest, and costs, as prayed by the bill. That comes within the principle of staying proceedings, on the defendant's affording all the relief sought by the bill, and it leaves untouched all other interests which the plaintiff may have in the subject-matter.

Stuart.—The order, then, will be, "that all proceedings in these suits be stayed, on payment to the plaintiff of all sums due to him as one of the contributors under the deed of 1832, and 500*l.* and interest, due to him, the amount of interest to be verified by affidavit; together with costs, charges and expenses properly incurred, and the costs of dismissing the bill in Mahoney v. Lord Portarlington, on producing the consents of all the other defendants."

Re ———, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Expenses incurred by the committee of the estate without previous order.

Bacon supported a petition by the committee of the estate, which prayed, amongst other things, that several sums of money which he had expended in the improvement and enlargement of the farm buildings on the lunatics estate might be allowed. There were affidavits to shew that such expenditure was necessary in order to secure good tenants, and that the property had been benefited by the outlay.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There must be an inquiry whether these sums have been properly expended. The general rule is, that sums which have been expended without authority from the Court will not be allowed, and, at all events, the party so acting must pay the costs of putting it to rights.

Costs of the petition and inquiry to be paid by the petitioner.

Re ———, a Lunatic.

Payment into court—Form of order.

A petition having been presented by the committee of the estate, for leave to pay into court a sum of money he had received on account of the lunatic's estate.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Of course that must be without prejudice to an account by the committee for that sum; that must be inserted in the order.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Saturday, July 18.

TOPPING V. HOWARD.

Practice—Appointment of guardian ad litem to infants without their appearing in court or commission.

Winstanley moved that William Topping, a defendant in this suit, might be appointed guardian ad litem to nine of the infant defendants, residing in different parts of England, without their appearance in court, and without a commission, on affidavit of the infancy, of the places of residence, of the respectability of the proposed guardian, and that his interests were not adverse to those of the infants.

Drant v. Vause, 2 Y & C. C. C. 524; and Stillwell v. Blair 13 Sim. 399, were cited.

The VICE CHANCELLOR made the order, observing that he considered the Lord Chancellor's decision in Drant v. Vause had settled the practice.

Thursday July 23.

RICHARDSON v. WICK.

Proceedings where the person whose name appeared to a bill as the plaintiff's solicitor had not taken out his certificate.

Toller, on behalf of one of the defendants in this suit, moved that the bill might be taken off the file for irregularity, with costs, Mr. Hadwin, whose name appeared on the bill as the plaintiff's solicitor, not being a solicitor of the court.

Cooper, for the plaintiff, asked for an opportunity to substitute the name of a solicitor for that of Mr. Hadwin, as the plaintiff was not aware, at the time of filing the bill, that Mr. Hadwin had not taken out his certificate.

Toller said, that if that were allowed, he should ask permission to withdraw his former appearance, in order that the defendant might have an opportunity of demurring.

Cooper objected that the other defendants were not represented on the present motion, and that if the bill were taken off the file, they would have no opportunity to obtain their costs.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR directed that the person whose name was to be substituted should personally appear and state his willingness to allow his name to be used; and that the Registrar should satisfy himself that the person so appearing was a solicitor of the court; the defendant moving to have his appearance dated as on this day, and the plaintiff and Mr. Hadwin to pay the costs of this application.

July 27.—Toller having mentioned to the Court that no solicitor had appeared in this case to have his name affixed to the bill,

The VICE-CHANCELLOR directed that all proceedings against the defendant should be stayed until further order, and that the costs should be paid as before ordered.

SMITH v. BARNEY.

Will—Construction—"My personal and not my real representative."

By the words "personal representatives," or "legal personal representatives," must ordinarily and prima facie be understood "executors or administrators."

A bequest made to a personal representative must generally be understood as made to that representative, not for his own benefit, but for the purposes for which he held or could hold the general personal estate of the individual of whom he was described as personal representative.

Thomas Newham, by his will dated the 8th of October, 1819, after reciting his marriage settlement, by which certain property was limited to him, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, upon the decease of his wife and failure of issue by her, confirmed the said settlement, and devised all his freehold, copyhold and leasehold estates not comprised in the settlement, to trustees, upon trust as to certain portions of the estates, to raise money for the payment of a mortgage, and subject thereto, upon trust for his wife, Penelope, her heirs and assigns for ever. And as to all the other property devised or bequeathed to his said trustees, upon trust for the payment of the fines for renewals, chief rents, &c. and to pay the rents to his said wife, Penelope, and her assigns, for her life, or during the said testator's terms in the said property, with power to fell timber and sell the same, as there-in mentioned. And after the decease of his said wife he gave the said property, and after her decease and failure of issue he gave the property comprised in the settlement, to the said trustees, upon trust as to the freeholds, to pay the rents to his niece, Charlotte Elizabeth Steward, and her assigns for her life; and after her decease, in trust for her first and other sons in tail, with remainder to her daughters as tenants in common, with remainder in trust for his niece, Mary Ann Steward, and her sons and daughters, in a similar manner, with remainder in trust for his nephew, Thomas Steward, and his sons and daughters, in a similar manner; and in default of such issue, in trust for the testator's own right heirs for ever. And as to the said leasehold and copyhold property, the testator directed his trustees to stand possessed thereof upon such trusts, and for such intents and purposes, as, allowing for the different nature and qualities of the estates, would best and nearest correspond with the trusts, intents, and purposes thereinbefore by him declared of the freeholds, so that the said leasehold and copyhold estates might be enjoyed by the person or persons for the time being entitled under that his will to the said freeholds, and might go along with the same, so far as the rules of law or equity would permit; yet so nevertheless that the said leasehold and copyhold estates should not, as to the effect or purpose of transmission, vest absolutely in any child of any person thereby made tenant for life, unless such child should live to attain the age of twenty-one years, and so that in default of any person becoming entitled thereto, under that his will, the same should be in trust for his (the said testator's) personal, and not his real representative. The testator also gave to his said wife all his money and securities for money, and all his personal estate not otherwise disposed of by his will, upon trust to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and to raise the sums of 3,000*l.* and 1,000*l.*; and subject thereto, he gave the surplus to his said wife, her executors, administrators, and assigns, for her and their own use and benefit. Provision was then made for the raising of the 3,000*l.* and 1,000*l.* in case the residue of the personal estate should prove insufficient. These sums were to be applied as follows; the 3,000*l.* as a legacy to the wife, and the 1,000*l.* as a gift to the trustees upon trust to invest and pay the dividends to the wife for her life, and after her decease to transfer the principal to the said Mary Ann Steward, her executors, administrators, and assigns. The testator then appointed his said wife sole executrix of his will. The testator died shortly after the date of his will, and the same will was proved by his widow in January, 1820. In May, 1841, the widow died intestate. Mary Ann Steward, who married Henry Evans, and Charlotte Elizabeth Steward died without having had any issue. A question having arisen as to the title to the leasehold and copyhold property of the testator, this bill was filed by the trustees for the purpose of obtaining the judgment of the Court. The claimants were the administrators of the testator's widow, the persons representing the next of kin of the testator at the time of his death, and the persons representing the next of kin of the testator at the death of the last tenant for life under his will.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Since the commencement of the argument, the opportunity which it has afforded me of considering the will and examining the authorities has enabled me to dispose of the case to my satisfaction now. It is likely that the draft of the will in this case, after it had been settled, was altered by some other hand,—that it was not submitted to the person by whom it was originally settled. However, whether that conjecture be well or ill-founded, the instrument to be considered is, of course, the will as it stands, the question in the cause being, what is the meaning of the words "in trust for my personal, and not my real representative," which that document contains? It is agreed on all hands that the word "personal" being an adjective, the substantive to which it belongs is "representative," understood or expressed; but, if instead of this word the substantive were "estate," that, I apprehend, would be a disposition against the claim of each class of the next of kin, as the widow was sole residuary legatee. Now, whatever may be thought of the singular word "representative," or of the word "representatives," or of the expressions "legal representative" or "legal representatives," I apprehend that by the words "personal representative," or the words "legal personal representative," must ordinarily and prima facie be taken to be understood "executors or administrators;" that is, representative in law as to the personal estate, not of kin or kinsmen, not a wife or husband, not a person entitled by the statute to claim distribution. Generally also, and prima facie, as I suppose, a bequest made to a personal representative (without the expression is to be so accompanied) must be understood as made to that representative, not for her or his own benefit necessarily, but for the purposes, whatever they might be—for the purposes for which either she or he held or could hold the general personal estate of the individual of whom she or he was described as "personal representative." Such being the effect and meaning of the language of the will before me, and in dispute in this cause, the case decides itself against the next of kin as classes, and in favour of the widow, who was sole executrix and sole residuary legatee. Of course, the context of the will containing the words "personal representative" may be such as to render it necessary or proper to read them as importing consanguinity, or as referring to a distribution, which would have taken place if there had been an intestacy. The question is, whether this will is to be considered in either of those two latter modes, and it lies on those alleging either of those modes of expression to shew that the testator's intention is plainly so; to shew more than a mere doubtful sense, since causing only a doubt leaves an expression in possession of all its proper force. Having made a particular disposition of his real estate of which the ultimate limitation was in favour of his right heirs, the testator makes a similar disposition of his personalty, substituting only for the ultimate disposition one in favour of his personal representative. I cannot venture to infer merely, from this, as against the proper meaning of the expression "personal representative," that it must be taken to mean consanguinity, because heirship is by consanguinity. In a possible state of circumstances, the limitation in favour of his "right heirs" might have some operation and effect; but, as circumstances are and were the limitation has not, and never can have, any operation; has never had any, and could not have any by the happening of his death at any time, or at the time when he died, could it have any. The gift to his heirs, if it was a gift, was a specific gift or a specific bequest to the person or persons who would have taken an interest if there had been an intestacy of it. Applying the same or any analogous construction to the gift to the "personal representative," it confers on the widow one-half of the fund in dispute; but, in another sense, it confers on her, as residuary legatee and sole executrix, the whole; for if the limitation is to be read as a limitation in favour of any specific person, she is that person for every beneficial as well as legal purpose, notwithstanding the observations made on the form and language of the residuary bequest, since the widow was, generally, as well as solely, residuary legatee. What, in the event of the testator's having survived his nephews and nieces, and left no kindred—what, in that event, the claim might have been, it is unnecessary for me to say. Against the widow it has been contended that, had the testator meant her to take the interest in dispute, he would have given it to her by name, and that the form and language of the power of sale of the leaseholds and copyholds, the direction as to the mode in which the testator's property is to be held, and the provision as to the residuary legatee, support the claim of the next of kin of one class or the other. I have considered these remarks, and if the construction is in favour of the widow is right, they do not appear to me to be strong enough to support that purpose. Had the counsel for the various next of kin established that, of which together they had well-nigh persuaded me, namely, that the limitation is unintelligible, they would have in every way established the case of the widow as residuary legatee. This, I repeat, is the ordinary prima facie and correct meaning of the language used. The word personal representative may, as every one knows, be read in other senses if the context be such as to demonstrate the propriety of that reading. The question is, whether such a context is to be found in this will? I cannot discover it. I believe that to read the word personal representative as not being personal representative according to the proper import and general acceptation of the expression, would be, if not merely arbitrary, merely conjectural. I therefore think that the next of kin of each class are excluded in favour of the widow, who is the residuary legatee and sole executrix.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

YOVELL v. CROSS.

Bankruptcy—Evidence of subsequent promise—Stat. 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 131.

*A letter from defendants to plaintiff contained the following expressions:—"We shall be happy to pay you the difference of the 100*l.* after you have taken a dividend on the estate," and "we hope you will make yourself comfortable, as we pledge ourselves to make every thing right with you."*

Held: that this was an unconditional promise to pay whatever remained due after payment of a dividend, and that it was sufficient evidence of a subsequent promise under stat. 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 131, to support a replication to a plea of bankruptcy, that the defendants had in writing ratified and confirmed the promise after their bankruptcy.

*Assumpsit on a promissory note for 100*l.* Plea (inter alia), the bankruptcy of the defendants, after the note became due.*

Replication, that after the defendants became bankrupt, &c. they, the defendants, in writing signed by them, ratified and confirmed the promises in the declaration mentioned, and then promised the plaintiff to pay him the amount of the note in the declaration mentioned.

Rejoinder, that the defendants did not promise modo et forma.

At the trial, which took place before Mr. Justice Coleridge, at the Croydon Summer Assizes, 1843, the plaintiff put in evidence a letter signed by the defendants, which contained the following terms:—"We shall be happy to pay you the difference of the 100*l.* after you have taken a dividend on the estate."

ste. * * We hope that you will make yourself comfortable, as we pledge ourselves to make every thing right with you." Upon the part of the defendant it was submitted that that letter contained a conditional and qualified promise only; and that, therefore, the replication was not proved; but the learned judge thought otherwise, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff, the defendant having leave to move.

Chambers, Q.C. accordingly, in last Michaelmas term, (Nov. 12), obtained a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a nonsuit entered, or a verdict for the defendant upon that issue. Fleming v. Hayne, 1 Stark. 370, was cited.

Lush now shewed cause. The objection here is, that the promise to pay the debt was conditional, and that performance of the condition was not shewn. Lord DENMAN, C.J.—The question is, whether the letter contains an unqualified promise? This letter clearly does contain an unqualified promise to pay; he only limitation is, as to the time of payment; and he real dispute between these parties is, whether the plaintiff might not have received another dividend. The promise is, that the whole amount shall be paid; and the time of payment is after a dividend has been received. In Fleming v. Hayne, 1 Stark. 370, here was no express promise reviving the debt, but only a proposal made by the debtor. In Dodson v. Mackey, 4 Nev. & M. 327; 8 Ad. & Ell. 225, n. which was a case decided upon the Statute of Limitations, it was held that the following expressions in a letter written by the defendant to the plaintiff within six years: "I can never be happy until I have not only paid you every thing, but all to whom I owe money. Your account is quite correct; and oh! that I were now going to inclose you the amount of it;" "it is impossible to state to you what will be done in my affairs at present; it is difficult to know what will be best; but, immediately it is settled, you shall be informed," contained an absolute unconditional promise, and not a qualified or conditional promise, and constituted a sufficient acknowledgment to take the case out of the statute. In that case, therefore, there was, at least, as much uncertainty as to the time of payment as here. At all events, the issue raised upon these pleadings does not let in the objection; it is not denied, that an action founded upon a promise to pay on request fails, if the period of credit has not expired; but the issue here is, whether, after the bankruptcy the defendant ever promised to pay at all; and that is clearly proved.

Montagu Chambers, Q.C. contra.—The question is, whether this letter contains such a promise as will revive the defendant's liability after his bankruptcy, under s. 131, of stat. 6 Geo. 4, c. 16 (repeated by s. 63, of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 123). To satisfy that clause the promise must be express, distinct, and unequivocal; it must not be conditional or ambiguous (Fleming v. Hayne, 1 Stark. 370); but here it is quite uncertain what is promised, both as to time and amount. Every thing is to depend upon the dividends. The same strictness of construction has been applied to similar words in the Statute of Limitations. In Edmunds v. Downes, 4 Tyr. 73; 2 Cr. & M. 459, the terms of the acknowledgment were, "I shall be happy to pay you both principal and interest, when convenient; I shall pay no more interest, till we have a fair settlement;" and it was held that the promise was conditional, and that the plaintiff was bound to shew that it was convenient to pay, and also, semble, that a settlement had taken place. In Gardner v. McMahon, 6 Jur. 712, the acknowledgment was held sufficient, because in express terms the defendant had declared his willingness to do any thing which would take the case out of the statute.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—It seems to me that this is an unconditional promise to pay that part of the debt which would remain due after payment of a dividend. It is said, that is uncertain; but certum est quod certum reddi potest; and as to that part of the debt I think the promise is direct enough. Sometimes it is necessary to take the opinion of a jury as to the meaning of such letters, but generally speaking they raise only a question of legal construction for the Court; and that is the case here. We will, however, mention this case to my brother Patteson to-morrow, and ascertain whether he has any doubts upon the subject. Cur. adv. vult.

Afterwards, PATTESON, J. concurring,

Rule discharged.

MITCHELL v. KING.

Goods sold and delivered.—Acceptance within the Statute of Frauds.

The defendant verbally agreed to purchase of the plaintiff sixty Stilton cheeses, and directed thirty to be sent to the warehouse of A for another person, and thirty to the warehouse of B for himself. The cheeses were delivered accordingly on the 28th Oct. and those sent to the warehouse of A were kept and resold to a third person; but about the 20th Nov. the other parcel of cheeses was returned to the plaintiff as damaged.

Held: that the contract for the sixty cheeses was one entire contract, and that the acceptance of the thirty delivered at the warehouse of A was a sufficient acceptance to satisfy the Statute of Frauds.

Assumpsit, for 28l. 2s. 6d. the price of goods sold and delivered; and goods bargained and sold.

Plea, except as to 14l. 1s. 3d. non-assumpsit, and as to that, payment into court.

At the trial, which took place before Wightman, J. in Middlesex, on the 24th of May, 1845, it appeared that in October 1844 the defendant agreed to purchase of the plaintiff sixty Stilton cheeses, which were to be of the same quality as a lot previously purchased; and that by the defendant's direction thirty of them were sent to the warehouse of Messrs. Brown, of Watling-street, in whose employment the defendant then was as a traveller; and thirty to the warehouse of Messrs. Richardson, for a person named Faithfull, who had agreed with the defendant to take half the cheeses and share the profits. Both parcels were delivered on the 28th October; and the greater part of that delivered at Messrs. Richardson's was subsequently sold by Mr. Faithfull to a third person. The parcel sent to Messrs. Brown's was returned to the plaintiff about the 20th of November; and, according to the testimony of one witness, the defendant had expressed to the plaintiff his intention not to keep them on account of their damaged condition, at an interview, which took place about five or six days after they had been received. The question of fact turned principally upon the evidence of that witness. The learned judge left to the jury the question whether the defendant had accepted the goods; and said that if they believed the witness, who said that there was an offer to return the goods soon after they were received, they could hardly find that the defendant had accepted them; but the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 14l. 1s. 3d.

In the following Trinity Term (12th June) Cleasby obtained a rule to shew cause why that verdict should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground that the learned judge ought to have directed the jury that there was no acceptance of the cheeses delivered at Brown's to satisfy the Statute of Frauds.

The following cases were cited:—Kent v. Huskisson, 3 Bos. & P. 233; Hove v. Palmer, 3 B. & A. 321; Hanson v. Armitage, 5 B. & A. 559; Smith v. Surman, 9 B. & C. 561; Accebal v. Levy, 10 Bing. 376.

Hindmarsh now shewed cause.—The 17th sect. of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3.) requires that the contract for the sale of goods above the value of 10l. shall be in writing, unless the buyer shall accept a part of the goods so sold, and actually receive the same; and to satisfy that statute there must be a delivery by the seller and an acceptance by the buyer of part, with the intention of taking to them as owner. Here there was clearly a sufficient acceptance, for there was but one contract, and the goods delivered at Richardson's were never returned; they were sold again; and money has been paid into court on account of those goods. In Baldev v. Parker, 2 B. & C. 37, the defendant went to the shop of the plaintiff and contracted for the purchase of various articles, each of which was under the value of 10l. but the whole amounted to 70l. A separate price for each article was agreed upon. Some the defendant marked with a pencil; others were measured in his presence; and others he assisted to cut from larger bulks. He then desired that an account of the whole might be sent to his house, and went away. A bill of parcels was accordingly sent, together with the goods, which the defendant refused to accept; and it was held that this was all one contract, and therefore within the statute; and that there was no sufficient acceptance. So in the present case the contract was one entire contract; but the distinction is, that the acceptance of that part which was delivered at Richardson's does take this case out of the statute. In Elliott v. Thomas, 3 M. & W. 170, it was also held that if a joint order be given for several classes of goods, the acceptance of one class is a part acceptance of the whole, under the 17th section; and the same principle was recognized and acted upon in Scott v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company, 12 M. & W. 33, where there was a joint order for goods already manufactured and goods to be manufactured, and an acceptance only of the manufactured goods. But, further, even if the contract as to the two parcels of cheeses can be treated as divisible, the parcel delivered at Brown's was not rejected within a reasonable time; and there was, therefore, even as to those goods, independently of the others, an acceptance sufficient to satisfy the statute.

Cleasby, contra.—It is true that the part delivered at Richardson's was ultimately accepted; but the other parcel had been distinctly rejected long before. There could not, therefore, subsequently be any acceptance of that part to satisfy the statute. There must be such an acceptance of the goods as affirms the contract, and precludes all subsequent objection to the quantum or quality of the goods. (Hanson v. Armitage, 5 B. & A. 559; Smith v. Surman, 9 B. & C. 561.) The case of Baldev v. Parker is an authority for the defendant in this case; for there it was held that there was no sufficient acceptance, although the defendant had seen the goods, and assisted in cutting them from the bulk when he bought them; and it was held to be one contract, because the different goods were all purchased at one time, and all sent together to the defendant's house; whilst in the present case the cheeses were never seen by the defendant until after their delivery, and one half was delivered at one place, and the other at another. There was, therefore, a distinct contract as to each half, and that also distinguishes this from the other cases cited. Kent v. Huskisson, 3 Bos. & P. 223, is strong in support of this objection.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—It is quite clear that there was evidence of delivery and acceptance sufficient to satisfy the statute.

PATTESON, J.—The only question is upon the Statute of Frauds, but it appears to me quite clearly that here there was but one contract; and if so, it is admitted that there has been an acceptance of part, which is all the statute requires.

WIGHTMAN, J.—If the verdict had been for the defendant, I should certainly have reserved leave to move. The defendant received the goods, and kept them for a month, before any were sent back; for the jury discredited the testimony of the witness as to the conversation five or six days after.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Saturday, Sept. 12.

(Before Mr. Commissioner FANE.)

Re FELTHOUSE.

Certificate refused for three years for obtaining goods to raise money upon, and upon pretence of paying immediately.

His HONOUR gave judgment in this case, which was before the Court a few days back, on an application for the certificate. The bankrupt had been opposed on the part of the assignees, on the ground that he had obtained goods from them for the purpose of pledging; and by a Mr. King, a licensed victualler, for obtaining some wine on a promise of ready money, and then treating him in a very improper manner. His debt was 115l.

His HONOUR said the question was, whether the certificate should be at once refused or postponed for a very long period. In March last the bankrupt had obtained goods from three tradesmen, and without unpacking them had sent them to an auctioneer to raise money on them. It had been contended that he had raised money on the goods to make a "purse" to go to America, but he (Mr. Commissioner Fane) was inclined to think that the expression to Mr. King about going to New York, was more an insulting jest than an intention to proceed to America. The case, however, of getting goods for the sole purpose of raising money on them was quite clear, and on that ground the certificate would be delayed for a period of two years. The bankrupt had obtained from Mr. King a quantity of wine, on the promise of paying cash on delivery, which he never intended, and for the complaint so proved his certificate would be delayed for one year. His Honour added, "he may have his certificate on the 18th March, 1849."

The bankrupt is understood to be in prison, and by a case decided in the Insolvent Debtors' Court it has been held that where a certificate is delayed for a fixed period, the Court would not hear the case, but where a certificate was refused, a judgment commensurate to the complaint would be given, but in that court parties who proved in bankruptcy cannot oppose.

WILLOUGHBY v. POOLLY.

If a fi. fa. has been issued upon a judgment, and part levied thereunder, that fact should appear upon the judgment-roll, to enable the plaintiff to avail himself of the provisions of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127. The defendant was summoned under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127.

Mr. Hancock, for defendant, took an objection to the judgment on the following ground:—It appeared that plaintiff had issued a fi. fa. and levied part of the debt; the summons and judgment-paper did not contain that fact, and Mr. Hancock contended that plaintiff ought to have had the fi. fa. returned and entered on the roll, as sufficient might have been levied to have satisfied the judgment.

Mr. McKenzie, for plaintiff, put in a statement from the sheriff's officer, shewing what had been levied.

Mr. Hancock objected to its admission.

Mr. Commissioner EVANS.—I must allow the objection; the fi. fa. and return ought to be on the roll.

PALACE COURT.

COLLINS v. VIDLER.

Patent Medicines.

The plaintiff, who is a surgeon at Camden-town, and pleaded his own case, sought to recover the sum of 4l. 13s. for medicines supplied to the defendant. Plaintiff said that in 1843 he carried on business as a chemist and druggist, but has since become a member of the College of Surgeons. He had invented a "specific," and to enable him to sell it, had taken out the usual license for the sale of patent medicines, and the defendant was supplied in due course with the different articles he asked for.

The plaintiff's brother was called, and proved the delivery of the medicine, but positively denied that he ever gave defendant any advice. He always sold what was asked for without inquiring what it was for. They took it on their own responsibility. Other witnesses were called to prove an admission on the part of the defendant and a promise to pay.

Hickins, for the defendant, contended that the license did not justify a druggist in selling his own specifics under colour of a patent, as there was advice given on the bottle, and it was therefore clearly an evasion of the Act, which was passed for the protection of the lives and health of the public. It was a very different case from where a person sold the goods of another for profit, and had no reason to give advice. On that ground, therefore, he had to submit that the plaintiff must be nonsuited.

The JUDGE said he felt of the same opinion, that it was an evasion, but would not nonsuit.

Hickins then insisted that, to prove the real value of the medicine, its ingredients ought to be disclosed.

The plaintiff refused, and said it was a patent article, and had the stamp and label required by law, and which he was entitled to sell. He did not claim it as a medical bill, but as for goods sold.

Hickins next urged that if it could be shewn that advice was given during any period, then the plaintiff would have been acting as an apothecary, and not being one would be liable to a penalty, instead of being able to maintain an action.

A witness was called who distinctly proved that advice was given.

The learned JUDGE summed up, and told the jury the question as to whether or not there had been an evasion of the Act, was one of law; but if, on the matter of fact, they believed that the plaintiff had not only sold the medicine, but given advice, they would find a verdict for the defendant.

The jury consulted for about ten minutes, and then gave a verdict for defendant.

PREROGATIVE COURT.

In the goods of J. POWELL, deceased.

Adoption of foreign domicile.

The deceased in 1830, being then a clerk in an English house, left this country on account of his health, and went to reside at Lyons, where he established himself in the riband trade. He married a native of France, and subsequently removed with his family to St. Etienne, where he carried on business as a riband-merchant. From the time he left England till his death at St. Etienne, the 21st April, 1846, he revisited this country only for a fortnight or three weeks, at a time, to see his friends, but never took a permanent residence here. The bulk of his property was invested in business in France, and in mines and other undertakings in that country. The only property he had in this country consisted of two houses (worth about 250*l.*), which he held under his father's will. On the 11th April, 1844, he duly executed a will according to the law of France, probate of which was now sought in this Court.

Dr. Robinson, in support of the motion, submitted that it was clear the deceased had adopted France as the place of his domicile; and

The SURROGATE (Dr. Daubeny), being of the same opinion, decreed probate of the will to the executors.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

AMONG the measures which will occupy the attention of Parliament early in the next session, is the Bill (which was brought in by Messrs. WARBURTON and LEADER, and read a first time just before the recess) for restoring Arrest on Mesne Process under certain restrictions. The Bill is just printed, but reached us too late to be available for the purpose of examination this week. We give the preamble and some further particulars of the Bill, under the heading "Bills in Progress" and as the contemplated measure proposes to make an important movement in a retrograde direction, and it is desirable its clauses should have full consideration by the Profession, we shall give either the whole, or such parts of it as we deem most require attention, in our next number. Some interesting Parliamentary returns, &c. are subjoined.

Bills in Progress.

ARREST ON MESNE PROCESS.—The preamble of this Bill states that "it has been found, by experience, that the abolition of arrest on mesne process has greatly increased the expense and difficulty of compelling the payment of debts, and has enabled debtors to continue to resist their creditors until the greater part of their assets has been wasted or concealed, or distributed amongst favoured creditors, and it is expedient to restore the power of arrest on mesne process in civil actions, with proper precautions to prevent such power from being abused." By this measure it is proposed that no arrest should take place except by order of the Court of Bankruptcy; that no commissioner is to issue an order unless the creditor first swear fully to the particulars of his demand, nor unless there is a prima facie case of debt due, and of two applications having been made for the same. On the debtor being taken on a writ of capias, he is to be brought immediately before the commissioner, with liberty to shew cause against the arrest, and the commissioner may either discharge the party or order him to find bail. The party arrested may be discharged on the payment of money into court, or on filing a declaration of insolvency, or a petition as an insolvent debtor. The suggestions will probably be considered by the Lord Chancellor, who has promised to give his attention to the law of bankruptcy and insolvency.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

VAGRANTS.—Return of the numbers received into the union workhouses of England and Wales during each of the years 1841, 1842, 1843, 1844, and 1845. In 1845 the males were 247,377; in 1841 they were 93,985. In 1845 there were 39,539 females, and in 1841, 24,095. The number of males between the ages of eighteen and forty, was 116,725 in 1845, and in 1841 they were 43,577.

EXPORTS AND IMPORTS.—A Parliamentary paper of 14 pages, obtained by Mr. Hastie, the member for Paisley, has been printed, containing accounts of the exports to, and imports from the British West India colonies, the East Indies, Ceylon, China, &c. for the year ending the 5th January last, as also of the number of ships that have entered and cleared in the places during the same period. The declared value of the exports to the British West India colonies in the year was 2,789,196*l.* and of the imports the quantities are given and not the value. The exports to the East India Company's territories and Ceylon amounted to 6,703,778*l.* The quantities of articles imported are given. The exports to China were in value 2,394,827*l.* The quantities imported are set forth. To the Mauritius the exports were valued 346,059*l.* The imported articles are mentioned. The exports to the British North American colonies were 3,555,954*l.* The imported articles are stated. To New South Wales and other Australian colonies they were 1,201,076*l.* To the United States of America the exports were 7,147,663*l.* To Cuba 695,379*l.* To Brazil 2,493,306*l.* and to Mexico, and the other states of central and South America, exclusive of Brazil, the exports were in value 3,485,880*l.* The average prices of sugar per cw. exclusive of duty, in the year ended the 6th of January last were,—mean average prices computed from the weekly averages published in the London Gazette.—British plantation, 32s. 11*d.*; Mauritius, 31s. 10*d.*; and British East India, 35s. 5*d.* The exports to the places mentioned, consisted of British and Irish produce and manufactures; they shew the immense commerce of the country. In the list of shipping it appears that 839 British ships, of 220,538 tons, entered and cleared for the British West India colonies; 443, of 201,291 tons, for the East India Company's territories and Ceylon; 121 for China, of 51,812 tons; 97 for the Mauritius, of 27,199 tons; 3,018 for the British and North American colonies, of 1,990,224 tons; 99 for New South Wales and the Australian colonies, of 36,158 tons; 368 for the United States of America, of 223,676 tons; 144 for Cuba, of 46,578 tons; 248 for the Brazils, of 58,119 tons; and for Mexico, 327 of 86,674 tons. For four of the places last mentioned the foreign ships entered inwards, in addition to the British vessels, numbered,—United States of America, 741, of 444,442 tons; Cuba, 59, of 12,757 tons; the Brazils, 14, of 3,888 tons; and Mexico, 14, of 3,418 tons. The vessels cleared outwards were, respectively, 954 British, of 263,273 tonnage; 492 British, of 243,358 tonnage; and foreign, 2, of 1,157 tons; 86 British, of 34,391 tonnage, and foreign, 4, of 1,396 tons; 71 British, of 21,418 tons; 2,510 British, of 917,423 tons, and foreign, 1, of 414 tons; 146 British, of 58,537 tons; 404 British, of 255,135 tons, and foreign 730, of 435,046 tons; 104 British, of 38,952 tons, and foreign 69, of 17,849 tons; 231 British, of 56,135 tons, and foreign, 94, of 24,626 tons. And Mexico, 357 British, of 104,713 tons; and foreign, 15, of 2,933 tons.

NEW STATUTES

Of the Session 9 & 10 Victoria.

[In this record of actual Legislation, only the statutes and parts of statutes of peculiar importance to the Profession are given verbatim. Of the rest, the title, or a brief analysis only, is preserved here.]

SMALL DEBTS ACT.

(Concluded from p. 513.)

112. Suitors' money unclaimed in six years to go in general fund.—That the clerk or clerks of every such court shall in the month of March in each year make out a correct list of all sums of money belonging to suitors in the court which shall have been paid into court, and which shall have remained unclaimed for five years before the first day of the month of January then last past, specifying the names of the parties for whom or on whose account the same were so paid into court; and a copy of such list shall be put up and remain during court hours in some conspicuous part of the court house, and at all times in the clerk's office, and all sums of money which shall have been paid into any such court, to the use of any suitor or suitors thereof and which shall have remained unclaimed for the period of six years before the passing of this Act, and which are now in the hands of any commissioner, trustee, judge, or officer of such court, or otherwise held in trust for such suitors, and all further sums of money which shall hereafter be paid into any such court, to the use of any suitor or suitors thereof, shall, if unclaimed for the period of six years after the same shall have been so paid into court, be applicable as part of the general fund of the court, and shall be carried to the account of such fund, and no person shall be entitled to claim any sum which shall have remained unclaimed for six years; but no time during which the person entitled to claim such sum shall have been an infant or feme covert, or of unsound mind, or beyond the seas, shall be taken into account in estimating the said period of six years.

113. Power of committal for contempt.—That if any person shall wilfully insult the judge or any juror, or any bailiff, clerk, or officer of the said court, at the time being, during his sitting or attendance in court, or in going to or returning from the court, or shall wilfully interrupt the proceedings of the court, or otherwise misbehave in court, it shall be lawful for any bailiff or officer of the court, with or without the assistance of any other person, by the order of the judge, to take such offender into custody, and detain him until the rising of the court; and the judge shall be empowered, if he shall think fit, by a warrant under his hand, and sealed with the seal of the court, to commit any such offender to any prison to which he has power to commit offenders under this Act for any time not exceeding seven days, or to impose upon any such offender a fine not exceeding five pounds for every such offence, and in default of payment thereof to commit the offender to any such prison as aforesaid for any time not exceeding seven days, unless the said fine be sooner paid.

114. Penalty for assaulting bailiffs, or removing goods taken in execution.—That if any officer or bailiff of any court holden under this Act shall be assaulted while in the execution of his duty, or if any rescue shall be made or attempted to be made of any goods levied under process of the court, the person so offending shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds, to be recovered by order of the court, or before a justice of the peace as hereinafter provided; and it shall be lawful for the bailiff of the court or any peace officer in any such case to take the offender into custody (with or without a warrant), and bring him before such court or justice accordingly.

115. Bailiffs made answerable for escapes, and neglect to levy execution.—That in case any bailiff of the said court who shall be employed to levy any execution against goods and chattels shall, by neglect, or connivance or omission, lose the opportunity of levying any such execution, then upon complaint of the party aggrieved by reason of such neglect, connivance, or omission (and the fact alleged being proved to the satisfaction of the court on the oath of any credible witness), the judge shall order such bailiff to pay such damages as it shall appear that the plaintiff has sustained thereby, not exceeding in any case the sum of money for which the said execution issued, and the bailiff shall be liable thereto; and upon demand made thereof, and on his refusal so to pay and satisfy the same, payment thereof shall be enforced by such ways and means as are herein provided for enforcing a judgment recovered in the said court.

116. Remedies against, and penalties on, bailiffs and other officers for misconduct.—That if any clerk, bailiff, or officer of the court, acting under colour or pretence of the process of the said court, shall be charged with extortion or misconduct, or with not duly paying or accounting for any money levied by him under the authority of this Act, it shall be lawful for the judge to inquire into such matter in a summary way, and for that purpose to summon and enforce the attendance of all necessary parties in like manner as the attendance of witnesses in any case may be enforced, and to make such order thereupon for the repayment of any money extorted, or for the due payment of any money so levied as aforesaid, and for the payment of such damages and costs, as he shall think just; and also, if he shall think fit, to impose such fine upon the clerk, bailiff, or officer, not exceeding ten pounds for each offence, as he shall deem adequate; and in default of payment of any money so ordered to be paid, payment of the same may be enforced by such ways and means as are herein provided for enforcing a judgment recovered in the said court.

117. Penalty on officers taking fees besides those allowed.—That every treasurer, clerk, bailiff, or other officer employed in putting this Act or any of the powers thereof in execution, who shall wilfully and corruptly exact, take, or accept any fee or reward whatsoever, other than and except such fees as are or shall be appointed and allowed respectively as aforesaid, for or on account of any thing done or to be done by virtue of this Act, or on any account whatsoever relative to putting this Act into execution, shall, upon proof thereof before the said court, and in the case of a clerk, treasurer, or high bailiff on allowance of the finding of the court by the Lord Chancellor, be for ever incapable of serving or being employed under this Act in any office of profit or emolument, and shall also be liable for damages as herein provided.

118. Claims as to goods taken in execution to be adjudicated in court.—That if any claim shall be made to or in respect of any goods or chattels taken in execution under the process of any court holden under this Act, or in respect of the proceeds or value thereof, by any landlord for rent, or by any person not being the party against whom such process has issued, it shall be lawful for the clerk of the court, upon application of the officer charged with the execution of such process, as well before as after any action brought against such officer, to issue a summons calling before the said court as well the party issuing such process as the party making such claim, and thereupon any action which shall have been brought in any of her Majesty's superior courts of record, or in any local or inferior court, in respect of such claim, shall be stayed, and the court in which such action shall have been brought, or any judge thereof, on proof of the issue of such summons, and that the goods and chattels were so taken in execution, may order the party bringing such action to pay the costs of all proceedings had upon such action after the issue of such summons out of the county court; and the judge of the county court shall adjudicate upon such claim, and make such order between the parties in respect thereof, and of the costs of the proceedings, as to him shall seem fit, and such order shall be enforced in like manner as any order made in any suit brought in such court.

119. Actions of replevin may be brought without writ.—That all actions of replevin in cases of distress for rent in arrear or damage faisan which shall be brought in the county court, shall be brought without writ in a court held under this Act.

120. Plaints where to be entered.—That in every such action of replevin the plaint shall be entered in the court holden under this Act for the district wherein the distress was taken.

121. How actions of replevin may be removed.—That in case either party to any such action of replevin shall declare to the court in which such action shall be brought that the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, or to any toll, market, fair, or franchise, is in question, or that the rent or damage in respect of which the distress shall have been taken is more than the sum of twenty pounds, and shall become bound, with two sufficient sureties, to be approved by the clerk of the court, in such sums as to the judge shall seem reasonable, regard being had to the nature of the claim, and the alleged value or amount of the property in dispute, or of the rent or damage, to prosecute the suit with effect and without delay, and to prove before the court by which such suit shall be tried that such title as aforesaid is in dispute between the parties, or that there was ground for believing that the said rent or damage was more than twenty pounds, then, and not otherwise, the action may be removed before any court competent to try the same, in such manner as hath been accustomed.

122. Possession of small tenements may be recovered by plaint in county court. If tenant, &c. neglect to appear, or refuse to give possession, judge may, on proof of service of summons, issue a warrant to enforce the same.—That when and so soon as the term and interest of the tenant of any house, land, or other corporeal hereditament, where the value of the premises or the rent payable in respect of such tenancy did not exceed the sum of fifty pounds by the year, and upon which no fine shall have been paid, shall have ended, or shall have been duly determined by a legal notice to quit, and such tenant, or, if such tenant do not actually occupy the premises, or occupy only a part thereof, any person by whom the same or any part thereof shall be then actually occupied, shall neglect or refuse to quit and deliver up possession of the premises, or of such part thereof respectively, it shall be lawful for the landlord or his agent to enter a plaint in the county court to be holden under this Act, and thereupon a summons shall issue to the person so neglecting or refusing; and if the tenant or occupier shall not thereupon appear at the time and place appointed, and shew cause to the contrary, and shall still neglect or refuse to deliver up possession of the premises, or of such part thereof of which he is then in possession, to the said landlord or his agent, it shall be lawful for such landlord or agent to give to the court proof of the holding, and of the end or other determination of the tenancy, with the time or manner thereof, and, where the title of the landlord has accrued, since the letting of the premises, the right by which he claims the possession; and upon proof of service of the summons, and of the neglect or refusal of the tenant or occupier, as the case may be, it shall be lawful for the judge to issue a warrant under the seal of the court to any bailiff of the court, requiring and authorizing him, within a period to be therein named, not less than seven or more than ten clear days from the date of such warrant, to give possession of the premises to such landlord or agent; and such warrant shall be a sufficient warrant to the said bailiff to enter upon the premises, with such assistants as he shall deem necessary, and to give possession accordingly; provided always, that entry upon any such warrant shall not be made on a Sunday, Good Friday, or Christmas day, or at any time except between the hours of nine in the morning and four in the afternoon: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to protect any person by whom any such warrant shall be sued out of the county court from any action which may be brought against him by any such tenant or occupier for or in respect of such entry and taking possession where such person had not, at the time of suing out the same as aforesaid, lawful right to the possession of the same premises.

123. The manner in which such summons shall be served.—That such summons as last aforesaid may be served either personally or by leaving the same with some person being in and apparently residing at the place of abode of the person or persons so holding over as aforesaid: provided that if the person or persons so holding over, or any or either of them, cannot be found, and the place of abode of such person or persons shall either not be known, or admission thereto cannot be obtained for serving such summons, the posting of the said summons on some conspicuous part of the premises so held over shall be deemed to be good service upon such person or persons respectively.

124. Judges, clerks, bailiffs, or other officers not liable to actions on account of proceedings taken.—That it shall not be lawful to bring any action or prosecution against the judge or against the clerk of the court by whom such warrant as aforesaid shall have been issued, or against any bailiff or other person by whom such warrant may be executed or summons affixed, for issuing such warrant, or executing the same respectively, or affixing such summons, by reason that the person by whom the same shall be sued out had not lawful right to the possession of the premises.

125. Where landlord has a lawful title, he shall not be deemed a trespasser by reason of irregularity.—That where the landlord at the time of applying for such warrant as aforesaid had lawful right to the possession of the premises, or of the part thereof so held over as aforesaid, neither the said landlord nor his agent, nor any other person acting in his behalf, shall be deemed to be a trespasser by reason merely of any irregularity or informality in the mode of proceeding for obtaining possession under the authority of this Act, but the party aggrieved may, if he think fit, bring an action on the case for such irregularity or informality, in which the damage alleged to be sustained thereby shall be specially laid, and may recover full satisfaction for such special damage, with costs of suit; provided that if the special damage so laid be not proved, the defendant shall be entitled to a verdict, and that if proved, but assessed by the jury at any sum not exceeding five shillings, the plaintiff shall recover no more costs than damages, unless the judge before whom the trial shall have been holden shall certify that in his opinion full costs ought to be allowed.

126. How execution of warrant of possession may be stayed.—That in every case in which the person by whom any such warrant shall be sued out of the county court had not at the time of suing out the same lawful right to the possession of the premises, the suing out of any such warrant as last aforesaid shall be deemed a trespass by him against the tenant or occupier of the premises, although no entry shall be made by virtue of the warrant; and in case any such tenant or occupier will become bound, with two sufficient sureties, to be approved by the clerk of the court, in such sum as to the judge shall seem reasonable, regard being had to the value of the premises, and to the probable cost of such action, to sue the person by whom such warrant was sued out with effect and without delay, and to pay all the costs of the proceeding in such action in case a verdict shall pass for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall discontinue or not prosecute his action or become nonsuit therein, execution upon the warrant shall be stayed until judgment shall have been given in such action of trespass; and if upon the trial of such action of trespass a verdict shall pass for the plaintiff, such verdict and judgment thereupon shall supersede the said warrant.

127. Proceedings on the bond for staying warrant of possession, &c.—That every bond given on the removal of any action out of the county court, or upon staying the execution of any such warrant of possession as aforesaid, or on moving for a new trial, or to set aside a verdict, judgment, or nonsuit, shall be made to the other party to the action at the costs of such other party, and shall be approved by the judge, and attested under the seal of the court; and if the bond so taken be forfeited, or if, upon the proceeding for securing which such bond was given, the judge before whom such proceeding shall be had shall not certify upon the record in court that the condition of the bond hath been fulfilled, the party to whom the bond shall have been so made may bring an action of debt, and recover thereon; provided always, that the court in which such action as last aforesaid shall be brought may by a rule of court give such relief to the parties liable upon such bond as may be agreeable to justice and reason, and such rule shall have the nature and effect of a defence to such bond.

128. Concurrent jurisdiction with superior courts.—That all actions and proceedings which before the passing of this Act might have been brought in any of her Majesty's superior courts of record where the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant, or where the cause of action did not arise wholly or in some material point within the jurisdiction of the court within which the defendant dwells or carries on his business at the time of the action brought, or where any officer of the county court shall be a party, except in respect of any claim to any goods and chattels taken in execution of the process of the court, or the proceeds or value thereof, may be brought and determined in any such superior court, at the election of the party suing or proceeding, as if this Act had not been passed.

129. As to actions brought for small debts in superior courts.—That if any action shall be commenced after the passing of this Act in any of her Majesty's superior courts of record, for any cause other than those lastly hereinbefore specified, for which a plaint might have been entered in any court holden under this Act, and a verdict shall be found for the plaintiff for a sum less than twenty pounds, if the said action is founded on contract, or less than five pounds if it be founded on tort, the said plaintiff shall have judgment to recover such sum only, and no costs; and if a verdict shall not be found for the plaintiff the defendant shall be entitled to his costs as between attorney and client, unless in either case the judge who shall try the cause shall certify on the back of the record that the action was fit to be brought in such superior court.

130. Penalties and costs to be recovered before as justice, and levied by distress.—That all penalties, fines, and forfeitures by this Act inflicted or authorized to be imposed (the manner of recovering and applying whereof is not hereby otherwise particularly directed) shall, upon proof before any justice of the peace having jurisdiction within the county or place where the offender shall reside or be, or the offence shall be committed, either by the confession of the party offending, or by the oath of any credible witness, be levied, with the costs attending the summons and conviction, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the party offending, by warrant under the hand of any such justice; and the overplus (if any), after such penalties, fines, and forfeitures, and the charges of such distress and sale, are deducted, shall be returned, upon demand, unto the owner of such goods and chattels.

131. In default of security, offender may be detained till return of warrant of distress.—That if any such penalties, fines, and forfeitures respectively shall not be paid forthwith upon conviction, it shall be lawful for such justice to order the offender so convicted to be detained in safe custody until return can be conveniently made to such warrant of distress, unless such offender shall give sufficient security to the satisfaction of such justice for his appearance before him on such day as shall be appointed for the return of such warrant of distress, such day not being more than eight days from the time of taking any such security, which security such justice shall be empowered to take by way of recognizance or otherwise as to him shall seem fit.

132. In default, or distress, offender may be committed.—That if upon return of such warrant it shall appear that no sufficient distress can be had thereupon, or in case it shall appear to the satisfaction of such justice, either by confession of the offender or otherwise, that he hath not within the jurisdiction of such justice sufficient goods and chattels whereon to levy all such penalties, forfeitures, costs, and charges, such justice may, at his discretion, without issuing any warrant of distress, commit the offender to the common gaol or house of correction for any time not exceeding three calendar months, unless such penalties, forfeitures, and fines, and all reasonable charges attending the recovery thereof, shall be sooner paid and satisfied.

133. Penalties not otherwise applied, to be paid into the general fund.—That the moneys arising from any such penalties, forfeitures, and fines as aforesaid, when paid and levied, shall (if not by this Act directed to be otherwise applied) be from time to time paid to the clerk of the court, and shall be applied in aid of the general fund thereof.

134. Justices may proceed by summons in the recovery of penalties.—That in all cases in which by this Act any penalty or forfeiture is made recoverable before a justice of the peace, it shall be lawful for such justice to summon before him the party complained against, and on such summons to hear and determine the matter of such complaint, and on proof of the offence to convict the offender, and to adjudge him to pay the penalty or forfeiture incurred, and to proceed to recover the same, although no information in writing shall have been exhibited before him; and all such proceedings by summons without information in writing shall be as valid and effectual to all intents and purposes as if an information in writing had been exhibited.

135. Form of conviction.—That in all cases where any conviction shall be had for any offence committed against this Act the form of conviction may be in the words or to the effect following (that is to say):

"Be it remembered, That on this day of _____ in the year of our Lord _____ A. B. is convicted before _____ of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the _____ [or before a judge appointed under an Act passed in the _____ year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled, here insert the title of this Act], of having [state the offence]; and I [or we] the said _____ do adjudge the said _____ to forfeit and pay for the same the sum of _____ or to be committed to _____ for the space of _____ . Given under _____ hand and seal the day and year aforesaid."

136. Proceedings not invalid for want of form.—That no order, verdict, or judgment, or other proceeding, made concerning any of the matters aforesaid, shall be quashed or vacated for want of form.

137. Distress not unlawful for want of form.—That where any distress shall be made for any sum of money to be levied by virtue of this Act, the distress itself shall not be deemed unlawful, nor the party making the same be deemed a trespasser, on account of any defect or want of form in the information, summons, conviction, warrant of distress, or other proceeding relating thereto, nor shall the party distraining be deemed a trespasser from the beginning on account of any irregularity which shall afterwards be committed by the party so distraining, but the person aggrieved by such irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action upon the case.

138. Limitation of actions for proceedings in execution of this Act.—And for the protection of persons acting in the execution of this Act, that all actions and prosecutions to be commenced against any person for anything done in pursuance of this Act shall be laid and tried in the county where the fact was committed, and shall be commenced within three calendar months after the fact committed, and not afterwards, or otherwise; and notice in writing of such action, and of the cause thereof, shall be given to the defendant one calendar month at least before the commencement of the action; and no plaintiff shall recover in any such action if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made before such action brought, or if after action brought a sufficient sum of money shall have been paid into court, with costs, by or on behalf of the defendant.

139. Provision for the protection of officers of the court.—That if any person shall bring any suit in any of her Majesty's superior courts of record in respect of any grievance committed by any clerk, bailiff, or officer of any court holden under this Act, under colour or pretence of the process of the said court, and the jury upon the trial of the action shall not find greater damages for the plaintiff than the sum of twenty pounds, no costs shall be awarded to the plaintiff in such action unless the judge shall certify in court upon the back of the record that the action was fit to be brought in such superior court.

140. Act not to affect rights of Universities of Oxford or Cambridge.—That nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to alter or affect the rights or privileges of the Chancellor, Masters, and Scholars of the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge respectively as by law possessed, or the jurisdiction of the courts of the Chancellors or Vice-Chancellors of the said Universities, as holden under the respective charters of the said Universities, or otherwise.

141. Nothing to affect the courts of the scardens of the Stannaries.—That nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to affect the courts of the lord warden or of the vice warden of the Stannaries of Cornwall; but this provision shall not be deemed to prevent the establishment of any court under this Act within the said Stannaries, or to limit or affect the jurisdiction of any court so established under this Act.

142. Interpretation of Act.—That in construing this Act all things directed or authorised to be done by or with respect to the Lord Chancellor shall and may be done by or with respect to the Lord Keeper or the First Commissioner for the custody of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; and all things directed or authorised to be done by or with respect to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall and may be done by and with respect to three or more of the said commissioners or the Lord High Treasurer; and the word "person" shall be understood to mean a body politic, corporate, or collegiate, as well as individual; and every word importing the singular number shall, where necessary to give full effect to the enactments herein contained, be understood to mean several persons or things as well as one person or thing; and every word importing the masculine gender shall, where necessary, be understood to mean a female as well as a male; and the words "county court" shall be understood to mean any court holden under this Act; and the term "landlord" shall be understood to mean the person entitled to the immediate reversion of the lands, or, if the property be held in joint tenancy, coparcenary, or tenancy in common, shall be understood to mean any one of the persons entitled to such reversion; and the word "clerk" shall be understood to mean "chief clerk," or "registrars," and the words "attorney-at-law" shall be understood to include a solicitor in any court of equity; and the word "agent" shall be understood to mean any person usually employed by the landlord in the letting of lands, or in the collection of the rents thereof, or specially authorised to act in any particular matter by writing under the hand of such landlord; and the word "bailiff" shall be understood to include high bailiff; unless in any of these cases there be something in the context inconsistent with such meaning.

143. Act may be amended, &c.—That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this Session of Parliament.

CAP. LXVI.

An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Removal of the Poor. (Aug. 26, 1846.)

1. No person to be removed from any parish in which he or she shall have resided for five years. Time during which persons are serving in the army or navy, &c. not to be computed as time of residence.—Whereas it is expedient that the laws relating to the removal of the poor should be amended: be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the passing of this Act no person shall be removed, nor shall any warrant be granted for the removal of any person, from any parish in which such person shall have resided for five years next before the application for the warrant: provided always, that the time during which such person shall be a prisoner in a prison, or shall be serving her Majesty as a soldier, marine, or sailor, or reside as an in-pensioner in Greenwich or Chelsea Hospitals, or shall be confined in a lunatic asylum, or house duly licensed or hospital registered for the reception of lunatics, or as a patient in a hospital, or during which any such person shall receive relief from any parish, or shall be wholly or in part maintained by any rate or subscription raised in a parish in which such person does not reside, not being a bond fide charitable gift, shall for all purposes be excluded in the computation of time hereinbefore mentioned, and that the removal of a pauper lunatic to a lunatic asylum, under the provisions of any act relating to the maintenance and care of pauper lunatics, shall not be deemed a removal within the meaning of this Act: provided always, that whenever any person shall have a wife or children having no other settlement than his or her own, such wife and children shall be removable, whenever he or she is removable, and shall not be removable when he or she is not removable.

2. No widow liable to be removed for twelve months after death of husband.—That no woman residing in any parish with her husband at the time of his death shall be removed, nor shall any warrant be granted for her removal, from such parish, for twelve calendar months next after his death, if she so long continue a widow.

3. No child under sixteen years of age liable to be removed.—That no child under the age of sixteen years, whether legitimate or illegitimate, residing in any parish with his or her father or mother, step-father or stepmother, or reputed father, shall be removed, nor shall any warrant be granted for the removal of such child, from such parish, in any case where such father, mother, stepfather, stepmother, or reputed father may not lawfully be removed from such parish.

4. Sick persons not liable to be removed except under certain circumstances.—That no warrant shall be granted for the removal of any person becoming chargeable in respect of relief made necessary by sickness or accident, unless the justices granting the warrant shall state in such warrant that they are satisfied that the sickness or accident will produce permanent disability.

5. Settlement not to be gained by not being removed.—That no person hereby exempted from liability to be removed shall by reason of such exemption acquire any settlement in any parish.

6. Penalty on persons unlawfully procuring removals of poor persons.—That if any officer of any parish or union do, contrary to law, with intent to cause any poor person to become chargeable to any parish to which such person was not then chargeable, convey any poor person out of the parish for which such officer acts, or cause or procure any poor person to be so conveyed, or give directly or indirectly any money, relief, or assistance, or afford or procure to be afforded any facility for such conveyance, or make any offer or promise or use any threat to induce any poor person to depart from such parish, and if, in consequence of such conveyance or departure, any poor person become chargeable to any parish to which he was not then chargeable, such officer, on conviction thereof before any two justices, shall forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not exceeding five pounds nor less than forty shillings.

7. Delivery of paupers under orders of removal.—That the delivery of any pauper under any warrant of removal directed to the overseers of any parish at the workhouse of such parish, or of any union to which such parish belongs to any officer of such workhouse, shall be deemed the delivery of such pauper to the overseers of such parish.

8. 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, and this Act to be construed as one.—That an Act passed in the fifth year of the reign of King William the Fourth, for the amendment and better administration of the laws relating to the poor in England and Wales, and all Acts to amend and extend the same, and the present Act, except so far as the provisions of any former Act are altered, amended, or repealed by any subsequent Act, shall be construed as one Act; and all penalties and forfeitures imposed under this Act shall be recoverable as penalties and forfeitures under the said Act for the amendment of the laws relating to the poor.

9. Act limited to England.—That this Act shall extend only to England.

10. Act may be amended, &c.—That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

CAP. LXVII.

An Act to remove Doubts concerning Citations, and Services, and Execution of Diligence, in Scotland. (Aug. 26, 1846.)

CAP. LXVIII.

An Act for better enabling the Burial Service to be performed in One Chapel when contiguous Burial Grounds shall have been provided for two or more Parishes or Places. (Aug. 26, 1846.)

An Act to continue until the Thirty-first day of July, 1847, and to the end of the then next Session of Parliament, an Act of the 5th and 6th years of her present Majesty, for amending the Law relative to private Lunatic Asylums in Ireland. (August 26, 1846.)

CAP. LXXX.

An Act to authorise the advance of Money out of the Consolidated Fund, for carrying on Public Works and Fisheries, and employment of the Poor. (August 26, 1846.)

CAP. LXXXI.

An Act for regulating the Deduction at the Bank of England of Income-Tax Duty in respect of certain Offices. (August 26, 1846.)

Income Tax duty to be deducted at Bank of England on payment of salaries, &c. charged upon the Suitsors' Funds accounts of Court of Chancery.—Whereas certain salaries, compensations, and pensions are by several statutes charged upon and payable without draft out of cash standing in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England in the name of the Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery to the respective accounts, intituled "Account of Interest arising from Moneys placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the suitors of the High Court of Chancery," and "Account of Interest arising from Securities purchased with surplus interest arising from Securities carried to an Account of Moneys placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitsors of the High Court of Chancery." And whereas the Income Tax duty in respect of the dividends composing the cash standing to such several accounts is deducted therefrom at the Bank of England previously to carrying such dividends to the credit of the said Accountant-General, and it is therefore expedient that in paying such salaries, compensations, and pensions, an amount equivalent to such duty be deducted therefrom at the Bank of England: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the passing of this Act, the proportionate amount of Income Tax duty which shall have been deducted from the dividends composing the cash standing to the credit of the said Accountant-General to the aforesaid respective accounts in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England be deducted by the said Governor and Company, from all salaries, compensations, and pensions charged upon and payable without draft out of the said cash at the time of each payment thereof hereafter to accrue due, any thing in any statute contained to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

2. Act may be amended, &c.—That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this Session of Parliament.

CAP. LXXXII.

An Act to amend an Act of the present Session for authorising a loan from the Consolidated Fund to the New Zealand Company. (August 26, 1846.)

CAP. LXXXIII.

An Act to empower the Commissioners for the issue of Loans for Public Works and Fisheries to make Loans in Money to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods, in lieu of Loans heretofore authorised to be made in Exchequer Bills. (August 26, 1846.)

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

NOTHING calling for especial remark has occurred during the week.

The Gazette contains notices that the following places have been duly registered for the solemnization of marriages therein:—Wesleyan Chapel, Watlington, Oxfordshire; Ebenezer or Independent Chapel, Sutton-in-Ashfield, Nottinghamshire; and the Independent Chapel, Meeting-house-lane, Bishop's Stortford, Hertfordshire, in the district of the Bishop's Stortford union.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

BELOW we give a first instalment of our Review of Cases decided in the Common Law Courts during Easter and Trinity Terms and Vacations—a summary which has given universal satisfaction, and been found of extreme utility to the Profession. The remainder will follow next week.

We give below the Report of the Copyhold Commission. It will be seen that the enfranchisement of manors held by ecclesiastics is increasing, while, in the case of those held by laymen, the progress has not been so great. The Committee suggest that it would be greatly for the public good were the legislature to sanction a compulsory extinction of some of the copyhold incidents, and especially of heriots. We doubt whether Parliament will adopt this measure.

The following summary of the points recently decided in railway law we extract from The Commercial Magazine, and we do this in order to show what are the popular impressions on these questions—which this summary very well conveys—and not because the opinions here laid down are always sound, and supported by authority.

The parliamentary session having drawn to a close, and the fate of many of the railway projects being now ascertained, parties connected with them are naturally anxious to understand their legal position; and the numerous cases which have been investigated and decided in our law courts during the last few months render the present a favourable opportunity to present our readers with the following brief summary of the best established principles affecting the liabilities of the different parties who are concerned in railway proceedings:—

1. Rights and Liabilities of Allottees in abandoned Schemes.—It is now clearly established that an allottee who has paid his deposit upon shares in a scheme which is abandoned without applying to Parliament, can recover back his deposit from the promoters of the scheme, without any deduction for preliminary expenses. Thus, where the promoters have failed to alid the requisite number of shares, or having allotted them, have abandoned the scheme without applying to Parliament, or have induced the public to apply for allotments by means of fraudulent representations, in all these cases the entire deposit may be recovered back, and the expenses must fall upon the managers. In most of them the allottee may bring an action at law, or file a bill in Chancery, against any one of the promoters who has acted, or held himself out to the world as acting, in the formation and carrying out of the scheme. The allottee of shares in such an abandoned scheme cannot be sued for the payment of the deposit, if he have not paid it, nor can he be compelled to contribute towards the payment of the debts and expenses which the promoters have incurred.

2. Rights and Liabilities of Allottees in Schemes which are not abandoned by the Promoters.—The position of an allottee who applies for shares in a scheme which the projectors do not abandon, but carry out so far as by prospectus they may have contracted to do, or so far as the conduct of the allottees will enable them to do, is somewhat different in the position of those who have formed the subject of our first division. These allottees, if they make default, may probably be liable to an action to recover damages from them for the breach of their contract with the promoters, or to a suit in Chancery for the double purpose of recovering the deposit, and enforcing the execution by them of the parliamentary contract and subscribers' agreement.

3. Rights and Liabilities of Allottees in Schemes which are rejected by Parliament.—Before a scheme is brought into Parliament, the usual deeds are invariably signed by the allottees, and these deeds confer upon the promoters ample powers to carry on or abandon the scheme, and to pay all necessary expenses attending the same. Therefore, in cases where the promoters have done all that is necessary to place the merits of the scheme before Parliament, but Parliament rejects it, the allottees must submit to the terms of the deed they have signed; and probably the only power they possess is that of checking the promoters in any improper payment or dealing with the funds of the company. But where the allottee has signed the usual deeds, but the proper number of shares are not subscribed, or any fraud was practised upon him by the promoters, or the scheme is abandoned in an unauthorised manner, he will have the same remedies against the promoters as if no deed had been signed by him.

4. Rights and Liabilities of Scripholders.—A mere purchaser of scrip, or of letters of allotment, or of bankers' receipts, has no rights against, and incurs no liabilities to the promoters. If the scheme in which he has acquired an interest be abandoned, he must look to the party from whom he bought, and it is very doubtful whether he has any implied rights against him. The case of Thomson v. Sanders, which appears to establish such rights, is not relied upon by lawyers, although it has not yet been expressly overruled. It is, however, possible that the holder of these documents may have a right to use the name of the original allottee for the purpose of proceeding against the promoters, but there are many difficulties in the way of such a step, and the point has yet to be decided.

5. Rights of Creditors to sue the Promoters, Engineer, Solicitor, or other Officer of a Scheme.—The creditors, like the allottees, may sue any one of the promoters who has acted, or held himself out to the world as acting, in the formation and carrying out of the scheme. These parties constitute the company, or project, or scheme; and each and all of them is or are liable for all debts properly incurred for the advancement of the common design. The engineer, solicitor, secretary, or other officer of the company, may, by their conduct, render themselves personally liable; but the mere circumstance of their holding office in the company, that is to say, being the servants of the company, cannot render them responsible for the debts of the company, their employers. On the other hand, they have no power to bind the company by virtue of their offices alone; such a power must be expressly conferred upon them. Therefore, the engineer's assistants or the solicitor's clerks, or any other sub-contractors, cannot sue the promoters or company. If this were suffered, the confusion it would cause would be indescribable. It would be just as absurd as to allow all a tailor's workmen to sue a customer who had ordered a coat from their master for wages due to them from him for making the coat.

6. Rights of Directors or Promoters.—The directors or promoters may recover contribution from each other for all expenses connected with the scheme which they are called on to pay. At law they may recover the proportionate part of each, with reference to the whole number of promoters, but without any regard to the solvency of the others; thus, if there are ten, and one pays a debt, only a tenth can be recovered from each of the others; but in equity an equal contribution can be enforced from all the solvent parties, without any regard to the original number of promoters. The promoters are the parties with whom all the contracts connected with the scheme are entered into. They must all of them sue for any breach of contract on the part of allottees, engineers, or others. As the promoters are generally very numerous, and have in most cases undergone changes, it will be difficult to maintain proceedings on such contracts; because the same parties must sue with whom the contract was made, and the mere fact that one director is elected to succeed another in a scheme which has no charter or Act of Parliament, will not give the party so appointed any power to sue upon his predecessors' contracts. Hence appears the indiscretion of entering into contracts by a general name of office, as "Committee," or "Directors," &c. It will be important for the future to have contracts with companies of this kind made with a certain small number of persons as trustees. After the Act is obtained, the directors have great and summary powers given to them to recover deposits from shareholders, and to act generally in the affairs of the company, which will be found in the general and special Acts relating to the subject. They must, however, be careful not to exceed these powers. The recent Act for facilitating the dissolution of certain railway companies (9 & 10 Vict. c. 28) will also require attention, but we must reserve our notice of its provisions for a future paper.

ANECDOTES OF LAWYERS.

The following, from an article in the Edinburgh Review, on the Life of Lord Eldon, has been for a long time in type, but we have been unable to find room for it:—

INFLUENCE OF ACCIDENT ON GREAT MEN.

"It is a curious coincidence, that the two greatest

Chancery lawyers of their day should both have been forced into the profession by incidental circumstances. Romilly says, that what principally influenced his decision was, the being thus enabled to leave his small fortune in his father's hands, instead of buying a sworn clerk's seat with it. 'At a later period of my life—after a success at the Bar which my wildest and most sanguine dreams had never painted to me—when I was gaining an income of 8,000l. or 9,000l. a year—I have often reflected how all that prosperity had arisen out of the pecuniary difficulties and confined circumstances of my father.'

"Wedderburn (Lord Loughborough) began as an advocate at the Scotch Bar. In the course of an altercation with the Lord President, he was provoked to tell his lordship that he had said as a judge what he could not justify as a gentleman. Being ordered to make an apology, he refused, and left the Scotch for the English Bar. What every one thought his ruin, turned out the best thing that could happen to him:—

" 'There's a divinity that shapes our ends, Rough hew them how we may.'

"Lord Tenterden's early destination was changed by a disappointment. When he and Mr. Justice Richards were going the Home Circuit, they visited the cathedral at Canterbury together. Richards commended the voice of a singing man in the choir. 'Ah,' said Lord Tenterden, 'that is the only man I ever envied! When at school in this town, we were candidates for a chorister's place, and he obtained it.'

"It is now well known that the Duke of Wellington, when a subaltern, was anxious to retire from the army, and actually applied to Lord Camden (then Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland) for a commissionership of customs! It is not always true, then, that men destined to play conspicuous parts in the world, have a consciousness of their coming greatness, or patience to bide their time. Their hopes grow, as their capacity expands with circumstances; honours on honours arise like alps on alps, in ascending one they catch a glimpse of another, till the last and highest, which was veiled in mist when they started, stands out in bold relief against the sky."

RISE OF EMINENT LAWYERS.

"In about eight years from his call to the Bar, Lord Eldon was in the high road to its highest honours.

"We have minutely detailed his progress at the most critical periods, with a view to a few observations we have to offer regarding the difficulties and chances of the profession; but before venturing on them it may be as well to strengthen our conclusions by a parallel—to see how many of his great predecessors and contemporaries adopted the same method of study, or got on in the same manner as himself.

"Somers flourished a little before the period when legal honours ceased to depend principally upon intrigue and faction. He had made himself useful to his party by some well-written pamphlets, and the young Earl (afterwards Duke) of Shrewsbury was his fast friend; still, when he was proposed as junior counsel for the seven bishops, they objected to him as too young (he was then thirty-seven) and too little known. Sergeant Pollexfen insisted on their retaining him, and his speech for the defence laid the foundation of his fame.

"Lord Hardwicke, the son of an attorney, and bred up in an attorney's office, was fortunate enough to obtain the patronage of Lord Macclesfield, and that noble and learned but most unscrupulous personage, forced him at once into the front rank of the profession. He was only twenty-nine years of age, and five years' standing at the Bar, when he was called up from his first circuit to be made Solicitor-General. Having had little or no leading business, it was confidently expected that he would break down; but his talents and knowledge proved fully equal to the extraordinary call made upon them.

"Thurlow dashed into practice with the same suddenness, and was indebted for his first lift to patronage, though he certainly did not obtain it by the quality for which Lord Hardwicke was famous—bowling, smiling urbanity. His favourite haunt was Nando's Coffee-house, near the Temple, where a large attendance of professional loungers was attracted by the fame of the punch and the charms of the landlady, which the small wits said were duly admired by and at the Bar. One evening the Douglas case was the topic of discussion, and some gentlemen engaged in it were regretting the want of a competent person to digest a mass of documentary evidence. Thurlow, being present, one of them, half in earnest, suggested him, and it was agreed to give him the job. A brief was delivered with the papers; but the cause did not come on for more than eight years afterwards, and it was a purely collateral incident to which he was indebted for his rise. This employment brought him acquainted with the famous Duchess of Queensberry, the friend of Pope, Gay, and Swift, and an excellent judge of talent. She saw at once the value of a man like Thurlow, and recommended Lord Bute to secure him by a silk gown. He was made king's counsel in 1761, rather less than seven years after his call to the Bar. He ran greater risks than Lord Hardwicke, because his business had been hitherto next to nothing; but he had far more of the vis visida, and the unhesitating self-confidence which enables an untired man to beat down obstacles.

"Dunning got nothing for some years after his call to the Bar, which was about 1756. 'He travelled the Western Circuit (says the historian of Devonshire, Mr. Polwhele), but had not a single brief; and had Lavater been at Exeter in the year 1759, he must have sent Counsellor Dunning to the hospital of idiots. Not a feature marked him for the son of wisdom.' He was, notwithstanding, recommended by Mr. Hussey, a king's counsel, to the chairman of the East India Company, who was looking out for some one to draw up an answer to a memorial delivered by the Dutch government. The manner in which Dunning performed this piece of service gained him some useful connections, and an opportune fit of the gout, which disabled one of the leaders of the western circuit, did still more for him. The leader in question handed over his briefs to Dunning, who made the most of the opportunity. His crowning triumph was his argument against the legality of general warrants, delivered in 1765. He was indebted for his brief, in this famous case, to Wilkes, whose acquaintance he had formed at Nando's, the Grecian, and other coffee houses about the temple, which, seventy years ago, were still the resort of men of wit and pleasure.

"Kenyon rose slowly and fairly through the general impression entertained at the Bar of the extent of his legal knowledge; but this impression was nearly twelve years in reaching the brief-bestowing branch of the profession. It has been said that he occasionally supplied Thurlow with law, and was brought forward by him out of gratitude.

"Lord Camden (a judge's son, Etonian and Cantab) went the western circuit for ten or twelve years without success, and at length resolved on trying one circuit more and then retiring upon his fellowship. His friend Henley (Lord Northampton) hearing of this determination, managed to get him retained as his own junior in a cause of some importance, and then absented himself on the plea of illness. Lord Camden won the cause and prospered.

"Lord Mansfield came to the Bar with a high reputation, but it was rather for literary taste, accomplishments, and eloquence, than law. He 'drank champagne with the wits,' as we learn from Prior; and Mr. Halliday relates, that one morning Mr. Murray was surprised by a gentleman of Lincoln's-inn, who took the liberty of entering his room without the ceremonious introduction of a servant, in the singular act of practising the graces of a speech at a glass, while Pope sat by in the character of a friendly spectator. It is from a couplet of Pope's we learn how he first became known in the profession:—

" 'Graced as thou art with all the power of words,
So known, so honoured, in the House of Lords,'

"A piece of bathos thus parodied by Cibber:—

" 'Persuasion tips his tongue when'er he talks,
And he has chambers in the King's Bench walks.'

"He is reported to have said that he never knew the difference between no professional income and 3,000l. a year; and the case of Cibber and Sloper is specified as his starting point. The tradition goes, that Sergeant Eyre being seized with a fit (the god who cuts the knot always comes in this questionable shape), the conduct of the defence devolved on Murray, who, after a short adjournment, granted by the favour of Chief Justice Lee, made so excellent a speech that clients rushed to him in crowds. The case was admirably adapted to his abilities, being an action of crim. con. brought by a conniving husband against a weak young man of fortune. But the story is apocryphal at best. There is no mention of the serjeant's illness in the printed accounts of the trial. On the contrary, a long speech by him is duly reported; and it appears that Murray was fourth counsel in the cause. He certainly made a speech, and probably spoke well; but we disbelieve the tradition that makes him the hero of the day. Cibber v. Sloper was tried in December 1738; Pope's lines were published in 1737. How could a man 'so known, so honoured' for his eloquence, be raised from obscurity by a speech? It was a stepping-stone, not the key-stone.

"When Lord Loughborough first came to London, he was a constant attendant at the green-room, and associated with Maclin, Foote, and Sheridan (the father of Richard Brinsley), who assisted him to soften down his Scotch accent. But the main chance was not neglected. It is stated in Boswell's Johnson, that he solicited Strachan, the printer, a countryman, to get him employed in city causes, and his brother-in-law, Sir Harry Erskine, procured him the patronage of Lord Bute. When a man of decided talent and good connection does not stand on trifles, there is no necessity for speculating on the precise causes of his success."

COPYHOLDS.

Copy of the Fifth Report of the Copyhold Commissioners to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department; pursuant to the Act 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, s. 3.

PRESENTED TO BOTH HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT BY COMMAND OF HER MAJESTY.

Copyhold Commission, 3rd August, 1861.

SIR,—We have the honour of presenting to you our fifth report. The number of enfranchisements have again considerably increased. For the details of the business done we beg to refer you to the list which is appended.

Some of the transactions included in it are large and important.

Enfranchisements in manors held by ecclesiastics are steadily increasing, and in those manors there is a fair prospect of copyhold tenures being ultimately distinguished voluntarily.

In manors held by laymen the progress is slower. Termini of railroads, and the increasing population of the towns, lead to building speculations. Both find that they can rarely sell with a copyhold title, and the number of enfranchisements from those causes will almost necessarily increase steadily.

We believe, however, that it would be a public benefit if the legislature were to sanction a compulsory extinction of some of the copyhold incidents, especially of heriots.

We have the honour to be,

Sir, your faithful and obedient servants,

WM. BLAMIRE.
T. WESTWORTH BULLER.
RD. JONES.

To the Right Hon. Sir G. Grey, Bart. M.P.
&c. &c. &c.

REVIEW OF CASES DECIDED IN ALL THE COURTS OF COMMON LAW.

During Easter Term and Vacation, and Trinity Term and Vacation.

The number of written judgments given at the end of the sittings after Term, some of which are still unreported, and other unavoidable circumstances, have prevented our usual summary from appearing so early as usual, but still the greater portion of it will, we hope, be contained in the present volume, and the whole will be more complete in consequence of the delay. We have followed in most respects our usual arrangement, and we hope that few cases of any practical importance will be found to have been omitted.

ABATEMENT.

Another action pending.—The railway mania, and the consequent litigation, has given rise to many curious and novel points, but none, perhaps, which excited more interest in Westminster Hall than the question, in Henry v. Goldney, 7 Law T. 211, whether the pendency of another action against a co-contractor, e.g. another member of the provisional committee, for the identical claim, was not a good plea in abatement. The decision in King v. Hoare, 13 M. & W. 494, that judgment against a co-contractor might be pleaded in bar to an action against another, seemed to favour strongly the argument in support of this plea in abatement. There were also some old cases (see especially that mentioned in Doctr. Pl. 10, which was not cited upon the argument), which tended to support the dictum of Lord Ellenborough, that such a plea would be good in an action of tori (Boyce v. Douglas, 1 Campb. 60), and the injustice of bringing a number of actions in respect of the same cause inclined many, who considered the subject, to think that the plea was good. This last ground seemed the more strong, as, after plea pleaded in one action, the judgment in another could only be pleaded quod darrein continuance, in which case the defendant would have to pay his own costs up to that time. The Court of Exchequer, however, overruled the plea. As it was impossible for those who heard the argument not to perceive that the learned barons had previously made up their minds, and as the most learned of their body, Mr. Baron Parke, was absent, we think it right to mention that a similar plea, upon which a demurrer was pending in the Common Pleas, was given up without argument. As our readers are aware, an application to the equitable jurisdiction of the Court, to stay the proceedings in all actions but one, has been successful at chambers, see supra, 415; and we trust that this proper exercise of their equitable power will be sanctioned by the Court.

Affidavit of verification.—The strictness with which all pleas in abatement, and the affidavits verifying them, are scrutinised by the Courts, is illustrated by Newton v. Stewart, 7 Law T. 235, where an affidavit verifying a plea in abatement of the nonjoinder of twenty-four other defendants, was set aside as untrue, because it untruly stated the number of the house in Gower-street, where one of the defendants lived. Wightman, J. said, "Perhaps Gower-street alone would have sufficed, but the number being given, the plaintiff was not bound to inquire any where else than at that number."

Coverture.—Bendis v. Wakeman, 12 M. & W. 97, decided that the coverture of the plaintiff is in plea in bar to an action of covenant on a deed between the defendant and the plaintiff, but only in abatement; and so also to an action on a promissory note given to the wife during marriage, the same defence is matter only of abatement. (Guyard v. Sutton, 7 Law T. 185).

AFFIDAVITS.

Jurat.—Although the Court of Exchequer, in Empey v. King, 13 M. & W. 519, held that an affidavit sworn at chambers, and signed by a judge, was good, notwithstanding the jurat did not state that it was sworn before him, yet this was on account of the invariable practice as to such affidavits, and accordingly the Court of Queen's Bench, in Reg. v. Norbury, 7 Law T. 139; 15 L. J. 262, Q. B., adhered to their decision in Reg. v. Bloxham, 6 Q. B. 528, that an affidavit taken by a commissioner, in the jurat of which the words "before me" did not appear, was a nullity, and quashed a writ of certiorari that had been obtained upon such affidavit, although two years had elapsed.

Lord Denman, C. J. also further intimated that Pattenon, J. doubted whether he had done right in Ex parte Smith, 2 D. P. C. 607. There the names of the deponents had been omitted from the jurat by a mistake of the judge's clerk, and Pattenon, J. said, "as that appears to be only an omission of my clerk, let a new jurat be written, and I will sign it." That case therefore must be considered if not as overruled, as one of very doubtful authority.

The case of Reg. v. Bloxham was again referred to in Reg. v. Ratcliffe Caley, 7 Law T. 182, and Lord Denman, C. J. said the decision was perfectly correct.

Sufficiency of description.—An affidavit of the defendant in support of a rule to compel the plaintiff to give security for costs is sufficient if it can be collected from the context that the deponent is the defendant in the cause, although he is not so described in terms. (Loutreuil v. Phillippe, 1 B. C. R. 87.(a)) We mention this case; at the same time the usual averment as to the deponent being the plaintiff or defendant in the cause should not be omitted. Here it was stated that the deponent had been served with a writ at the suit of the plaintiff out of the same Court.

(a) These are a new series of reports of cases in the Bail Court only, by T. W. Saunders and Edward Lawes, esqrs.

Prior affidavits.—Affidavits sworn in a previous stage of the cause may be used upon a subsequent application in the same cause (Hilman v. Chitty, 7 Law T. 138); but if the proceeding for which it was intended to be used did not take place, it cannot afterwards be used in support of a distinct matter. (Compton v. Tamlyn, 7 Law T. 235.)

ANIMALS.

Liability of owner of mischievous animals.—The two cases of May v. Burdett, 7 Law T. 254, in the Queen's Bench, and Jackson v. Smithson, in the Exchequer, define the law very clearly as to the liability of the owners of mischievous animals. It was objected in arrest of judgment, in each case, that there was no averment that the animals, in the former a monkey, in the latter a ram, had been negligently kept by the defendant. The doctrine laid down, after time taken to consider by the Queen's Bench, and acquiesced in in the subsequent case, is, "That whoever keeps an animal accustomed to attack and bite mankind, with a knowledge that it is so accustomed, is prima facie liable in an action on the case at the suit of any person attacked and injured by the animal." The gist of the action is the keeping of the animal after a knowledge of its mischievous propensities, or, as it was said in another part of the judgment, that a person keeping a mischievous animal, with knowledge of its propensities, is bound to keep it secure at his peril, and that if it does mischief the negligence must be presumed, without an express averment of it. The negligence is in keeping the animal after knowledge. It would seem also, from other parts of the judgment, that there would be the same presumption of negligence, even if the injury had been inflicted by the animal after it had escaped, for that the owner is bound to keep it secure "at all events." No doubt circumstances might arise which would form an answer to such a presumption, but the rule as above laid down is explicit as law, and satisfactory in principle.

Impounding under 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 59.—The construction of the fourth section of this Act was considered in Layton v. Hurry, 7 Law T. 83; 15 L. J. 244, Q. B. as to the power of sale given thereby, for the purpose of reimbursing the party who impounds animals, damage feasant, the expenses which, under that Act, he is compelled to incur to prevent them from starving, which, according to the perfection of wisdom—"the common law"—might have been the case. The statute only authorises as many to be sold as are necessary for such indemnity, and not all that are impounded. The order for repayment by a justice, and the power of sale contemplate the same object, viz. indemnity.

ARBITRATION AND AWARD.

Finding on all the issues.—The rule established by Kilburn v. Kilburn, 13 M. & W. 671, is, that where a cause is referred, "the costs of the cause to abide the event of the award," all the issues must be found specifically by the arbitrator, has been further discussed in Adam v. Rowe, 7 Law T. 93, with reference to the plea non-assumpsit, which as other forms of the general issue pleaded to a declaration containing several counts, is a plea to each count. The award was sought to be set aside upon this ground. The pleas were non-assumpsit, except as to part, tender of that part, and set-off and payment, except as to that part. The finding was for the plaintiff on the 1st, 3rd, and last issues, but reducing the verdict, and for the defendant on the second. The cases relied upon were satisfactorily distinguished, because the general issue had not been specifically found either way; and as Mr. Justice Coleridge said, in discharging the rule, that the objection being founded upon the supposed inability of the Master to tax the costs, it was clear, that, as in this case, the arbitrator had intended to find for the plaintiff upon each count, it was immaterial that the amount upon each was not found, as the Master could tax the costs, whether the sum due upon each count was large or small. We would add, that in fact he did find upon all the issues raised upon non-assumpsit. (See Review of Cases, 4 Law T. 458.) Any objection of this kind might be provided against by a clause in the submission deed, that it shall be sufficient for the arbitrator to award in favour of the plaintiff or defendant generally, unless either party shall request him to find on some particular issue or issues.

Moving to set aside.—The rules laid down in the books of practice, in accordance with the elaborate judgment of Coleridge, J. in Allenby v. Proudlock, 4 D. P. C. 54, is, that where a verdict is taken at nisi prius, and the cause only referred, the motion to set aside the award in ordinary cases, should be made as in motions in arrest of judgment, or for a new trial. This has been confirmed in the Bail Court, by Wightman, J. who refused a rule nisi, moved for more than four days after the publication of the award in Term (Riccard v. Kingdon, 7 Law T. 142); and also by the full court, consisting of Lord Denman, and Patteson, J. in Parson v. North of England Railway Company, 7 Law T. 137. There the arbitrator awarded that the verdict should stand, unless "the Court should order otherwise;" then stated various questions for the opinion of the Court, and awarded that, if the Court should be of a certain opinion, the verdict should be for the defendant on certain issues. This was held to be, to all intents, an award by the arbitrator standing simply in the place of the jury, and a motion to enter the verdict for the defendants upon the facts stated was refused, because made more than four days from the publication. Sometimes, however, the successful party may enter final judgment, according to the award, without waiting the four days. Thus in Cromer v. Chart, 15 L. J. 263, Ex.; 7 Law T. 88; a verdict was taken at nisi prius by consent, subject to the certificate of an arbitrator, and the certificate was given in vacation after more than four days from the return day of the distringas juratores. The certificate was held to have relation back to the date of the verdict, and the successful party to be entitled to sign judgment immediately, without waiting until after the first ten days of the next term. The same principle would seem to apply, whether the certificate was given in Term or vacation. An application should therefore be made in all such cases to the Court, or to a judge at chambers, without delay, to compel the postponement of the entering of the judgment, so that the validity of the award may be disputed.

Arbitrator's notes.—An arbitrator cannot be compelled to produce his notes to the Court, nor will the Court allow them to be used, or a copy of them verified by affidavit, for such a course "would break in upon the rule very properly observed by gentlemen of the Bar of refusing to make an affidavit with respect to what takes place upon arbitrations." (Doe dem. Huxby v. Preston, 1 B.C.R. 77; 7 Law T. 117.)

Costs of taking up award.—Lien of attorney.—Where an award ordered that the costs of the reference should be paid by the parties in a certain proportion, viz. three-fourths by the defendant, and one-fourth by the plaintiff, the plaintiff's attorney, to take up the award, paid the whole amount of costs; and the question in Dees v. The Great North of England Railway (7 Law T. 406), was, whether this sum was to be treated as money awarded, and therefore one for which the attorney had a lien on the whole costs of the reference, or only as money paid. The Court held that it was money awarded, and a set-off, which was claimed, was therefore refused by the Court, except upon the terms that the attorney's lien was satisfied.

Reference of cause to Master.—If a cause is referred at Nisi Prius to a Master who is to decide all matters in difference, and direct by whom, to whom, and how the costs are to be paid, he need not find as to the costs of the reference, his decision being rather a certificate than an award. (Lewis v. Curlewis, 7 Law T. 67.)

ATTORNEY AND SOLICITOR.

The more important decisions as to the rights and liabilities of professional men, are those of Reg. v. Buchanan, and Walbancke v. Masterman, the former of which has already been noticed at length (supra, 87), and we need only therefore repeat, that it is now clear that an indictment will lie against a person practising as an attorney without being duly qualified under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73. The other case is noticed below.

Bill of costs.—Bowen v. Hodges, 7 Law T. 91, is a decision, if a decision were needed, to shew that the non-delivery of a signed bill is a matter of defence only when pleaded; and Englemart v. Moore, 7 Law T. 211, confirms our view of the application of the decision of Lewis v. Primrose, 13 L.J. 269, Q.B. (see 6 Law T. 440) to an attorney's bill under the present Act; and the consequent necessity that the bill should clearly shew, either in the heading, or some other part of it, in what court the business was done. An attempt was made in Scadding v. Eyles, 7 Law T. 227, to establish that stating an account with an attorney, in respect of his bill, would bar the client from the power to tax such bill, by giving an independent right of action, upon the account so stated. The Court at once gave judgment against such an answer to the plea of no signed bill, and apparently on the ground that it would defeat the statute. At first sight it seems to clash with the acknowledged sufficiency of an account stated as a ground of action; but we apprehend the decision was correct, in accordance with the rule of public policy, which invalidates an agreement between an attorney and his client that the bill shall not be taxed. It may be mentioned here that the right of an outlaw to obtain taxation of a bill has been again decreed in Re Ford, 7 Law T. 142, as it had been before in Re Mander, 4 Law T. 355. (See 5 Law T. 540.)

Lien for costs.—Pauper plaintiff.—The general rule, that the defendant may not collude with the plaintiff to settle an action in fraud of the plaintiff's right to costs, is well known; and therefore Wright v. Burrowes, 7 Law T. 259, which was a plain case of collusion, need hardly have been mentioned here, but for the observations of Tindal, C. J. as to cases where the plaintiff sues in forma pauperis. He said it must be a very strong case to justify a compromise with the plaintiff alone, for it is only from the result of the suit that the attorney is able to look for any remuneration. In such a case, therefore, we may be sure that the Court would require very little positive evidence of the intention of the parties. The case cited in the argument from 1 B. & Ad. 660, was, it is to be observed, an action for unliquidated damages, and the application to set aside a plea of puis darrein continuance was refused for that reason. In the principal case the plea was set aside, although pleaded on the 22nd of April, and the motion not made until the 8th of June.

Negligence.—Money paid out of pocket.—On the effect of negligence in conducting a suit, the cross motions, in Lewis v. Samuel, 7 Law T. 15; 15 L.J. 218, Q.B. are instructive. The attorney had agreed to conduct a prosecution for costs out of pocket only. Pending the proceedings the client advanced money for the expenses, and it was, up to a certain point, properly expended. The prosecution failed because the indictment stated that the affidavit, upon which the perjury was assigned, was sworn before George Rich. Pye, instead of George Richard Pye. The attorney then sued the client for the balance of expenses. The jury found that the prosecution failed through his gross negligence, and under the direction of the judge deducted from his claim all money paid subsequent to the neglect. Upon motion the Court held that this was right, for it could not be money paid to the use of the client, when the prior fatal mistake had rendered all future payments useless. The defendant, who at the trial had sought to set off, as money had and received, the sums paid to the attorney prior to the act of negligence, then took the opinion of the Court upon this point, but they held that it could not be set off, as money had and received to the defendant's use, for it had been advanced for a particular purpose, and laid out in pursuance of it, by the plaintiff.

Liability upon undertaking.—We so recently noticed the several principles by which the Court is governed in enforcing their officers to do what is morally right (supra, 6 Law T. 440), that we will only mention the further illustration given by the case of In re Swann, 1 B.C.R. 99, where an attorney was ordered to pay money pursuant to his undertaking and the costs of the application, though three years had elapsed since it became due, and is stated in his affidavit that by reason of the delay in the application he should probably lose the whole of the money.

Liability for wrongful execution.—The cases run very fine as to the amount of interference which will render an attorney liable where a wrongful execution is put in force on behalf of his client, and Roules v. Senior is, therefore, of importance. (15 L. J. 231, Q.B.; 7 Law T. 60). The London agent of the attorney indorsed a writ of fi. fa. in a case of Gandell v. Dore: "The defendant resides at Wolverton, and is an innkeeper, lvy 1771, &c." D. the defendant, resided at Wolverton, and conducted the business of his mother-in-law, who kept an inn there, and the goods on the premises were her property. The sheriff seized these goods under the fi. fa. The Court held that there was evidence to go to the jury of the defendant having, through his London agent, directed this seizure, and therefore of his being liable in trespass. The dictum of Lord Kenyon, therefore, in Sedley v. Sutherland (3 Esp. 202, and see Codrington v. Lloyd, 8 A. & E. 449), that the attorney must be proved to have gone beyond the line of his duty, is not to be considered as correct, for, in the principal case, the attorney was clearly acting within his duty to his client, &c. as he informed the sheriff where the defendant lived, and it was as slight an interference as possible. A mere indorsement of his name would not, indeed, make him liable (Sowell v. Campion, 6 A. & E. 407), for an execution levied out of the jurisdiction; but, on the other hand, an attorney indorsing his name upon a warrant of commitment, which turned out to be void, was held liable (Green v. Elgie, 5 Q.B. 99), because this seemed a taking an active part in the proceeding. It is to be remembered, the client is also answerable as well as the attorney (Persons v. Lloyd, 3 Wils. 341; Jermain v. Hooper, 1 D. & L. 769; 2 Law T. 293), for "he should have employed a more skilful attorney."

Liability to Sheriff's Officer.—There has been some doubt as to the liability of the attorney in the cause to remunerate the sheriff's officer employed in the execution of the writ, where the attorney has not specially appointed him as the officer for the occasion. (See per Bayley, J. in Foster v. Blakelock, 5 B. & C. 328, and Newton v. Chambers, 1 D. & L. 872). However convenient that the officer should not have a claim against the client, there seemed a difficulty in raising any implied contract, as he was, in fact, the servant of the sheriff. In Walbancke v. Masterman, 7 Law T. 184, the Court of Common Pleas, however, settled this question in the affirmative, upholding the ruling of Erle, J. that the attorney is personally liable to the sheriff's officer, just as much as to the officers of the court for their fees. (See Robins v. Bridge, 3 M. & W. 114).

BAILMENTS.

Safely and securely.—Ross v. Hill, 7 Law T. 112; 15 L.J. 182, C.P. although a decision as to the meaning of the words "safely and securely," used in pleading to describe the promise of the defendant, a cabman, in respect of the luggage conveyed in his cab, deserves notice, as it points out the nature of the evidence requisite to support a charge of negligence against a bailee. It was objected that there being no proof of an express promise, the law would not imply a promise of this nature; the objection would have been valid, had the words meant an absolute freedom from damage or loss; but as the Court decided that they meant merely due care according to the nature of the bailment, the objection was overruled. It is therefore sufficient to show the relation between the parties, and it will be for the jury to determine whether the facts amount to such negligence as, under the direction of the judge, would render the bailies liable, according to the various degrees of care required from bailies of different classes. E. W.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Francis Partridge, esq. to be Deputy Commissary of Police for the Island of Mauritius.

The Queen has also been pleased to nominate, constitute, and appoint the Right Hon. Sir James Robert George Graham, bart. to be one of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, in the room of the Right Hon. Sir George Grey, bart. resigned.

The Queen has also been pleased to nominate the Right Hon. Sir George Grey, bart. being one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, an Ecclesiastical Commissioner for England.

CROWN OFFICE, Sept. 14.—Members returned to serve in this present Parliament.—Borough of Derby, Edward Strutt, esq.

CEYLON.—JUDICIAL APPOINTMENTS.—The last Ceylon Gazette contains the following:—"His Excellency the Governor has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the public seal of the island, constituting and appointing the Hon. W. O. Carr to act provisionally as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, in the absence of the Hon. Sir A. Oliphant, bart. The Hon. J. Stark to act provisionally as senior puisne justice of the Supreme Court, in the room of the Hon. W. O. Carr, and the Hon. C. Temple to act provisionally as second puisne judge of the Supreme Court, in the room of the Hon. J. Stark. By his Excellency's command,

J. EMERSON TENNENT, Colonial Secretary.

COURT PAPERS.

COUNTY OF MIDDLESEX.—SHERIFFS' COURT, RED LION-SQUARE.—The following days are appointed for the execution of writs of trial and inquiry in Trinity Vacation:—Thursday, Sept. 17; Thursday, Oct. 1; Thursday, Oct. 15; and Thursday, Oct. 29. Cases intended for trial in either of the above sittings must be entered for trial three days before the particular sittings on which they are to be heard.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE CONSULAR SERVICE.—A document, presented to the House of Commons by command of her Majesty, in pursuance of their address of the 23rd July last, has been printed, containing a return, in a tabular form, of all the consuls-general, consuls, vice-consuls, and consular agents in her Majesty's service, with the amount of their salaries, the date of appointment, the place of residence, and the countries and districts to which they are appointed. The document extends to 14 folio pages, and contains a list of 215 consular officers, who with two exceptions are paid, and of two others paid by the East India Company. The list contains in addition 130 British vice-consuls who receive no salary from her Majesty's Government, and who are appointed by the superintending consuls. Various salaries are paid to consuls, from 25l. to 1,800l. a year. There are 14 consular officers in France; the highest salary in France is 650l. and the lowest 50l. There are 15 in Spain, and 9 in Portugal, and no fewer than 22 in Turkey, and 10 in the United States of America. There are 9 in China. The consul at Canton (Francis C. Macgregor, esq.) has a salary of 1,800l. 3 others have 500l. each, one 1,200l. three 750l. and another 500l. In Egypt there are five paid consular officers. The Consul-General at Egypt (the Hon. C. A. Murray) has a salary of 1,800l. The smallest salary (25l.) is paid to the Vice-Consul of Otranto, in the Two Sicilies. The consuls paid by the East India Company are Major Rawlinson, the consul at Bagdad, whose consulate is in Turkish Arabia, and Captain Hamerton, at Zanzibar, in Muscat. In the list of British vice-consuls appointed by the superintending consuls, 27 reside in France, 39 in Spain, 19 in Portugal, 34 in Italy, 13 in Greece, 14 in Turkey, and 10 in the United States of America.

CAUTION TO JURORS.—At an inquest held on Thursday by Mr. Carter, the coroner for Surrey, the Court was delayed for a considerable time by the absence of a gentleman who had been summoned on the inquest. The serving of the summons having been proved on oath, the coroner fined the absentee 40s. and said he would take care the money should be paid.

TORTOLA.—A suit for libel has been instituted by the Hon. R. V. Shaw, second Puisne Judge of this island, against the Hon. Dean Rogers, Chief Justice, and James Isidore Peter Lyach Dyett, M.D., stipendiary magistrate. Damages 5,000l.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.—A public meeting was lately held at the School-house, Denmark-street, Pentonville, to hear from the Rev. Edward Muscutt, M.A. an address on the subject of Ecclesiastical Courts, and the means to be adopted for their abolition. The rev. gentleman's observations were attentively listened to, and his recommendation to strive for the abolition of Ecclesiastical Courts was cordially welcomed by the meeting.

JURY LISTS.—On Sunday the lists of persons qualified to serve as jurors for the ensuing year, commencing the 1st instant, were posted on the doors of the different metropolitan churches, as required by the 6th of Geo. 4, c. 50; they will be kept open for inspection till the 21st instant. All objections will be heard by the justices in petty sessions, for the parishes in the county of Surrey, at Newington-green, the 25th instant; for Westminster, at the Broad Sanctuary, the 24th instant; and for the Holborn Union, at the Board-room of the Workhouse, Little Gray's-inn-lane, on the 29th instant.

SMALL DEBTS ACT.—The Marylebone vestry has lost no time in taking measures to have this Act applied forthwith to that important district, and the other extensive districts of the metropolis will follow the example in eagerly applying for the establishment of courts under the Act; an example which will be followed by every important district in the kingdom, where the absence of facilities for the recovery of small debts cheaply and expeditiously has hitherto operated so injuriously, particularly on persons engaged in trade.

OFFICIAL LOANS.—It having appeared upon the investigation of the case of an officer at one of the outposts, in the service of the revenue, who had been involved in pecuniary difficulties, that he had at various times borrowed money from an officer and clerk, and that those officers had exacted an exorbitant rate of interest for the same, the authorities have expressed their strong disapprobation of the conduct of the parties who had required usurious interest from a brother officer on the establishment, and have deemed it expedient to warn the whole of the officers and clerks throughout the service, that in the event of any similar case coming under their notice, they will take occasion to mark the offence severely.

PROCLAMATIONS OF OUTLAWRY.—Thursday being the County Court day, Mr. Hemp made the usual proclamations, and the following persons were declared outlaws:—William Mullingar Higgins, George Rutherford, William Cunningham Burton, J. R. Udney, the Rev. James Staughton Money Kyrie, Thomas Harries Wilson, J. L. Wellesley, John Twyden, Lady Frances Twyden, Richard Augustus Seymour, William Robert Gardner, Henry Lacey, Mary Anne Perryman, J. W. Gudge, Thomas Flower, George Hicks, Arthur Wellesley Walter, Samuel Bertie Ambrose, George Pitt Rose, Richard Samuel Montague Spray.

PROFESSIONAL PRIVILEGES.—By the Act of last session (9 & 10 Vict. c. 84) throwing open the Court of Common Pleas to barristers generally to be heard in Term time, they have the privilege of signing pleas and other matters, which before the alteration could only be done by the serjeants. The Act came into operation on the 18th of August, when it received the Royal assent, and "audience" will be given to the bar generally at the commencement of next Term.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE.—By an Act of last session (9 & 10 Vict. c. 24), an important alteration was made in the administration of criminal justice. Before the 26th of June, on which day the Act received the royal assent and came into operation, in certain cases of felony a Court was not empowered by law to award sentence of transportation for a less period than the term of the offender's life, or some long term of years, or sentence of imprisonment for any shorter term than two years; but by the first section it is provided, "that in all cases where the Court is now empowered or required to award a sentence of transportation exceeding seven years, it shall be lawful for such Court, at its discretion, to award a sentence of transportation for a term of not less than seven years, or to award such sentence of imprisonment for any period not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, as shall to the Court, in its discretion, appear just under all the circumstances."

PROPERTY LEFT IN PUBLIC VEHICLES.—Since the 22nd of May last, up to the 8th inst. 69 umbrellas, 63 parasols, 61 coats, 7 parcels, 3 pocket-books, 11 cloaks, 8 opera glasses, a prize oar, and 326 articles of different descriptions, have been left in cabs and hackney coaches.

PUBLIC DEPARTMENTS.—By a Parliamentary return it appears that there were 47 persons on the redundant list of the several public departments, at the commencement of the year 1845, of whom 7 died or became incapable of service during the year; that 13 were added to the list during the year, making 53 persons on the redundant list of the several public departments at the close of the year—consisting of 10 from the Paymaster-General's department; 3, Admiralty; 7, Ordnance; 7, Customs; 12, Excise; 3, Stamps and Taxes; 2, Woods and Forests; 7, Audit-office, 1, National Debt-office; and 1, Exchequer, Scotland.

The Augsburgh Gazette, of the 27th ult. announces that Prince Paskewitch has brought back with him the complete plan for doing away with the feudal services of various kinds to which the inhabitants of Poland are subject. It is supposed that this alleviation will be favourably received throughout the kingdom.

THE ROYAL COMMISSION to inquire into the laws of the Channel Islands, held its first sitting, according to the Jersey Herald, on Thursday last. The immediate object of the Commissioners was to ascertain the legal acquirements of the members of the Jersey bench and bar; and the Herald says that the inquiries were conducted with great courtesy and urbanity.

HACKNEY CARRIAGES.—The number of licenses for hackney carriages at present in use is 2,650, of which only 100 are employed for the old-fashioned hackney coaches, which are now and then to be seen on the stands, or lingering about the railway stations and steam wharfs. The remaining 2,550 are used for "working" cabs.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—What a miserable time is the long vacation passed by the unlucky wight who is obliged to spend it in London! Indeed, to him it is long, and that it is vacation, is expressed in the countenances of those friends who honour him with a vacant stare at seeing him still pacing his usual road to his place of business. All the chancellors are fled, except those chance-sellers the auctioneers. The Master of the Rolls has gone to enjoy the flowers of the country, except that master of the rolls, the baker, who is compelled to stay in town amidst flowers of another kind, earning his daily meat by making daily bread. The conveyancer, too, has settled the conveyance which shall waft him on the wings of the wind out of all drafts, and nobody is left in town but two or three unlucky solicitors' clerks, who, however solicitous to get away, find it impossible. Even most of these have said their last Amen, and have betaken themselves to Greenwich, Gravesend, or Heme Bay—the office-boy to the first place, the half-dead copying clerk to the second, and the senior clerk, who has earned more than the others, to the third. Now, Sir, could you or any of your correspondents suggest any way of passing the hours, besides either the labour, unfitted for the occasion, of trying to throw a light upon Coke, or polishing up Blackstone, or else sitting upon our high stools, cracking jokes and walnuts, you would be conferring the greatest benefit upon the profession, not at large, but those who are not able to get at large? It might be as well, when we are unable to go to the moors in the country, to shoot through that most prolific of moors—Shakespeare's Othello; and if we are destined not to bag partridges, pheasants, and hares, as something slightly savouring of the occupation, to study the Game Laws, or pore over Hare's Reports. But these suggestions do not please us; but your paper being the LAW TIMES, and of all law times the present being the most dull, we think it quite legal and right to lay the case before you for your opinion. The fee—our best thanks. We are, Sir, yours, &c.

[It is not often that the subjects we have to handle and supervise, are treated humorously; we, therefore, willingly, at this season, give place to this amusing and ingenious letter.—ED. LAW T.]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Abbey-square, Chester, 14th Sept. 1846.

SIR,—Reading a letter, published in your journal of the 12th inst. signed "A Solicitor," with a reference to me and my business, I consider it a duty incumbent upon me to reply to the calumniations therein contained, and, as a matter of course (for the reasons I will shortly state), I must request you to insert this.

Your correspondent has taken very great pains to explain who and what I am (but has omitted to subscribe his name), and has also made very many misstatements in his letter, some of which I hand to the public, it being my wish to court, and not avert, inquiry.

He says that I was a writing clerk in the office of the late Mr. Pate, and enters into other matters quite irrelevant to the subject-matter of his grievance. Now I beg to inform you that I was serving under articles to Mr. Pate at the time of his death, and that, not withstanding your correspondent's spiteful observation as to his (Mr. Pate's) dying worth very little money, that little will be sufficient to pay his just debts. This, however, is irrelevant, and a subject upon which I consider we need not dwell; neither should I have mentioned it but for your correspondent.

Through your correspondent omitting his name, and the facts recently come to my knowledge, I believe that he is not "A Solicitor," and, in fact, that he is no other than a clerk not yet out of his apprenticeship: indeed there can be little doubt but your correspondent, in subscribing himself "A Solicitor," had no business to do so; but having done so, and, as such, brought my name in question, I now beg, fearlessly, to state, that I shall continue to conduct my business on the principles I have hitherto done, without consulting your correspondent, or any one else, save the party who may employ me, in similar matters to the one in question,—matters, though, with which I have very little to do, being principally employed in proctorial matters, as for some years accustomed to.

As to your correspondent stating that Murphy called upon and demanded from me the 2l. in question, it is incorrect; he called upon me on his return from Manchester, and I told him that I had 2l. for him, and that the remaining 3l. (the balance theretofore agreed upon to be taken) would be paid on the following morning; and I most emphatically deny that I was ever asked for the money; the fact being that I absolutely pressed the man to receive the amount I had obtained, and to settle, of course, with me for my trouble, and to get rid of him and his pestering business, finding that he would not wait till the following morning for the remainder of his money.

There are many other mis-statements which I have not time to expose, neither will I trouble you with, but I leave the matter in your hands to do me justice by inserting this, and, if necessary, I can refer to many respectable proctors, solicitors, and others, who are well acquainted with me, and will testify as to my general correctness in matters of business.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

WILLIAM JEFFERSON.

P.S.—To shew that the publication of your correspondent's letter is calculated to injure me, I beg to inform you that I received a letter this morning (16th Sept.) from a highly respectable office in Wigan, relative to making some searches, and in a postscript I was referred to the letter in your journal which I now complain of.

W. J.

[In justice to Mr. Jefferson we give place to his letter, but he has not answered the material part of the charge, which was that of undertaking that which strictly is the duty only of an attorney.—ED. LAW. T.]

SMALL DEBTS ACT AND WRITS OF SUMMONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—As there appears to be considerable doubt in the minds of many of the Profession as to whether a writ of summons can now be issued to recover a debt under 20l. without running the risk of the plaintiff losing his costs, I beg leave to refer your readers to the 129th section of the Small Debts Act, by which it plainly appears that "after the passing of this Act" it is only where a "plaint might have been entered in any Court holden under this Act" that the plaintiff runs any such risk; and until there be a Court appointed to be holden under this Act, in which a plaint (instead of a writ) might have been entered or issued, there can be no question but that a writ in the superior courts will lie, and that the costs of the same may be recovered by the plaintiff.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

A LONDON SOLICITOR.

STATE OF THE PROFESSION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I cannot agree with your correspondent "Phulax," that the attorneys are the most supine, apathetic, selfish, discontented, and unworthy set of men, as a body, that ever existed. The attorneys are scattered throughout England, and, except in London, meet but little, if at all, in bodies. Even in the metropolis, they have no common focus or point of centralisation, and until within the last twenty years there have been few subjects calling for their attention as a body. It was then found to be a desideratum that the attorneys should have a local habitation and a name, and the Law Institution was supposed to have supplied what was wanted. Unhappily this association has utterly disappointed the expectations and hopes of the Profession. That it is no easy matter to form a fresh combination was proved by the failure last year to establish a more general institution under the presidency of Sir George Stephen. But unless a fresh association can be made, nothing will be done, as it cannot be expected that a few public-spirited individuals can take on themselves so heavy a task as is implied in watching over and protecting the interests of the Profession. Pray, Sir, urge upon us the necessity of combining together for general purposes. I should be most happy to subscribe for a testimonial to Mr. Wakley, but who will receive my subscription or act for others? I do hope that those gentlemen who stood forward at the last moment of the past session will call on the Profession at large to rally round and assist them. I will most cheerfully give my subscription and do all that a country attorney can do. No time should be lost—much is to be done, and as the Latin proverb has it, Dimidium qui bene capet habet.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

PERJURY IN WALES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Perhaps some of your readers will inform me, whether it is absolutely necessary on a trial for perjury to prove, in addition to the fact of the party administering the oath being properly qualified to administer such oath, that the prisoner was sworn upon the "Four Evangelists," or generally speaking, the "New Testament," as containing the "Evangelists." I mean absolutely necessary to secure a conviction. If so, no witness at the assizes or sessions in the county of Carmarthen, let him have perjured himself ever so dreadfully, need be alarmed at being detected; inasmuch as the book upon which all witnesses are sworn in this county is "The Book of Common Prayer," which does not contain the "Four Evangelists."

I can now easily account for the awful perjury committed throughout the principality, both at sessions and assizes. The witnesses appear to me to look upon an oath as a mere form, and in no wise blinding them to tell the truth. Probably they are aware of the circumstance before alluded to. I asked the question of a county magistrate, and he, without hesitation, stated the fact as I have given it, viz. that the Book of Common Prayer was invariably used at Carmarthen. The judges almost always complain of the extent to which perjury is committed in this and the neighbouring counties. I have heard them myself complain in Glamorganshire and Carmarthenshire.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

A Correspondent, who signs "Vindex," puts the following queries to his brother professionals:—

May I be permitted to avail myself of the suggestion thrown out in the LAW TIMES a few weeks ago, as to legal authors seeking for practical legal information through the medium of that journal?

I am preparing for publication a small work for office use; and as I shall have occasion to give in it the allowed, or customary, fees for ordinary conveying business, will you, or any of your readers, be kind enough to inform me where I can see the last settled table of conveying fees? Or, if no such table exists, to give me the usual fees for the following business?

Drawing conveyances, wills, &c.; copying draft for perusal by the attorney who prepares the original; fair copy of conveyances, wills, &c.; Perusing conveyances, &c. on behalf of a purchaser, &c.; Engrossing on parchment; examining engrossment; making attested copies; drawing abstracts; copying same; perusing same; comparing abstracts with deeds.

Is the fee 6s. 8d. strictly legal, when charged for instructions for an abstract?

[This is part of a complete list now being extracted for the LAW TIMES from the advertisements that have appeared in the newspapers during the present century. The reference, with the date and place of each advertisement, cannot be stated here without subjecting the paragraph to duty. But the figures refer to a corresponding entry in a book kept at the LAW TIMES OFFICE, where these particulars are preserved, and which will be communicated to any applicant. To prevent impertinent curiosity, a fee of half-a-crown for each inquiry must be paid to the publisher, or if by letter, postage stamps to that amount inclosed.]

To Readers and Correspondents.

We cannot insert, or notice in any way, any communication that is sent to us anonymously; but those who choose to address us in confidence will find their confidence respected. NEITHER CAN WE UNDERTAKE TO RETURN ANY MANUSCRIPTS WHATSOEVER.

J. W. C. (Devonport).—Thanks for the suggestion, and shall receive due consideration.

W. W. R. (Preston).—The utility of such announcements is obvious, therefore we will endeavour to find room for the notices.

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.—If anything could induce us to break through the necessary rule of declining to give opinions in cases involving law, we should do it in favour of our esteemed correspondent. We regret to deem compliance with the request preferred.

G. M. (Milton-street).—Were the letter less diffuse we should insert it for the sake of the subject; as it is, we cannot spare space does not permit of its admission.

T. C. (Uttens).—Probably in our next.

A SUBSCRIBER.—The reason why the cases alluded to are not given in the first vol. Real Property Cases, Vernon Society, is, most probably, because they were decided before those Reports were undertaken.

W. S. (Tottenham, Wolverhampton).—The Tithe Amendment Act is so long that we cannot give it in extenso. The subject-matter of each clause, however, will be found among the New Statutes in this number.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The volumes of the LAW TIMES, neatly, strongly, and uniformly bound, for 5s. 6d. each, with the name and address of the owner on the cover, 1s. extra, if sent to the office. If the numbers for binding be transmitted by the post, they must be tied in a parcel open at the ends, and contain some distinguishing mark by which it may be recognised, of which the publisher should be advised by letter and directed how he shall return the bound volume. Advantage may be taken of the same parcel to enclose other books for binding.

The numbers comprising the first volume of the VERULAM REPORTS of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases may also be transmitted for binding in like manner.

INDEX TO THE LAW.

The LAW DIGEST for the half-year ending Jan. 1 is now ready. It forms a complete Index to the Law decided during the half-year, and contains upwards of 2,000 cases. Price 5s. 6d. in a wrapper. Being stamped, it can be transmitted by post.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1846.

THE PROFESSION OF AN ATTORNEY.

WHILE deprecating the numerous invasions of the fair and reasonable emoluments of the Attorney which the Legislature has been so unsparingly making for some years past, especially while they are unaccompanied by a remission of the tax specially imposed upon him in consideration of those emoluments; and although we cannot but see in the Small Debts and the Short Conveyances Acts more serious inroads upon those profits than any before effected, still we cannot share the alarm expressed by some of our correspondents, who anticipate from them nothing less than the ruin of the Profession. We agree rather with our correspondent "LEX," whose letter in the LAW TIMES of the 29th ult. correctly indicates the source of the apathy with which the progress of the Small Debts Act was viewed by the Solicitors. The truth is, that the nature of their business has of late years experienced a great change. It may have been formerly that an Attorney was that which the name implies, and nothing more. His business was almost limited to the practice of the law—that is, to the conducting of suits for clients, with some occasional conveyancing. But with the vast changes that have occurred in society, from the increase of commerce and the consequent complications of property, the duties of an Attorney have changed also. That which originally formed the larger and most important portion of his business has come to be the least in value, and so little esteemed that every practitioner is desirous to emancipate himself as soon as possible from the practice of the common law, and dedicate himself wholly to the more profitable and agreeable work that comes under the title of the "general business" of his office. The successful Attorney's ambition is, that he may never again issue a writ. And he is right. The profit does not repay the time, the skill, and the anxiety expended upon the work. The Attorney who consults his interest rarely brings a cause into court; he knows well that his gain can be but trifling, while his toil will be great, and he incurs no small risk of losing his client into the bargain, for a defeated suitor is the most unreasonable being in the world, as doubtless many of our readers have experienced to their cost. Certainly this is much to be lamented. The conduct of suits has consequently fallen into the hands of an inferior class of practitioners, who are less scrupulous of resort to those irregular means of making up profits which others decline. It was mainly because it offered new and greatly increased encouragement to such a class of practitioners that our strongest objection to the Small Debts Act was founded.

If it were possible to make anything like a computation of the profits accruing to the Attorneys from that which is strictly their business as Attorneys, as well as of that proceeding from other sources, the latter would doubtless be found to exceed the former by fifty fold.

And it is a satisfaction to those who are just entering upon practice to reflect, that not only is this change in the character of the business of an Attorney certain to grow more and more amid the present rapid progress of society, and consequently that he will become continually more independent of the practice of the common law for his income, but it will carry with it an advantage which cannot be estimated too highly. With each succeeding year the Attorney will become less of an Attorney, and more of a general adviser. Dull and idle men will employ him to think for them, busy men to act for them. To do these duties well, he must enlarge the sphere of his education, and learn the business of life as well as the practice of the law. But they who have done this become the masters of those for whom they so think and act. They obtain an influence in society which ensures to them a position more so be coveted even than money. They must be honoured because their usefulness will be felt; and so far from anticipating, from any conceivable legislation, that the Profession will be lowered in its social position, we are satisfied that nothing but the most grievous neglect of its own interests can prevent it from taking a far higher place than it has yet held—a place accordant with the new and loftier duties which it will be required to fulfil in supplying the altered wants of society.

But to this end its education must be moulded, and that is a topic upon which we hope to take an early opportunity of directing the thoughts of our readers. It is too important to be dealt with now, and we expect to be aided by the report of Mr. Wyse's Committee on Legal Education, which will contain much valuable suggestion. Our present purpose is merely to remove the alarms which have been felt by many at the possible effects of recent measures upon the prosperity of the Profession, by reminding them of a fact not sufficiently borne in mind by those who treat of its state and prospects, namely, that an Attorney is now a very different personage from the mere lawyer who once bore that name; that in our generation the least part of the business of an Attorney is that which properly belongs to him as an Attorney; that while preserving the old name, he has become a different man, with duties altogether different; that he is, and henceforth will yearly be more and more, the general adviser—the second head and hands of his clients in the management of their affairs; that this change not only opens a new source of emolument, to which the other practice is insignificant, but inevitably raises him in the social scale, by commanding for him who performs those duties well and honourably the respect of those to whose wants he ministers faithfully.

These fair prospects, however, should not justify supineness when unjust attacks are threatened, nor lull the Profession to submit tamely to be taxed upon pretence that they enjoy peculiar profits, when in truth the legislature has so curtailed those profits, that but for these other and better resources they could not subsist. The Certificate Duty must not be suffered to continue through another Session.

APPOINTMENTS UNDER THE SMALL DEBTS ACT.

THE evil anticipated when, in a former article, we deprecated the delegation of authority to the Judges of the County Courts to appoint whom they might please to fill the offices in their courts, created by the Act, is already manifest. In the morning papers of this week appeared an advertisement, which we give—suppressing only the reference, that we may by no means further the wishes of a "Solicitor of long standing," who thus seeks to provide for his son:—

SMALL DEBTS ACT.—To BARRISTERS and Others.—A Solicitor of long standing is desirous of procuring for his son, who is admitted an attorney, and well qualified, the appointment of CLERK to one of the Judges under the Act.—If any person who can aid the advertiser in this object, will address to X. Y. a personal interview shall be appointed, if required, or any further information given.

Now this advertisement suggests, as plainly as such an intimation can decently be conveyed through a newspaper, that the "Solicitor of long standing" is open to treat with any Barrister who has strong chance of appointment to a judgeship of the county courts, or already holds that office, for the purchase of an appointment for his son. The inconveniences that are likely to arise from the sale of these offices are obviously such that in "the Amendment" which this Act will assuredly call for next session, there should be inserted a clause which shall remove from the judges of these courts a temptation such as they are now exposed to, and vest the power of appointment in some official whose position removes him altogether from the chance of contact with the parties whom he has benefitted.

SHAM LAWYERS.

ANOTHER of this fraternity, which, like the fabled Hydra of the mythology, seems to multiply with blows, is the following. We commend Mr. SPENCE to the care of the Profession at Leeds, who, if they are disposed to protect themselves and are vigilant, may no doubt soon find an opportunity to put down most of those who encroach upon their undoubted province.

Leeds, Sept. 2nd, 1846.

Mr. Robert Wood,
SIR,—I am instructed by Mr. Merryweather, to apply to you for the sum of One Pound Ten Shillings, and unless the same be paid to me before three o'clock to-morrow, I shall issue a county court summons against you without further notice.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

GEO. W. SPENCE.

P.S.—Apply for me either at No. 1, Upper Albion-street, or at Mr. I. R. Rhode's, latter, No. 3, Kirk-gate, Leeds.

THE LAW TIMES EDITION OF IMPORTANT STATUTES.

THE SMALL DEBTS ACT.

THE Edition of this Act, by Mr. PATERSON, containing an analysis of the clauses, observations, and a copious Index, has been retarded by an unavoidable circumstance, but is now printing, and will be ready on Monday. Orders therefore should at once be given.

A COURSE OF LECTURES ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS.

By PROFESSOR CAREY.

Delivered at the University College.

LECTURE XVIII.

As I mentioned in the last lecture, it is sometimes a question how far the ordinary liability of a bailee may be altered by an express agreement in the case of a deposit of goods; that if the bailee promises only to take care of the goods as his own, he is only bound to take ordinary care; but if he promises to keep them safely, then he would be answerable for any accident that may happen to them; and in Southgate's case, 4th Reports, 83, it is said "to keep" and "to keep safely" are the same thing. Keeping safely is making a man answerable for accident, and if the bailor would limit the responsibility he must do it expressly.

In modern times the dictum in that case has been much called in question. It is to a certain extent received in Kettle v. Browner, in Willes's Reports. That was an action for goods, where the plea stated the goods were to be "kept as his own," and to be shown for sale. The effect of the plea appears to be that the goods were not deposited for safe custody, but to be shown for sale; and if they had been deposited to be kept, it might have been gross negligence in the bailee to show them about; but as they were deposited for sale, such showing about was part of the purpose for which they were left. Sir Edward Coke seems to think there is no difference between an undertaking to keep and an undertaking to keep safely, and that in either case the bailee must be responsible if the goods are stolen, though without any negligence on his part. In Cogge v. Barnard this was denied to be law. If a bailee promises simply to keep the goods of another, and would not be answerable for such loss as might arise, it may be a question whether an undertaking to keep safely would not increase his liability. "In all these instances," says Blackstone, in speaking of Bailment, "there is a special property transferred from the bailor to the bailee together with the possession. It is not an absolute property because of his contract for restitution; and the bailor hath nothing left in him but the right to a chose in action, grounded upon such contract, the possession being delivered to the bailee. And on account of this qualified property of the bailee, he may (as well as the bailor) maintain an action against such as injure or take away these chattels." (2 Bl. 452.)

With respect to the expressions here used, some observations may be made. The bailor's right is not a right to the chose in action. It seems to follow from Blackstone's definition, the chose in action not being in possession, that when goods are put in the possession of another person, they are, as far as the simple goods are concerned, things in action; that is, however, not the case, from which you may infer that Blackstone's definition is not a correct one. If you deposit goods with another person, he may sell those goods, and the selling is not a sale of the thing in action; the bailor's right is not that of a chose in action. Again, the right to receive them back is not founded upon a contract; they are his own goods, and he is entitled to possession of them. Jones on Bailments, 80: "Every bailee has a qualified property in the thing delivered to him, and has therefore a possessory action against a stranger who may damage or peril them." This is not a correct expression, unless by "possessory action" is meant an action founded on the right of property—an action to maintain possession. But the rule is, I apprehend, in substance, that the bailee has a qualified property in the things delivered to him; he has a right analogous to the right of ownership, subject only to the superior claim of the actual owner. There is no right of property attached to the bailee as against the bailor; the bailee may exercise the simple rights of ownership against a stranger. I borrow a horse of A B; as between me and the bailor, the horse is mine: I may ride the horse for a time, but am bound to restore him; but as against other persons my right is not distinguishable from that of the owner. If any one injure the horse I may bring an action against him; if any one turns the horse into a field, or if the fences are bad and he is lost, I may recover the value of the horse. If the horse gets into the possession of another person, who refuses to restore him to me, I may bring an action of trover. I am answerable to the lender for any damage that happens to the horse, and against a wrong doer I have the same remedy as if I had been the actual owner. This is deemed special property. It is said in a very old report, as old as the Year Book the 21 Hy. 7th, that a bailee has a property in the thing bailed against a stranger, for he is chargeable to the bailor, and, therefore, reason is that he shall recover against the stranger who takes the goods out of his possession. This doctrine appears to be disputed by Storey, but it is supported by most of the authorities which he himself adduces. His ground for disputing the doctrine appears to me to be a want of a precise view of what is meant by the use of the terms "special property." The question, as he states it, is, who is to be deemed the owner or proprietor of the thing during the period of the loan? or, in other words, he raises the question whether the borrower has a special property in it or only a naked possession? This seems to imply that by "special property" is meant some sort of ownership and right of property, valid as against the real owner. The question raised is, is there a special property or only a naked possession? The answer to that appears to be this; he has both—he has a special property as against strangers; as against the owner he has only a naked possession. The special ownership of the bailee is a fiction in no degree diminishing the original ownership of the bailor. So in the case I have put of a horse lent to me, and injury done to it, I may treat the horse as my own against a wrong doer, and bring an action to recover damages; still, if the original owner chooses to take the trouble on himself, he may bring an action; my possession under his right of property is deemed his possession. Trover will lie upon the special property, as in the case of a carrier (1 Lord Raymond, 275); and if a bond is transferred by an obligee to a third person, that is a third person who has an interest in it, that third person may maintain trover, and allege the bond to be his. In 2 Wms. Sanders, it is stated if a man uses the cattle of J. S. to plough his land, and a stranger takes them away, J. S. may maintain trover or trespass against him; trespass for the goods which were in his possession, or trover to recover the goods which he claims as his property. So if goods are sent to a shopkeeper on sale or return, in that case the property is still in the person who sends the goods, but the shopkeeper has a special property which, coupled with the possession, will enable him to bring trespass in his own name against any one who takes them away. (Colwill v. Reeves, Campbl. 575.) So in the case of Rooth v. Wilson, where a horse died from the insufficiency of the fences. There the original owner, whose the horse actually was, might also have brought an action; the person who caused the loss made himself liable to an action, both by the bailor and the bailee; but if judgment was obtained against him by one, that would be a bar to an action by the other; and when it is said either the one or the other may bring an action, it is to be understood the original owner must have a right of immediate possession, or he cannot maintain trover or trespass. (Ward v. Mallinder, 5 T. R. 489.) It must be understood that the party who is the bailee does not part with the rights of ownership as to the enjoyment of the things bailed. The mode in which they are to be treated depends upon the purpose for which they are bailed. It only extends to give the bailee against wrong doers the same remedy which he would have if he had been the right owner: he cannot sell or pledge them. In Hops v. Hoare, 3 Atk. 44, jewels were deposited in a sailing packet, and one S. brought home the packet, and pawned the jewels. Hope brought an action of trover against Hoare to recover; the bailee was said to have only a custody and no property, that is to say, he had no such property as to convey a title to another. The jewels had been sold to Hoare, who had paid for them; they were nevertheless still adjudged to be the property of the original owner, because the person of whom he had taken them had no right to sell them.

We have seen that if a bailee, for a particular purpose, without authority, pledges the goods of the bailor, or if he sells them, the bailee has still a property in them, and he may claim them of the person in whose possession they are; except in market overt, or where the owner had proved the bailee to deceive the stranger by appearing in the character of owner. The answer to the argument sometimes raised as to release of ownership, is, that he who advances the money ought to take care to protect himself against the frauds of the person to whom he advances. If persons will advance their money to those who ask for it, without exercising a little caution, they must take the consequences of their own indiscretion. That was the view of the common law of England. A very different opinion is expressed by Best, C.J. not very long afterwards, in Williams v. Barton, 3 Bing. 139: "Had I authority to alter the law, as the mode of carrying on commerce has altered, I would say that, when the owner of property conceals himself, whoever can prove a good title under the person whom the concealed owner permits to hold it, should retain the property against the owner. But this is not yet the law of England. Possession is not proof of property. Our ancestors kept their goods in their own possession. If agents were employed by them to deal with their property, they did not keep themselves out of view, and the extent of the authority of the agent was so well known, that no one dealing with those agents could be imposed upon; but, as little credit was given, and as men could not trade beyond their capital, they were seldom reduced to the necessity of pledging their stock in trade; the sales of merchandise were made in market overt, and if the buyers conducted themselves honestly, the law protected them from suffering by purchasing in market overt property that did not belong to the person of whom they bought. This exception in our law proves, that if a person acquire the possession of property in any mode other than that of sale in market overt, he cannot keep it against the owner; it proves at the same time that, as commerce is now carried on, the purchaser or pawnee should have the same protection against him who permits another to deal with his property as if it were his own."

The law with respect to sale in market overt affords little protection to those engaged in commerce. As the law stands, if the pawnor of goods have no authority to make the pledge, the pawnee cannot hold them against the owner. This doctrine of our law has important reference to mercantile transactions. In the year 1823 an Act was obtained for the benefit of persons dealing with factors. The provisions of this Act are incorporated in the Act 6 Geo. 4, c. 94, and these provisions have been further extended by the recent Act 5 & 6 Vict. 39. One of the great objects of the statute 5 & 6 Vict. was to extend the same protection to persons who had advanced money on goods.

These are all the observations I have to make with respect to bailment in general. There are two kinds of bailees who are distinguished from other bailees by the extent of liability which they are under by the common law. The one is an Innkeeper. An Inn is a house where a traveller is furnished every thing he has occasion for while on his way. (Thompson v. Lacey, 3 B. & Ald. 283). In this case Best, C. J. said, "An inn is a house, the owner of which holds out that he will receive all travellers and sojourners who are willing to pay a price adequate to the sort of accommodation provided, and who come in a situation in which they are fit to be received." Under these reasonable limitations it is the duty of an innkeeper to take in any guest; if he refuses he is liable to an action, an action on the case for the breach of his duty, an action of assumpsit for the breach of the promise that is implied in the existence of the duty: or it may be indicted. The principle upon which the liability rests is, that he is a person who undertakes to exercise a public employment, to which are attached certain rights and certain liabilities. The guest has the protection of the law for the security of his goods if they are lost or stolen, or for the security of money which he has in the house (Cayle's case, 8 Coke, 32; and Kent v. Shuckard 2 B. & Ad. 803). The landlord is primæ facie liable for any loss, not occasioned by the act of God, or of the King's enemies, though he may be exonerated where the guest chose to have the goods under his own care. In the case of Kent v. Shuckard the guest had package taken to the travellers' room and it was he. The goods were usually put in the guest's bed-room and it was urged that the traveller, by having a package put in the travellers' room instead of a bed-room, took it under his own protection, and made himself responsible; it was, however, held that the landlord was responsible. If it had been intended by the landlord not to be responsible so long as the guest chose to have the goods placed in his bed-room or some other place selected by him, he should have said so; by something in the nature of the contract, he should have limited his responsibility. If the guest is not a mere traveller or sojourner, but leaves property for a purpose foreign to the ordinary purposes of the inn, in this case the duty of the innkeeper does not arise. Thus, when a landlord had granted to a guest a private room for the purpose of exhibiting his goods for sale, he told him there was a key and he might lock the door, but he did not, and some of the property was lost. The judge told the jury that though prima facie the innkeeper was responsible, yet the guest himself, by his own misconduct, discharged him from that responsibility, and the Court refused a new trial. (Burgess v. Clements, 4 M. & S. 304.) This responsibility is not confined to things intra ædificium. If a guest delivers his horse to the landlord, or the ostler, and requires him to put the horse to pasture, and that is done accordingly, and the horse is stolen, the innkeeper is not answerable for the loss. If it had been put in the stable which was under the innkeeper's authority, then he would be answerable like any other bailee. A guest travelling to an inn on the day of a fair, the landlord took in the horse; he put the guest into a room in the house, and placed the gig in the open street when the gigs of the other guests were placed one above another; the gig was stolen; was the innkeeper liable? It was argued that the street was no part of the inn, and if the landlord was liable for the loss occurring there, he might be liable, if the guest had had his pocket picked, on which it was held he continued liable for its safe custody. If the landlord chooses to use the street as his yard, he must himself be answerable for the loss. In Cayle's case, it was said, if the guest send his horse to grass, the landlord is not answerable; but the case goes on to say, if the owner does not require it, and if the Innholder, of his own head, puts the guest's horse to grass, he shall be answerable, if it be stolen. That is on the same principle as his being liable for the loss of the gig in the street. If the goods are lost by the default or neglect of the guest, he must bear the loss. That is admitted in Burgess v. Clements. The liability of the landlord extends to the goods brought into the inn. If a man goes into an inn, and is treated there as a guest, the innkeeper is bound to take care of the goods of the guest, without their being specially entrusted to his charge. (Barnett v. Miller, 5 T. R. 273). In that case the guest came to the inn, and asked leave to have the goods left for a week; that leave was refused to be given by the landlord. The guest set down at the Inn as a guest, with the goods, but left them, and during the time he was away, the goods were taken away; it was held the landlord was liable. As long as the guest and the goods were there, the landlord was bound to take care of them; his having refused to take the care of them for a week did not affect it one way or the other.

The benefit conferred by the law upon the innkeeper is, that he is allowed to retain the goods of the guest to insure the payment of his demand. The guest cannot recover possession of the goods, without paying the amount of the landlord's lien. (Thompson v. Lacey, 3 B. & Ald. 283). There is an older case in which it is said that an innkeeper has a right also to detain the person of his guest as a security for payment, but that case has been overruled.

Analogous to the rights and liabilities of an innkeeper are those of a common carrier. A common carrier is a person who undertakes to transport from place to place the goods of such persons as think fit to employ him. As his is a public employment, he is bound to accept the goods, unless there be some reasonable excuse. If he carries his fare, then like the innkeeper he has a lien on the goods for the price of the carriage; and like the innkeeper he has a common law responsibility for injury except such as is occasioned by the act of God or the King's enemies. This was the position in which they stood at common law. A carrier is not released from responsibility by giving notice that he will not be answerable for the amount of the specified value, unless he were informed of the real value, and paid a larger sum by way of insurance. This notice, if it was proved to have been communicated to the person who sent the goods, was a protection to the carrier, otherwise not. (Mayhew v. Emans, 3 B. & C. 601; Kerr v. Willan, 6 M. & S. 150.) That is to say, supposing a carrier to prove that the notice he had given was known to the person who sent the goods, he was then not answerable for the safe carriage, at all events unless their value was declared, and the larger sum paid. Still he was liable in some cases. He was liable if he did any thing contrary to his duty; if he was guilty of actual misfeasance. If he had taken a valuable glass and dashed it against the ground, his misconduct would not have been protected, and it also appears probable, from the majority of cases, that in case of gross negligence he would have been answerable. He would be protected from the effects of ordinary negligence, but if he be guilty of gross negligence or actual misfeasance, in those cases he would be still liable. (Riley v. Horne, 5 Bing. 217.)

Now it is said by Best, C.J. that at common law carriers are responsible for the value of the goods they undertake to carry, but they limit the responsibility by making a special contract, by giving public notice that they are not accountable for parcels of a certain description. In order to shew that they are not subject to the common law liability, they must prove that the party sending the goods had knowledge of the notice; when goods are sent to a carrier, they are no longer under the eye of the owner, who seldom follows them, or sends any servant with them to their place of destination. If a loss occurred, the owner would be unable to prove the loss; his witnesses must be the carrier's servants; and they, knowing that they could not be contradicted, would excuse their master. An ordinary bailee, for instance a carrier, not being a common carrier, is answerable for reasonable diligence. A common carrier is more than that; he is answerable for all accidents at common law. In the one case there is a contract and liability to take reasonable care; in the other there is another liability, which is in the nature of an insurance, not only that he will undertake to carry the things carefully, but that he will answer for their being carried carefully; that is the common law liability of the carrier. As the common law makes the carrier an insurer of the goods he carries against accidents, he is as much entitled to be paid a premium for insurance, and their delivery at their destination, as for the labour and expense of carrying them; for, besides the risk he runs, his attention is more anxious, and the journey more expensive in proportion to the value of the load. A carrier has a right to know the value and quality of what is committed to his care; if the owner will not tell him what they are, and what they are worth, the carrier may refuse to take charge of them. If he waives the right to know their contents and value, it is the interest of the owner of the goods to give a true account of the value of the goods, but he cannot recover more than their real worth, whatever value he may have put on them. Nay, it has been said that if he answers improperly so as to deceive the carrier, there is no contract between the parties: it is a fraud which renders the contract altogether invalid, so that he has no claim for recovery at all. There are some cases on this subject which are stated in Waller v. Jackson, 10 M. & W. 161. On the other hand it is the carrier's business to make inquiries, and if the carrier neglects to make any inquiries of the owner as to the value of the goods, or to make a special agreement that he will not undertake to ensure the safety of the goods unless the owner pay an insurance, and cannot prove a notice limiting his responsibility, he is responsible for the full value of the goods, however great that may be. This is a convenient rule that imposes no difficulty on the carrier; he knows his own business and the law relating to it. He must make a particular and special bargain, or a general notice, and prove the owner had knowledge of it. Although he may have limited his responsibility by a sufficient notice, yet if the loss is occasioned by gross negligence on his part, the notice will not protect him. Every man who undertakes to do a service obliges himself to use due diligence in the performance of that service, namely, the responsibility of an insurer. A carrier is liable for gross negligence: what is the amount of gross negligence is a question for the jury. These points establish that a carrier is the insurer of the goods he carries; that he is obliged for that reason to take all reasonable care of the goods that are committed to his care; that he is required to inform himself of the contents and value of the parcels he carries, and if he is not informed by the owner and does not ask for this information, but takes the goods, he is answerable for the value whatever it may be, but he may limit this responsibility by notice that he will not be answerable for any accident not occasioned by gross negligence. (Bodenham v. Bennet, 4 Price, 31; Wyld v. Pickford, 8 M. & W. 443.)

By the statutes 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Wm. 4, introduced for the protection of carriers by land, no common carrier is answerable for loss or injury to gold, silver, jewellery, silks, and a variety of articles chiefly of small bulk, but of great value, above 10l. unless at the time of delivery the nature of the articles delivered be declared, and an increased charge made, or an engagement to pay the same, is accepted by the person receiving the parcel. Carriers may charge all such parcels at an increased rate above the fixed duties specified by the Act. On other goods not enumerated in the Act carriers are not protected from being answerable for loss occasioned by the acts of their servants, nor are their servants protected from being answerable for their own neglect or misconduct. Supposing a carrier to be guilty of wilful misfeasance, and were to be indicted, the statute would be no protection to him. Suppose the case of gold or silver, or any of the enumerated articles, being sent to a carrier, and no declaration made of its value, and no insurance paid, in that case the carrier is protected by the Act. It was at one time considered that the statute was a protection only against the effects of ordinary negligence; that, if the carrier was guilty of more than ordinary negligence, he might be held liable. The Court of Queen's Bench, however, have held, partly from acknowledging no difference between negligence and gross negligence, and taking the same view of negligence and gross negligence as the Court of Exchequer in a case that came recently before our notice, and also from a consideration of the objects and the language of the statute, that, where the act has not been criminal, no negligence, whether simple or gross, will make the carrier liable for the goods. (Hinton v. Dibdin, 2 Q. B. Rep. 646.)

In the two cases that I have here considered—that of an innkeeper and a carrier—there is a greater liability than in the case of any other bailee, that liability being in the nature of an insurance. A landlord might, by a special agreement or notice, diminish his liability. In point of fact that is not done, because circumstances do not require it, but with respect to a carrier by land it has been done. The effect of it was in itself doubtful, but the Legislature have passed an Act which seems to have put it upon a clear and intelligible basis, which is, that if people do not choose to declare the value of their goods, they will have no claim against the carrier of them unless for actual misfeasance, and no amount of negligence will make him answerable.

OF LEGISLATORS, MAGISTRATES, AND LAWYERS.

SIR JOHN WILLIAMS.

THE subject of this notice was at his country residence, Livermore-park, near Bury, in Suffolk, enjoying that needful relaxation which this period of the year usually places at the disposal of the over-wrought lawyer, where his earthly career was unhappily brought to a close. The age of Sir John Williams was not much short of 70 years, but those who knew him considered that his state of general health was sufficiently good to warrant the hope that he might be destined to enjoy as long a life as ordinarily falls to the lot of a successful lawyer. The learned personage just deceased had been for the last twelve years one of the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench; and if he did not display in that distinguished position talents and attainments of the very highest order, he at least brought to the discharge of its onerous and important duties great integrity, a sincere and earnest desire to administer justice in exact conformity with the existing state of the law and the acknowledged principles of British jurisprudence. The subject of this memoir reached the dignified station which he occupied at the time of his death without much aid from that species of connexion which in the present day is deemed almost essential to forensic success; for he began life at the bar with scarcely any means of procuring clients beyond that which a distinguished university reputation may be supposed to confer. Sir John Williams was a native of Banbury in Cheshire; his family, however, were settled in Merionethshire, and Sir John was always very careful to have it understood that he belonged to the principality. His father was rector of a parish in Merionethshire, but he was also vicar of Banbury, and was residing there when his son John was born. At the well-known grammar school of Manchester, Sir John Williams received the early part of his education, and he proceeded thence to Trinity College, Cambridge, eminently qualified by the instruction and discipline of his boyhood to avail himself of the advantages and acquire the honours which a university presents to men of diligence and ability. He went to Cambridge in the year 1794, and obtained a scholarship the first time that he sat. Mr. Williams took his bachelor's degree in 1798, and during his undergraduate course obtained several prizes; but the chief object of his youthful ambition—that to which he attached much more importance than to any advancement in after life—was a fellowship. In hoping for that distinction he was not destined to encounter disappointment; and it is rather a remarkable proof of his peculiar opinions upon this subject, that he has sometimes been heard to say, he considered the honour of a fellowship, obtained in the face of that competition against which he contended, as an acquisition superior even to the dignity of the emine. Mr. Williams, in getting his fellowship, very modestly acknowledged that he achieved success over a competitor superior to himself in general scholarship. That gentleman was obliged to struggle through life as he best might on the scanty pittance which a poor clergyman receives, while a more favourable fate awaited Mr. Williams; but to his infinite honour be it recorded, that when professional success and considerable opulence rewarded his labours, he generously remembered his college rival; and considering him hardly used by fortune, allowed him an annuity in aid of the scanty income which that learned and estimable person derived from a small church living. It is understood that the annuity has been continued to his widow.

Long after Mr. Williams quitted college, he devoted his time occasionally to classical studies, as the pages of the Edinburgh Review amply testify, for they contain articles written by him on the orations of Demosthenes and on several Greek plays. Even still later in life his classical attainments attracted attention; and Lord Tenterden, a high authority on such subjects, as well as upon the laws of the land, pronounced Mr. Williams to be the best scholar throughout the whole profession.

Sir John Williams was called to the bar in the year 1804, and although he did not rise to the highest rank of the profession, he still obtained a very respectable amount of business. Mr. Williams chose the northern as his circuit, and the Liberal party as his political friends. Both were bold steps; for the magnitude of the circuit rendered success more problematical in that quarter than in any other, while certainly no prudent man could in the early part of the present century see a prospect of silk gowns, or ermine robes, by connecting himself with Whigs, Liberals, and other adversaries of the church, the state, and Lord Chancellor Eldon. Slowly, but securely, did Mr. Williams advance in the arduous profession of the law; accident never seemed to have procured for him a client, and accident never deprived him of one. It could not be said that he enjoyed a first-rate business; but he scarcely ever lost a client, and though a man of ardent temperament, his discretion in the conduct of a cause was pre-eminent. In proof of this, it may be stated that the late Sir John Bayley has been heard more than once to declare that if he were to be tried for his life he should desire to be defended by Mr. Williams. Even the present generation need scarcely be reminded that the proceedings against Queen Caroline formed by far the most important occasion upon which any lawyer has been employed during the present century. The Attorney-General of that Princess became Lord Chancellor, her Solicitor-General, Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, two of her counsel, successively, Chief Justices of the Common Pleas, and a fourth one of the judges of the Ecclesiastical Courts. Amongst those eminent men Mr. Williams took a conspicuous part as one of her Majesty's advocates; and the almost unrivalled powers of cross-examination which he displayed upon that memorable occasion fully realized the expectations of his friends. His skill as a cross-examiner was generally acknowledged by the Profession, but it was not until after he had exercised that astonishing power upon the notorious Theodore Majoeci that the public at large became aware of his matchless talents in that branch of an advocate's duty. Soon after "the Queen's trial," as it was called, his clients became more numerous, and his name considerably more public. An opportunity for getting into Parliament presented itself in the year 1822, when he stood upon the Liberal interest for the city of Lincoln, and was returned. The most remarkable use which he made of his powers and privileges as a member of Parliament was to co-operate with Mr. Michael Angelo Taylor in denouncing the abuses of the Court of Chancery; but it must be admitted that the share which he took in the deliberations of the House of Commons, did not very greatly add to the reputation which he had previously acquired; but upon the whole, he made rather a favourable impression on the House, and he certainly assisted in laying the foundation, or at least preparing the way, for several of the improvements which, since that time, have been effected in the Court of Chancery. A change of the ministry at length procured for him that professional position to which he had for some years been fairly entitled. He received a silk gown, and soon after the accession of William IV. her Majesty, now Queen Dowager, appointed him her Attorney-General. In February, 1834, he became one of the Barons of the Exchequer, and having sat in that court only one Term, was transferred to the Court of King's Bench, where he remained until the period of his lamented death. It is well known that Sir John Williams appeared to considerable advantage as a judge in criminal cases; and that he laboured unceasingly in every case that came before him, to reconcile his strong sense of justice with, perhaps, his still stronger feelings of mercy. Although Sir John Williams had been for some weeks past indisposed, he was not thought to be in any imminent danger, and he had, we understand, been considered by his physicians as labouring under some affection of the liver. On Monday last, however, he complained of increased pain in the chest, and to the great regret of that very numerous circle of society who could appreciate his many estimable qualities, his valuable life was on that day brought to a close.—Times.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

A PRACTICAL COMMENTARY

ON

THE LAW OF CONTRACTS RELATING TO REAL PROPERTY.

By WILLIAM HUGHES, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

Operation and effect of the statute.—The object of the statute of 27 Hen. 8, c. 10, undoubtedly was to annihilate uses altogether; but so far from attaining this end, it became the means of introducing a new mode of conveyancing admirably adapted to the exigencies of mankind. Hence the judges began very soon to depart from the rigour and simplicity of the common law, and to allow a
